And bear gifts and burdens in merciful hands.

I love to come down where I'm driven to pray,
"O God, give me bread for this cold, chilly day!"
To feel what I need and expect a supply,
I want to do good in the world till I die.

The Master will come with his servants to count,
He'll pay every steward his honest amount;
I'll work with all might, that my balance may be,—
"Well done, faithful servant,—come reign now with me!"

Backsliding.

In almost every era of the church, her growth has been retarded and her grace marred by this parasite. In the early ages this painful, appalling spectacle was but too frequently and lamentably manifested. Numbered with the twelve apostles was a Judas who betrayed his Lord. Demas, "having loved this present world," forsook Paul; and among those to whom he preached the words of an endless life, were foolish Galatians, and apostate Corinthians. But while the church may mourn that such go out from her, may she not rejoice that they were not of her consecrated number, and that "the Lord knows them that are His."

Relaxing his grasp upon the standard of faith and works, step by step, the backslider passes down the delusive plain, acting under a law of subversive progression, until he at length finds himself bound and captivated by the Adversary of all goodness. Perhaps, at times, he desires to return to his lost position; but his intention being too often indecisive and future, the bonds of his captivity become more and more unyielding, and he is found less able to extricate himself to-day than yesterday, and will be less able to-morrow than to-day; thus, wholly impotent in himself, nothing but the power of God can effect his rescue.

Thus, if we remit our fervency in regard to even one known and positive duty, we become thereby more and more susceptible of omission, till we stumble upon the dark mountains, become engrossed with the cares and pleasures that belong wholly to the domain of earth, and forfeit our allegiance to the sovereign Redeemer. Such appears to have been the state of the Laodicean church, and such, we have too great reason to believe, is the state of the church in many places at the present time; occupying a kind of neutral ground, not wholly denying the form of religion, nor pressing on to the promised glories of immortal life. How deplorable the condition of such as have a name to live, while they are already dead to real piety. As fatal as the samiel of the desert, is the influence of such to the vitality of pure religion. Like stumbling-blocks in the King's highway, they seem to defeat the prosperity of Zion. Around the family hearth-stone of such, no voice of prayer is heard; and their food is eaten unblessed. No consecrated closet witnesses the effusions of hearts broken and contrite, ascending like acceptable incense before the throne of Him that seeth in secret.

Is it thus, that we are to wait and desire the appearing of our soon-coming Lord?

A Cheering Thought.

In these days of rebellion and war, when nations and governments are being shaken, it is cheering to think that soon there will be set up a Kingdom which cannot be shaken, a Government against which there will be no rebellion. The African will be there, but not to be enslaved and trampled in the dust. No, blessed be God! oppression can never enter that fair land; "wars and rumors of wars" will no more be heard, for then "the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Amen. Lord, hasten the day. Geo. W. Lewis.

☞ Mr. Rogers, a Puritan divine, was styled the Enoch of his day. Bishop Kennet said of him, that England hardly ever brought forth a man who walked so closely with God. He was always remarkable for gravity and seriousness in company. Being once addressed by a gentleman of rank, "Mr. Rogers, I like you and your company well enough, but you are too precise!" "O, sir," replied Mr. Rogers, "I serve a precise God!"

"Ministerial Rascality."

I want a new subscriber for the Crisis. One man has stopped his paper because of my article on "Ministerial Rascality." Now I don't want the paper to go down, and I wish some one would get another paying subscriber in the place of the disaffected one. It appears that shot took effect. One man from the west wrote me approving it. I hear of another man, who has been charged with visiting his jug oftener than his closet, grumbling about his "character" being attacked. Another one has commenced a law suit against a man who brought him up to the mark, and bases his action upon a confidential letter which he came by, either dishonestly or dishonorably. He expects heavy damages no doubt. I hope he may have a good time.

Well, gentlemen, go ahead! show yourselves! We want to set the battle in array. We are not fighting men, but we are not disposed to be bullied or bluffed by a set of ungodly miscreants, who make their religion only a cloak for their many deviltries. God's cause and truth bleed, at pocket and at heart, because of the ungodliness of mere plunderers, who can "gab," but have no moral principle. Men who get in debt, cheat their creditors, drink rum, and commit debaucheries—who wax fat with good living at others' tables, and with laziness that keeps them from working to earn their own bread.

One man wrote me from away on the banks of the Mississippi, after reading my discourse on the "Qualifications for the christian service," calling for a preacher—such a man as I had described, especially in the second particular, i. e., a man who was HONEST!! I know some such men, thank God, but they are needed all around, and cannot be spared as I see. Pray God to send out more of them, and men too who will do something for God and truth, rather than dispute, snarl, grumble and find fault, and peddle more perverse questions and disputings than a busy man has time to think of, or talk about. I heard of one such who was boasting that he had "tripped up" H. L. H. in an argument. This might be; it isn't very hard, I presume, though it was done so gently that I did not know when, where, or how it was accomplished. The worst tripping up I have from such men is some $500 worth of books scattered about, a score of which they have bought and never paid for, and probably never will. That "trips me up," lays me flat on my back, and sends me out to borrow money to pay my own bills, and keep square and honest with the world and before God.

One word more. Churches must put their hand on rascals among them, whether in the ministry or elsewhere. If private interviews do not answer to convert him from his faults, "tell it to the church." Don't send a rascal off to impose on others in distant regions, and so fleece the flock of God. Beware of "conference white-washings," and if you exclude a man for good and sufficient causes, then if any conference countenances him, or if any newspaper knowingly gives him currency after good and sufficient notice, let them bear the responsibility. Take care also who you ordain, and who you approve. "Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker's of other men's sins. Keep thyself pure." May God keep us pure.

For the Crisis.

Is it So?

Says the prophet: "Prepare to meet thy God." Amos 4: 12. Circumstances surround men's lives with obligations not to be ignored with impunity. The very nature of his destiny clothes him with responsibilities that must be met. It is true he may become inured to procrastination and inordinate lusts; but no natural propensity of the heart may assume the prerogative of nullifying a well demonstrated fact. Death may become a by-word to some men's ears and hearts by constant repetition, and a stolid indifference the result of another observed truth; yet the declaration of God, "Thou shalt surely die," is just as much believed as though the thunders of Jupiter echoed it in the ear with unceasing terror.

From this fact alone, as it presents itself a stepping-stone towards an unknown future, there is a great, noble incentive for man to progress in moral and religious excellence; but as a question of revealed destiny, is the forth-coming event less worthy of a fitting reception? It is recorded by the apostle of Jesus Christ, that by a personal manifestation of himself he "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Now whether men's lives are proverbial for merit or de-merit, is no part of the argument; but as a gospel dispensation, is it not rather an unmerited grace, hitherto withheld by the absence of a redemption, but now made an attainable boon by the advent, death and resurrection of the Son of God? If this concession is granted, where, I ask, is the present prevailing immortality of the patriarchs and martyrs for God? What! immortality without a resurrection from the dead? I desire this point met. 1 Cor. 15: 16, 18. "For if the dead rise not, then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Why should a race of already condemned culprits desire to abrogate a law enacted by God for the salvation of a lost world? Their hope is an unceasing struggle to attain their individual perfection. Why not arrive at it on the specified terms of the gospel? The plan is broad enough, but, as already granted, based on the work of Christ. It is philosophical, inasmuch as the requisition it makes is in the closest congruity with the plan itself. God has never in his history of dealings among men thrust upon them an unconditional destiny; but, upon the hypothesis that God is unchangeable, precaution has been a fostered attribute duly exercised in his moral government. Ezk. 18: 32, "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth; wherefore turn and live ye, saith the Lord God." Such an announcement evolves the whole scheme in the light of an universal privilege. And Christ, John 5: 40, "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life,"—manifestly preferring the courts of sin and its wages, death, than the gratuitous gift attainable by simple obedience. Is any one with a smattering of theology prepared to successfully demonstrate the eternity of evil from the passages in question? If so, let them ask themselves: Do I believe? Am I willing to accede to the authenticity of the gospel? And, finally, do the Scriptures teach man's immortality in the absence of Christ? If answered in the affirmative, was not the object of Christ's mission premature and uncalled for? And why is "the gift of God eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord?

Honesty, as a virtue, becomes a mountain of light, around which all lesser graces cluster; and the christian that knows God through a system of revealed laws and promises,—that has been inducted into the mysteries of that higher life by the washing of regeneration,—will spurn a philosophical dogma as a viper that saps the life-blood from its victim. Such an one only prays that the light of the Divine Transcript, in its simplicity, may be the chart that is to guide him through life's howling wilderness, until the sun of life shall set upon his pathway. To be sure, popular errors may have been infused into his heart by force of instruction, until they have become maxims of theology; but God's truth, as revealed through Christ, his apostles, and the prophets, should be the moulding of opinion that relates to his spiritual concerns. There is no practical evidence of spiritual relation between God and man, except through the requisitions he makes upon him. Jno. 5: 39, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life." Do this honestly, candidly, and prayerfully, setting aside previous notions of unproved precepts, and, if necessary, bury in eternal oblivion the friendship of former social relations, for the sake of Christ and his doctrines. Those things are at enmity with God.

The worth of immortality may never demonstrate itself to man from incidental causes. God's plans are absolute in themselves, and salvation, the greatest of them all, becomes a shelter of hope only as the candidate resolves himself into a salvable condition. "This do, and live," is the requisition of an indulgent God. No matter what men think, or how firmly they are entrenched behind a fortress of theological speculation; for "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." As a question of immortal life and its relations to man, prudence should be the talisman to actuate a ready conformation to the terms of the gospel. In thus doing, a well defined hope, based on the immutable promises of God alone, will be the credentials that shall induct us safely into our promised rest. C. O. C.

Light Wanted.

I find an article in the Crisis of Feb. 13th, signed "W. L. Stroud." In commenting on Luke 23: 34, "Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do," he says, the words "them" and "they" refer to the principal party concerned in the killing the Prince of life, who derided him, etc. And he says, also, that "all Israel (nationally) will be saved." I have heard the same sentiments advanced for many years, and have always been left in the dark in respect to evidence, or by what authority the assertion is made. Therefore, I request Bro. S. to answer a few questions and help me out of the dark on that subject, and not only oblige me, but many others.

1. Did Christ's Father hear and answer his prayer? 2. If so, why were the judgments of God fulfilled on those murderers? Matt. 22: 7; Luke 21: 24. 3. How, or by what virtue, can those murderers be saved? 4. Whereas God said to Moses, Ex. 32: 33, "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book," how can those three thousand, referred to in verse 28th, and those that the earth swallowed up, and those two hundred and fifty that offered incense, Num. 16: 32–35, be saved? 5. If those Israelites that were murderers and idolaters can be saved, why may not all mankind that have died in their sins be saved, too? John Gibson.

"There shall be Wars and Rumors of Wars."

If there was ever a time when this Scripture was having a fulfillment it is to-day, for over the whole face of the earth there are either actual or threatened conflicts that call the nations to arms. Everywhere there is unusual combative activity that maps the world with hostile camps and fulfills the conditions spoken of for "the last days." For some years civil wars have existed in all the American countries south of us excepting Brazil, till they have become a chronic disease. For forty years Mexico, Central America, Venezuela, Peru, Chili and other States of more or less importance, have had internal or external conflicts that have left scarcely a day of peaceful quiet and prosperity. We had thought that their ill-temper and unhappy condition was the weaning process, when cut off from the mother country prematurely; they were disturbed in stomach, head and nerves, but would outgrow their evils and settle into national stability. Not so; they seem no better than they did a generation since; and we may doubt whether they now promise more for the future than a city infant fed on slop milk does of healthy teething. We are of a different race and training, and have enjoyed a different existence; but to us also has come war. Perhaps we ought not to have expected it otherwise, for temptations and perplexities must be needed to develope national as well as individual character. All other peoples have thus developed their internal life, and we might say in the language of Watts:

"Shall I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease?
While others fight to win the prize,
And sail through bloody seas."

Still, so safe did we feel that nobody could believe that war would come, when Mars was blowing his trumpet and uttering his war-cry on all sides. But come it has: and here we go surging in the tide like other nations, and dashing on the stormy sea with as little control over our passions or destiny as had those of uncivilized or unchristian ages. Thus almost the whole American continent is following fife and drum, and striving for victories or to escape defeat.

Little better is the state of Europe. If not in actual war, every important nation hangs upon its verge or stands armed from head to foot, in preparation for it. Russia, the Great Bear of the North, has a civil revolution within herself, in her serf emancipation; she stretches one paw to Poland that is in semi-rebellion—the country filled with troops and the people daring them to fire; with the other she scratches the Asiatics from the Sea of Japan to the mountains of the Caucasus, and at the same time she wildly growls at the Porte and threatens to lap up his possession to the Bosphorus. Austria bristles all over with bayonets. She is in perpetual war to hold subdued peoples, and may any day be launched into other military troubles. Hungary groans in her mountains and demands release, and Venetia cries aloud by the sea to Italians impatient to let loose the dogs of war. So Denmark and Prussia are at variance; Italy has internal troubles—the Pope at Rome and reactionary movements at Naples; Turkey is in disruption; Spain is putting on her old armor, and looking to conquests and reconquests; France is breathing threatenings and destruction; and even England is fearful of enemies without, and may in the prostration of business fail to keep quiet within. All Europe is in war or siege, revolution or fear.

Asia is no better than other sections. From the mountains of Syria to the sea on the east, one wave follows another in quick succession, like the jars of an earthquake, and all is commotion. The blood is not yet dry on the sides of Lebanon where clan warred with clan; on the Circassian heights the watch fires of the native warriors burn as in the days of Schamyl; in India the rebellion still lingers and famine adds its destroying powers; Cochin China suffers under the French blade and bows to the French eagles; China, torn asunder by insurgent wars, gives way before the Minie rifle and the cross of St. George; and Japan, just opened to the world, is wild with the delirium of civil war.

So we go all over the earth; the nations labor and groan and God only knows what the future shall bring forth. Jeremiah, gifted with a vision of things to come, appears to have had his eye on our times, when he said: "Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, saith the Lord God, and cause all the nations to whom I send them to drink it; and they shall drink and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. Then I took the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink. . . . . A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth; and the slain shall be at that day, from one end of the earth to the other.—Ex.

Selections.

A Popular Mistake.

There is no one thing in regard to which greater misapprehensions prevail than in relation to the pulpit labors of a faithful minister. We can recollect the time when we had the idea that the minister had quite an easy time of it. We thought he was a sort of speaking machine—that all that was necessary for him to do, was to go into the pulpit and open his mouth, and the words would flow out as a matter of course,—that it was the design of colleges and theological seminaries to make preachers, and that when made they would be able to get up before a congregation, and throw off a sermon with the same facility, and with as little forethought as a mechanic would accomplish a piece of handicraft. This is, doubtless, the general impression among the masses, even of professing Christians. It is somewhat amusing, sometimes, to hear persons expressing themselves in relation to this matter. They will speak of such and such ministers as being able to preach without any preparation.

We would take occasion here to remind our readers who may have allowed themselves to be deceived in regard to this matter, that no man can preach to edification without diligent and careful premeditation and study; and that those professed ministers of the gospel who seek to create the impression on the minds of their hearers, that they are ready at any moment to preach a sermon without having made previous preparation, are either grossly deceiving their hearers, or should be regarded as no better than clerical quacks.

We freely admit that there is great diversity of talent in this, as well as in all other professions; but no amount of talent, and no gift of utterance will supersede the necessity of constant and diligent study on the part of a preacher. The word of God must be closely and sedulously investigated, if we would exhibit the mind of the Spirit, and draw from it those rich stores of truth which it contains. Now it takes time to do this, and much more time than persons of inexperience with such matters would suppose.

There is, perhaps, no profession in which there is less opportunity to exhibit the fruits of study in such a way as that they will be seen and appreciated than that of the ministry. How often does the preacher spend hours in the perusal of critical works on the precise import of a word in the original, or the true grammatical construction of a sentence, and after he has ascertained it, a single sentence will perhaps exhibit the result of all these protracted and laborious resources! Ah! Yes! hearers of the word little know the mental toil which the thought that his minister may be expressing, especially in the way of exposition, may have occasioned him.

We have called attention to this matter, not with a view of eliciting sympathy in behalf of the profession; but simply to let our readers know that the most incorrect ideas are prevalent, especially among the less informed classes of hearers, in relation to the amount of labor which the duties of the pulpit require. We refer here not to physical, but to mental labor. The former is sometimes appreciated when the latter is wholly overlooked. We have often heard persons expressing sympathy in behalf of preachers, in consequence of having had to stand so long and speak so much. Perhaps the preparation of those discourses produced, owing to the influence of the mind on the body, a far greater degree of physical exhaustion, than was caused by the bodily exercise required in the delivery. The one, however, is seen, whereas the other is known only to the individual himself.

Christian Instructor.

Thoughts on 1 Cor. 15: 22.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

This scripture is supposed by many to refer to the resurrection of the wicked as well as the righteous, because it is equally true of them that they die in Adam. But this conclusion is not necessary, for a thing may be affirmed of a particular class, which is equally true of another class, and yet that other class not be had in view.

The apostle in this chapter is declaring the benefits of the resurrection; but the resurrection of the wicked is not for a benefit to them. If Christ is raised, a benefit is thereby conferred on them that sleep in Jesus. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." Verse 20. By this the apostle would show that those who are fallen asleep in Christ are not perished, inasmuch as Christ is the first-fruits of the harvest of saints. There is no change in the argument—the next two verses begin with "For." "For since by man (Adam) came death (on those who sleep in Jesus,) by man (Christ) came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all (of the class under consideration) die, even so in Christ shall all (the same class) be made alive." But that it refers only to the saints is evident from the next verse. "But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." All must admit that the expression, "every man," in this last verse covers the same ground exactly as the word "all" in the verse before it, hence it cannot apply to the wicked unless they are "Christ's at his coming."

In verse 35 the query is anticipated, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" Now if this refers to the general dead, without distinction, Universalism follows. See Paul's answer to the query in verses 42–44. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." Will the wicked be raised in "incorruption" and "glory" with "spiritual bodies?" If so, Universalism is true. If not, then the chapter has reference only to the righteous.

This view is also strengthened by the apostle's conclusion in the last verse. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord."

Though the saints die "in" (by or through) Adam, yet because "in," (by or through) Christ they will be made alive, therefore their labor is not in vain in the Lord.—M. E. Cornell.—Advent Review.

The Central Sun.

Within the last few years an hypothesis has been advanced concerning the possibility of the existence of a central sun. The investigations have been prosecuted more particularly by M. Maedler, an eminent European astronomer. The great extent of the range of influence exercised by the law of gravitation, suggested the high probability that in the assemblage of stars with which our system is connected, there is a centre of gravity around which they revolve.

In order, if possible, to establish this theory by the facts of the universe, Maedler carried out his observations of the heavenly bodies with great perseverance and ingenuity, and was induced to direct special attention to the constellation Taurus, and particularly to the star Aldebaran, which seemed to have the nearest approximation to the required conditions. He subsequently ascertained that the star Alcyone, in the group of the Pleiades, occupied the desired point.

He discovered fourteen conspicuous stars, besides many that were smaller, around this central one, and when the proper motions of all these were determined, they were found to be in the same direction, and all nearly equal to each other. Within fifteen degrees of this centre there are also sixty stars, moving south, or in accordance with the hypothesis that Alcyone is the centre, forty-nine exhibiting no well-defined motion, and only one which appears to move contrary to the computed direction. Assuming Alcyone to be the grand centre of our astral system, and the direction of the sun's motion as determined by Argelander and Struve, he investigated the consequent movements of all the stars in every quarter of the heavens.

The result of the researches of Maedler led him to the conclusion that Alcyone, the principal star in the group of the Pleiades, occupies the centre of gravity, and that around it the universe of stars composing our astral system all revolve. The distance of this star is estimated to be so immense, that the light proceeding from it would require a period of five hundred and thirty-seven years to traverse the mighty interval which separates it from the sun.—Methodist.

How to Write Easy.

Some of my readers may write for a living, or for pleasure. Now there is a right way and a wrong way, a good way and a bad way, a hard way and an easy way of doing this. It is very difficult to tell how to write without standing by the pupil and showing him how to do it. Still I will venture a few hints. Most of the teaching in schools is wrong decidedly on this point. Half the instruction about sitting, holding the pen, etc., is mere nonsense. It produces very little good effect. Persons write slowly, wearily, and in a cramped and tedious manner. To avoid this, consider the following rules:

1. Write on a flat table if you write sitting; when standing, a desk may do; but if sitting, a desk sloping towards a writer seems to me a very awkward arrangement. A flat table is far better.

2. Sit by the side of the table in such a position that your elbow will jut over the edge of the table about three or four inches.

3. Lay your paper square before you a little to the right, and sit so that the point of your elbow will be just about in a line with your back, only extended about a foot or so to the right of your body.

4. Hold your pen any way you choose; a good way is to lay it under the fore-finger and the thumb, and over the point and nail of the second finger; but, however you hold it, it will make very little difference with your writing.

5. Hold your arm in just such a position as you would if the palm of your hand lay flat upon your paper or table. Keep the back of the hand towards the top of the room, and do not turn your hand over to rest, or steady it upon your little finger.

6. Do not touch your fingers to the paper at all, or at most only allow the nails of the third and fourth finger to glide lightly over the paper. You will not need their support at all when you have learned to write.

7. Do not touch your wrist to the table or the paper at all, under any circumstances, while you write. The only place where the arm or hand is to touch the table is at the ball of the arm, some three or four inches below the elbow. This ball is to rest upon the edge of the table, forming a rolling pivot or fulcrum, on which the whole arm and hand are to be swung back and forth, and right and left.

8. Never move your fingers to form a letter while writing. This is what tires writers. The constant bending of the fingers back and forth to produce letters, wearies the writer and cramps the writing. The only use for fingers in writing is to hold the pen—not to make the letters. A man writing in this way can write just as well with a pen tied to his hand as he could with it between his fingers. The fingers should only move as his arm and hand move them. They should never be crooked and bent back and forth to form letters.

9. Holding the pen in the fingers, begin to roll the arm or move it back and forth and sideways, keeping the back of the hand upwards, the wrist off from the paper, and the fingers free; let all motion come from the roll of the arm close by the edge of the table. In this way you can make long marks clear across the page, without raising your hand, indeed you need not raise the hand at all, for it is already raised, and should be kept up all the time. Your writing will become more free. Your fingers will not ache, though you write all day, and you will find yourself gaining in general ease. The motions made by the arm will of course be natural curves instead of the cramped crow-tracks made by aching and twisted fingers.

10. Write carefully, sit erect, write slow first, well next, and fast afterwards. Write plain, especially when you write for a newspaper. Study over these directions—remember them and practice them; and, though it may seem awkward to you to write in this way at first, in a little while you will feel, like one writer whom I taught these principles, who said he felt as if he wanted to go and tell all his friends of it, so they could write easy too.

Very truly, H. L. Hastings.

The Substitute.

In one of the suburbs of Paris there was, and I believe is now, an Asylum to reclaim those destitute youths who wander about the streets of that city. This institution is productive of great good.

One of its rules is, that when any one of the boys commits a fault, there shall be summoned from among his comrades a jury, who shall decide the case, and inflict the proper punishment, independently of the master, which is generally solitary confinement for a length of time, regulated according to the enormity of the offence. During this time the boy in disgrace is fed only on bread and water; but before he is actually confined, he who is appointed judge stands up, and says aloud, "Who will bear this boy's punishment for him?" Then, if any one is willing to be confined instead of the culprit, he immediately signifies his intention to the Judge; and the guilty boy, if fortunate enough to find some one who has sufficient kindness to bear his punishment for him, is obliged to carry to the substitute his allowance of food.

Well, one day a very wicked and depraved boy, well known in the streets of Paris, was admitted into the establishment. He at first seemed to like his new situation very well, and for some time restrained his bad propensities, but it was not very long before these began to show themselves, and for some minor offences he was forgiven, but at last he committed one so flagrant that it could not be passed over. It was this: He was one day playing with a boy, smaller than himself, when, from some cause or other, he became angry with him, and stabbed him with a knife in the breast. The poor little fellow immediately fell, and the other was at the same time seized by the boys; and a jury having been called, he was brought before them. And after the cause had been tried, he was sentenced to solitary confinement for an indefinite length of time; but before he was taken to the place appointed for his reception, the judge, as usual, stood up and said aloud, "Who will bear this boy's punishment for him?" Every one was silent, being impressed with the enormity of the crime, and the fear of being confined a long while.

All this time the wounded little boy was not present. Then the offender was confined. But some days after, all the boys were called together, and the question, "Who will bear this boy's punishment for him?" asked again. Then a voice was heard, saying, "I will." But who is it that is so generous as to utter these words? It is the very boy who was stabbed. This little fellow was shut up, and his enemy liberated. The bad boy had to carry the bread and water to his benefactor; and one day, while doing this, he was so overcome by the meekness and appearance of the little boy, weak from his wound, that he fell down at his feet in a flood of tears, exclaiming, "I'll never be wicked again!" and ever afterward was a reformed boy.

From this we see, that the most effectual way of subduing our enemies, and that which will afford us most pleasure afterward, is to forgive them; feeding them when hungry, clothing them when naked, giving them drink when thirsty; for in so doing we shall heap coals of fire upon their heads, and at the same time we shall imitate the example of our Lord, who, "when he was reviled, reviled not again," and who in the last moments of his agony prayed to God for his murderers, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Leave it to God.—A little girl, giving an account of one of the school children having beaten her, was asked, "Well, what did you do? Did you beat her again?" She answered, "No, I left it to God!"

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All persons desiring to receive the Crisis, or any of the Publications on sale at this office, should always state distinctly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed, and direct their communications and remittances to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

For the Crisis.

"Earth has no Sorrow Heaven cannot heal."

Did'st thou ever, in deep and unutterable sorrow,
From a light, fairy form to thy grief-stricken heart?
Or, bending in soul-crushing agony o'er it,
Behold the last life-token slowly depart?
With thy treasure convulsively clasped to thy bosom,
Grief-choked and despairing, did'st in thy heart feel,
As thy tears lay like pearls 'mong the soft, shining ringlets,
That earth has one sorrow that Heaven can't heal?

Sad mourner! earth-mold might have tarnished thy jewel,
Too closely perchance to thy human heart pressed;
And so it was lovingly laid in its casket,
To sparkle at last all undimmed on thy breast.
Ah! methinks thou wilt learn, when the glad nuptial morning
Shall, rending the casket, thy treasure reveal,
And the bride, robed and jeweled, goes "into the marriage,"
That earth had no sorrow that Heaven can't heal.

Did'st thou e'er, with pale lips and a heart wildly throbbing,
Press the sad farewell kiss on a broad, noble brow,
And, forcing thy tears bravely back, softly whisper,
"How beauteous their feet who bear glad tidings" now?
And then as the door closed on thee in thy loneliness,
Did the thought o'er thy heart in its weakness e'er steal,
As thine "eyes failed with longing" to gaze on the loved one,
That earth has one sorrow that Heaven can't heal?

When those who've gone forth "bearing precious seed, weeping,"
Wat'ring well with their tears as they scattered abroad,
Shall come with rejoicing and glad "harvest shouting,"
Bringing plentiful sheaves for the garner of God:
Ah! methinks I can read in that shout, that shall waken
The echoes of Eden and on thine ear steal,
"Like the many-voiced waters and thunderings mighty,"
Old earth had no sorrow that Heaven can't heal!

Oh, then shall we faint at the trials that wait us?
Shall we sigh for the crown ere we've borne well the cross?
Shall we shrink from the tempest, the clouds and thick darkness,
And repine that we're called to count all things but dross?
Ah, no! but we'll "take to ourselves the whole armor"—
God's truth to our "girdle"—his Spirit our "seal"—
And 'twill soon be proclaimed, by decree of the Mighty One,
Earth had no sorrow that Heaven can't heal!

Inherent Immortality: Inconsistency of its Advocates.

LETTER TO ELD. J. KNAPP.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE, EAST BOSTON, MASS.

Dear Sir:—Having attended some of your meetings of late, and having heard you say some things which, if believed, must lead the mind into wrong views of God and the Bible, I think it proper to give them a passing notice.

On one occasion you said, Spiritualism, Universalism, and Annihilationism were all branches of infidelity.

Now, sir, how can you help seeing, that the first of these branches is the natural fruit of your own planting? You say, the body is not the man—that the man goes out of the body at death, and is immortal, and goes directly up to heaven, or down to hell! This faith of yours, is the foundation on which Spiritualism is built; yea, more, it is the thing itself, in all its essential elements. All that the spiritualists claim, naturally rests on your own basis: remove this, and Spiritualism is at an end. Let the basis remain, and it spontaneously flourishes in all its branches. They are only in advance in a straight line on your own track. This branch of infidelity is but your own seed come to maturity. Why throw stones at the fruit of the tree of your own planting?

What of Universalism? This you say is infidelity. But, sir, you both start at the same place, namely:—That all men have, or will have Immortality—that all have a deathless spirit, an undying soul! You say that all will live eternally, somewhere. To all this the Universalist says, Amen. You say, some will live in hell eternally; which is the same as to have eternal life in hell. For some of your "miserable hearers," as you call them, can't see the difference between eternal life and an undying soul. In view of your faith, that all men will live eternally, that all have immortality, and that the wicked, even, will be raised up with immortal bodies, as you say, the Universalist looks into the Bible and finds that eternal life is a subject of promise; and that it is promised to those only, who will be raised; therefore, their conclusion is, that if all men will live eternally, somewhere, as you say, then all men will be saved.

You, moreover, say, The fire in the earth may be the hell in which the wicked will live, with immortal souls and bodies, without end. Now, the Universalist looks again, and finds that the Bible attaches immortality only to those who will be found righteous; he concludes, therefore, that all will become righteous and be saved; hence, that your view of these immortal ones, wailing in hell eternally, is not correct. Besides, he reads, "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." This may be one reason why you think the wicked will live in the earth. But is it not as much a reason that the righteous will live in the earth?

He reads again, "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Rev. 5: 13.

He now asks, where are your immortal ones weeping, wailing, rolling, in eternal fire, cursing and blaspheming God in the earth? His conclusion, then, is, by your own showing, that the time will come when all will praise and bless God, alike in heaven and earth. These are the "miserable blockheads," as you call them, who believe in that branch of infidelity, called Universalism.

But what say you of the third branch of infidelity, "Annihilationism?" Your words are, "the body is not the man, as these miserable Annihilationists would have us believe. The soul is the man."

You have told us, we should not be afraid of the Bible—that we should take that for our rule, etc. Some of your "miserable" hearers read the Bible, and they find some very strange things there, if your frequent assertions are not strange. They read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." God, then, formed man of dust. Did he form what you call the soul of dust? No, you say; for you have said, the soul was made in a different way. Very well. God made man of dust. This, that He made of dust, you say was the body. Very well; the Lord says, that he made man of dust; so, by your own admission, the body is the man: yet you affirm, The body is not the man! God affirms that He made man out of the dust; and if, as you say, this was the body which he made, then the Bible tells us the body is not the man, or was the man, when God made him. God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; and man—of course he was man, before he lived—became a living soul. When he breathed he was a living man, or a living soul; and the living soul was the man. "Man became a living soul."

Your "miserable" hearers take the Bible for their rule, and believe it; your assertions to the contrary notwithstanding.

In your sermon on Future Punishment, you said there was but one passage which the Restorationists could construe in their favor, namely, "He spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.' You said, Hades, rendered hell, meant the grave, and should never be rendered hell. This you said, to show the restorationist that he is wrong in saying, Christ went to hell where the wicked are, and preached the Gospel to them while he was dead.

Now, it is said, that Christ's soul was not left in hell. And you say, that hell, in this passage, means the grave: you, moreover, say, the body is not the man; but the soul is the man. It follows, then, by your own showing, that the man, Jesus, his soul, to say nothing of the body, went into the grave when he died. Then, what becomes of your assertion, that Christ and the thief went directly to heaven when they died? Again, the hell in which the rich man lifted up his eyes, is hades; and, as you say hades means the grave, it follows that all your efforts to prove the rich man went right to hell torments, when he died, and there "engaged in a prayer-meeting," amounts to nothing; for you destroy that whole sermon by your effort to kill the restorationists. You say, Gehenna is the hell where the wicked are tormented. Now, as you have reminded us that hades means the grave, we would remind you, that Gehenna means the valley of Hinnom, on the side of old Jerusalem.

In concluding your sermon, you endeavored to answer an objection to your views of future punishment. Some say, they cannot see how it can be just for God to inflict such a punishment for sins committed in this short life. You compared such to the ox, who looked over the wall because he could not see through it. But you could see through it, you said. The following is the way you could see through it. First, you said, sin was an infinite evil, and deserved an infinite punishment, such as you described. What Bible you had for this assertion you did not tell us. You might tell us Eliphaz, the Temanite, said, sin is infinite. But, if you will look to Job 22: 5, you may find that this was said by one of "Job's comforters." And, if you look again, you may see that your text, on which your sermon on future punishment was founded, was the language of Elihu, another of Job's comforters. Job 36: 18.

Look at Job 42: 7, and you will find God said to the three persons who tormented Job, instead of comforting him, "Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath."

You said, sin was infinite, because committed against an infinite law; and, for this reason, it deserved infinite punishment. If you mean infinite in degree—and we shall infer that to be your meaning, by saying, the sinner will have an immortal body, so that the fire, with all its intensity inside this earth can't consume it—then the punishment will be unlimited; that is, it will be to the extent of God's power. Do you say, God will inflict torment to the extent of his ability? If He will, then we agree with you, that the punishment of the sinner will be infinite. But, in this case, we ask you to try again to show us the justice of such punishment, which you can so clearly see through. Will the sin of man, even though it should be committed to the extent of his ability, require punishment to the extent of God's ability? If He will not so punish the sinner, then punishment will be limited; of course it will not be infinite. If you say, it will be infinite in regard to time, you may not be so far from the Bible. On both the time and nature of future punishment, Paul may help you to see more plainly. See 2 Thess. 1: 9.

You seemed to be aware that those who, like the ox, could not see through the wall, would not be satisfied with the justice, in putting the person who might have died impenitent, after committing one sin, into eternal torture, to say nothing of the manifest evidence, that you could not see through it; so you struck off on the assertion, that God will punish men for the sins they commit after they get into hell! But where is the Bible for this? Remember, you told us you would stick to the Bible. Perhaps you can see through the difference between tormenting a being for ever, for one sin committed on earth, and putting the sinner, for that one sin, into hell, where he will, and must sin to all eternity, and then torment him because he is there! Some of your stupid hearers must look over the wall to see this. Besides, the sinner, in your hell, will either be on probation or he will not. If on probation, then he may reform, and so get out of that place. And if not on probation, he is not accountable for what he will do, and cannot, in justice be punished for it. Or do you see that God can, and will, for one or more sins committed in this life, put the sinner beyond the reach of mercy, and so fix his condition where he must sin, and then torment him for the sins he commits while there? Is this what you see, when looking through the wall?

To clap the climax of the glory which you behold, in having the sinner put into fire, inside this earth, and kept there forever, you say, by so doing, the inhabitants of Jupiter and of the other planets may thereby be prevented from sinning, and so escape the same fate! You say, they may look down and see the wicked of this world wailing in unutterable torments, and for fear of woe, they will keep themselves from falling!

Remember, in the above discourse, you told us, you should prove everything from the Bible. Where is the Bible that Jupiter is inhabited? Where is the evidence that the people on Jupiter, if any there are, have not already fallen? How can they look from Jupiter down into this earth, to see what is going on there? If they can, does it not savor a little of spiritualism, which you call infidelity? Again, suppose all you claim, that Jupiter is inhabited, and that the people are without sin, and that they need to have some object before them to keep them from sin, what evidence have you that the object need be the eternal torment of the damned in hell? How much virtue is there in that person who is kept from wrong, by fear of punishment? Are the inhabitants of Jupiter so hard to be restrained that all the love and goodness of God fail to keep them? And does it require such a punishment as you describe to secure preservation? Must it be the torment of some, of this world, in fire that will eternally burn? and to prevent them from burning up, will God give them an immortal body, as you say, which will stand this fire, and not burn up? See Malachi 4: 1; Matt. 3: 12.

You told us that you knew of a very proud person, who, by the Spirit of God, had all the pride burned out "root and branch." Did you mean that there was some pride left after that? If not, how much will there be left of the sinner after he is burned up root and branch? Don't dodge [redacted] is your own fixing. So, by [redacted] Malachi was one of [redacted] people in Jupiter and other planets! Is it so, that God will torment one person forever for the good of somebody else? If in all this you are right, and see things clearly, we submit, that you can see better by looking through the wall, than we can by looking over it. That is what your spiritualist infidels say, that they can see through a stone wall or any other substance, far better than others can see with no obstacle in the way!

In the subject referred to, you did repeat several passages of Bible; some of them were to the point, and others, as we see things, were not rightly applied. And when you came to the conclusion of your discourse, and to one of the most important parts of the whole, I believe you did not refer to the Bible at all.

We are glad for all the good you may do. And we think you would do still more, if you would inform yourself on the sentiments of those who can't see through a stone wall as you do, and so not unintentionally misrepresent them; and deal a little more with the Bible, and less in assertion. J. S. W.

From the Bible Examiner.

Second Letter to Eld. Jacob Knapp.

Dear Sir:—In your recent stay in Boston, you said in one of your discourses, "If Christ had come in '43, as some supposed, half of Boston could not have seen him." On another time, soon after, you said publicly, that "In '43 many were looking for Christ to come personally, and they kept awake all night that they might have the first sight of him." You then said, "Suppose he had come to New York, Boston would not have been benefitted by it; for he could not have come to Boston, there would have been such a rabble about him."

In these remarks you plainly ignore one of the most prominent articles of faith in the creed of the Baptist church, of which you are a member. For you ridicule the idea of Christ's personal coming, which the church professes to believe, and which the Bible repeatedly affirms. Then you do not believe that he will so come in like manner as he went away. That he will come in the clouds of heaven; that he will descend from heaven with the voice of the angel to raise the dead; that all the tribes of the earth shall see him coming; for you say that should he come, not half of the people of Boston could see him; and if he should come to New York, he never could get to Boston on account of the rabble. I think you must have changed your mind since the time to which you refer. In '43 you spoke very respectfully of Christ's second personal coming, as taught in the Bible, and preached by W. Miller and others. You then said the doctrine was true, and the Lord might come at that time, and exhorted your hearers to be prepared for the event. Still you told us in your late visit that you had not changed your mind since you were here before, eighteen years ago. You may know how to put these statements together.

In the statements you now make of the coming of Christ, you not only show that you utterly reject the doctrine by your ridicule, but, according to Webster, you use blasphemy in doing it. He defines the word thus:—"An indignity offered to God by words or writing. That which derogates from the prerogatives of God."

It was Christ's prerogative to go where he chose when he was here, and no rabble could prevent him. It will be his prerogative to come, as he has said, so that every eye can see him, and to come from New York to Boston, if necessary, without being prevented by a rabble. But you say, He can't come so as to have half Boston see him; and if he should come to New York, none of Boston could see him, because he could not get to the latter place. Thus you arrogate the prerogatives of Christ, and consequently, so far as he is God, you blaspheme his holy name. Now if you can utter such impious irreverence to Christ, we do not wonder so much at the frequent unmanly epithets you apply to those who can't see things "through the wall," as you can. But we submit, whether it would not be manly, not to say Christ-like, to be more sparing of those terms, putting every body on the list of infidels and on the road to hell who do not believe just as you do, or approve of all your measures, until you learn not to blasphemously ridicule our Savior in one of the most important and essential doctrines of revelation. For if not, it will avail but little for you to call others "blasphemers, infidels, stupid, miserable old fogies," etc. etc.

To the honor of the Baptist denomination, I am glad to know that many of them do not fellowship such a course. Now be entreated, that, while you are dealing in these wholesale denunciations of every body who do not adopt your ipse dixit, and are praying for ministers—"we four and no more"—that you do not include the Savior in the company of those whom you intentionally try to hold up to ridicule—whether to exalt yourself you may be the better judge. Remember the parable of the Publican and Pharisee. J. S. W.

ANCIENT USAGE.—Dr. E. S. Shepherd, in a communication to the Christian Union, says:

"In my travels in Italy, on visiting the ancient baptistries, and inquiring of Catholic priests why they were so constructed, they all, as in one voice, replied that they were built when immersion was the practice of the church, and that such was the practice till the eleventh century. In this they answered truly and candidly. They do not pretend that the apostles practiced sprinkling for baptism. They say that the change was made by their church, and that is sufficient authority for them.

DEW.—There is dew in one flower and not in another, because one opens its cup and takes it in, while the other closes itself and the drop runs off. God rains his goodness and mercy as widespread as the dew, and if we lack them, it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.

Evening Shadows.—No. 9.

BY S. C. BREWER.

"And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—Having presented our humble opinion of the power above referred to, in former articles, we now proceed to present a few brief historical items concerning the astonishment, or wonder, created at the ascension of the beast. The seeds of discord, hatred and revolution, both of religion and government, were sown by Voltaire and his associates, and fairly inaugurated when the infuriated populace destroyed the Bastile, July 14, 1789. Then commenced the reign of terror: on the capture of this strong hold of oppression, the governor and officers were seized, their hands cut off, and then beheaded. The infuriated mob fixed their hands on pikes and carried them in bloody triumph through the streets of Paris. An open profession of Atheism was made on the 26th day of August, 1792. On the 21st of January, 1793, the King was beheaded, and the Queen [illegible] the same fate on the 1st of October, 1793. I wish the reader to mark this definite fact—that the beast from the bottomless pit had fairly inaugurated his career in 1792 and in A. D. 1793. Napoleon Bonaparte at that time was called "the little Corporal"—distinguished himself in the command of artillery at Toulon. Therefore, Napoleon could not by any sort of reasoning answer to the idea of his being the one that was, and his son that was not, and the nephew that is. You will not fail to perceive the fact. Dear reader, I think we shall see that it is the French nation, from the commencement of the reign of terror, that fulfils the eighth head of the dragonic power, and not an uncle, son and nephew.

Second. I will now present some very brief historical extracts;—the first from Read's "Hand of God in History." Says the historian: "We are struck with admiration at the change which Europe has passed through during the last half century. It is but fifty-three years (Oct. 10th, 1793) since France voted christianity out of existence, and with impious hands assailed the temple of truth, and decreed that one stone should not be left upon another till the whole should be thrown down. In the temple which she set up, her image was the Goddess of Reason, and the reign of terror which followed was terrific and bloody beyond anything recorded in the annals of history of the apostacy. Revelation was trodden under foot, and evangelical piety scouted from the nation. Her voice was no where heard except as echoed in blood and groans, or from the remote valley or solitary glen." Smith, in his "Key to Revelation," says: "In August 26th, 1792, an open profession of atheism was made by the National Convention, and corresponding societies and atheistical clubs were everywhere fearlessly held in the French nation. Massacres and the reign of terror became the most horrid." Hear one report of the National Convention of Jan. 30, 1795:—"Last year you maintained 1,100,000 fighting men. France stood armed on one side, and all Europe on the other, and victory constantly followed the tri-colored standard. Holland is conquered, and England trembles; twenty-three regular seiges terminated; six pitched battles gained; two thousand cannon taken; two thousand towns submitted. The loss of men in the armies of France from 1780 to 1786 slain was said to be 1,200,000, besides the huge hosts of slaughtered citizens, men women and children, who were said to amount to 2,000,000. Gen. Denican, a French officer, declared that 3,000,000 of the French perished within five years of the Revolution in 1789. The TERRIBLE REPUBLIC, (the name they assumed before they became an Empire,) having by public authority denied God and the Christian religion, were prepared to patronize any and every enormity: the burning of the Bible in a public place; the parading of the sacramental vessels through the streets on an ass in contempt." Another writer hath said:—"The reign of terror came, and in its bloody footsteps followed the terrific reign of Napoleon. Heretofore the atmosphere had been murky and mortiferous; the earth yet exhaled the bloody vapor of the revolution, and a lurid sky still bespoke the angry frown of indignant heaven. The heavens are again overcast! The thunders roar! The lightnings blaze! Europe is convulsed! The earth is terribly shaken! The Hero of Cosmics comes, a burning comet, rolling over all Europe . . . thrones are crushed; kingdoms crumble; the foundations of the great deep are broken up." Dear reader, what astonishment, yea what wonder, did those bloody scenes enacted by this eighth head dragonic monster create over all the world. Truly, all did wonder and now wonder at dragonic France.

Lastly, on this point, allow me to present one more short extract—one that I deem necessary to show more fully the astonishment at the rise of the beast out of the bottomless pit:—"All Europe stood in amazement and perturbation at the events that were passing. The prodigious increase of power by France, and the unwilling purposes to which she had applied it, began to arouse a universal dread for the independence of nations and the existence of social order. It was natural that kings and autocracies should regard even the first outbreak of the revolution with dislike and apprehension now, from the frightful features it had assumed. This feeling was partaken by the whole world, and prevailed even among the most democratic communities. The enlightened citizens of the United States shared it with the ignorant populations of Sarmatia or Romelia. Upon the first reverse sustained by France, all the nations of the earth seemed to rush simultaneously to quell her. The sympathies of mankind were enlisted against her, for she had shown how hideous was the spirit by which she was actuated."

Having shown, it seems to me, most conclusively the identity of this world-wondering beast, we shall examine the work assigned in prophecy to be accomplished by it and its conjoint agents, which it seems according to statements of the last few years is progressing rapidly to a final consummation. Most emphatically, the day goeth away, and the shadows of the evening are stretched out.

For the Crisis.

Christ's Intercession.

A few thoughts suggested on seeing a picture of Christ, in a supplicating attitude, as if interceding for his people.

"He ever lives above,
For me to intercede;
His all-redeeming love,
His precious blood to plead."

What! ever interceding? and for us, weak, wretched us, borne down with care and trouble, and looking down in despondency, down, down into the depths of our weak, wretched hearts? Yes; He intercedes with the Father for us, miserable worms of the dust! and all the while we are forgetting Him—aye, grieving Him, by our disconsolation, our murmurings, our ingratitude, and our unthankfulness. Interceding for us, because, even while we are sinning against the Father, we desire the Father's blessings. See, his eyes turn upward in prayer, and he seems to cry once more, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

We are tried with our enemies; they would conquer and destroy us. We forget to cry to God for assistance, but Christ does not forget us. He lifts his voice in supplication, and the Father delivers us from the "snare of the fowler," and from the "horrible pit and miry clay," and sets our feet upon the Rock of Ages.

We are sick, and our bodies are racked with pain and anguish; our minds sink into despondency beneath the heavy load, and our cry is, Wo is me, for I sink under a curse; but that sympathizing Savior beseeches the Almighty, and he sends rays of comfort divine to our wounded hearts, and draws us by the tender chords of love, until our sick couch seems like the gate of heaven, and we are resigned to any fate, knowing that He cannot err.

In poverty's dark vale we stumble along, beset by the briars and brambles that surround such unfortunate ones; then we exclaim, We are neglected by God and man; we shall surely perish; but our Intercessor presents his petition, and soon our pathway is strewn with flowers.

Divers afflictions encompass us about, and our hearts are rent with terrible emotions, and all peace has fled. O! then our Mediator, with groanings which cannot be uttered by mortals, intercedes with the Father for us,—and oh! such peace as fills our hearts! it flows like a river! it is unutterable! it passeth all understanding! and in our heavenly transports we cry aloud, Our heavenly Parent, we thank thee that thou hast given to the world thy Son, as a mediator between God and man. He who in his own body bore far more than our sufferings, and has now become our Mediator, yea, our Intercessor, who, not only when we pray, but when we fail to pray, and when steeped in guilt, still cries, "O spare them a little longer!"

How can we wilfully sin when we realize this fact? How enter upon the duties of life with a wicked, reckless, wanton, daring spirit, not knowing or caring about the consequences? How can we forget that, "yet a little longer," and the "great day of wrath" shall come, when the Mediator shall cease to intercede, and shall have become our Judge? Are we ready?

Revival Intelligence.

REMARKABLE WORK OF GOD IN BANBURY, ENGLAND.

We give extracts from a letter written by Sister Palmer to the Editor of the "Guide to Holiness," descriptive of this glorious revival. M. D. W.

"Dec. 20. An amazing work of the Spirit is going on here. Sceptics and cold-hearted professors look on with wonder. One infidel has become so enraged in seeing the multitudes pressing their way to Jesus, that his pitiful revilings in embryo are to be issued in a tract, which, we are told, is now being published in London, because he could find no one willing to publish it here.

High and low, rich and poor, young and old, are subjects of the work. Rev. Mr. C., superintendent, announced to the audience last night that during the past eleven days, since the commencement of the revival services (Sabbath, Dec. 2d,) over five hundred had been brought to Christ. Added to this, the secretary's report shows scores of disciples whose names are recorded among those who have sought and obtained the baptism of fire, and are now mighty through the Spirit in bringing others to Jesus. People are coming in from many miles distant to participate in the work, and many are bringing their unconverted friends from near and remote distances, and great crowds are attending, yet the best order prevails. Yes, the best of all order, for 'the best of all is, God is with us' in his Spirit's power, and the army of Israel is daily being clothed with an increase of strength and wisdom, and, as a well-trained host, is daily making yet more surprising aggressions against the hosts of sin. * * * *

Do you want to see five o'clock morning meetings, attended by persons whose hearts are burning with an all-consuming fire, encompassing the sleeping world around in the arms of mighty prayer, look into Church-lane Wesleyan Chapel, any or every week-day morning between the hours of five and seven o'clock. Then again, at that same place, from half-past twelve till half-past one o'clock, where you will find a crowded assembly. Here is the lowly man of toil, the man of comparative ease and position; here the busy tradesman, casting aside his noon-day cares, and the praying Hannahs and Marys all with one accord in supplication and prayer.

'And heaven comes down their souls to greet,
Around the blood-bought mercy seat.'

Many written and verbal petitions are presented as special subjects for united prayer. Not less than from fifteen to twenty-five written requests are generally read daily. * * * A lady approached the altar with tearful eyes, bringing her husband with her, and, addressing Dr. Palmer, said, 'Do you think Jesus will have me?' He answered, 'Surely he will, for Jesus has invited you.' In a few moments she was rejoicing in the pardoning love of God. Before the close of the service her husband was also made a partaker of like precious grace.

For several evenings past, the chapel and the vestry being so crowded, the penitents have been invited to the adjoining school-room, where many have been converted. Last night, after the meeting in the school-room had closed, I was pressing my way out, when I was asked to speak to an old gentleman, who, I was told, had been seeking the Lord several years. 'Are you a sinner?' I asked. With trembling emotion he replied, 'I am.' 'Is Jesus the Savior of sinners?' 'He is.' 'Then he is your Savior, is he not?' 'Yes.' 'Then why not call him your Savior? Why not say just now, Jesus, thou art my Savior?' Presently he began to say, 'Jesus, thou art my Savior; I thank thee that thou hast died for me. Thou hast borne all my sins in thine own body on the tree; thou wast wounded for my transgressions; thou wast bruised for my iniquities; the chastisement of my peace was upon thee, and with thy stripes I am healed.' Jesus the crucified now revealed himself, and joyously he said, 'O Lord, I will praise thee; for though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me.' The seeking sinner and the seeking Savior had now met, and blissful was the recognition. 'Oh, this is a most happy moment for me!' exclaimed the man with whitened locks, as we unitedly joined in the joy of his new-born spirit, and sang the chorus—

'Oh he has taken my feet from the mire and the clay,
And he's set them on the Rock of Ages.'

I crowded my way from this scene of triumph to the door, where the friends were awaiting me; but ere I reached it, was again delayed by hearing one say in an imploring tone, 'O, Mrs. Palmer, do speak one word to this dear young woman! She has come from about four miles' distance, seeking Jesus, and is now about returning without finding him.' I turned to the young seeker, and assured her that the idea of her returning to her distant home without finding Him of whom Moses and the prophets did write, was all wrong. Jesus was seeking her before she began to seek him, and she must now receive Jesus into her heart by casting all her sins on him as the atoning Lamb, and listening to his voice: 'I will receive you.' 'Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.' In less than five minutes her eye of faith was fixed on Jesus, and she joyously magnified his name, and went on her way rejoicing."

My Experience.—No. 9.

Mercies and blessings attended us on every hand. In the course of four or five years many of our friends submitted themselves to God. Five of my own brothers were at one time bowed at the altar for prayer, and soon found peace and pardon. In the midst of such rich blessings our hearts rejoiced in God, and we endeavored to walk in his fear, though often deprived of the privilege so dear to the christian's heart—that of meeting with the saints for the worship of God.

Several years passed in this way, when the news of the soon coming King saluted our ears and reached our hearts. The first note of warning was from the pen of T. M. Preble. One evening, taking up a periodical, I read an obituary notice of the death of a devoted sister of his, in which he remarked that she died in full faith that she should sleep in the grave but a little while; that Jesus would soon appear to raise the righteous dead and change the living righteous, and judge the world. The moment this met my eye, an awful silence pervaded my whole soul, and a deep, solemn conviction with regard to the truth settled down upon my heart. Instantly the enquiry arose, Is this so? and am I prepared to meet it. These thoughts and reflections occupied my mind constantly for months. Sometimes I tried to reject them as events [illegible]ary to dwell upon and very unlik[illegible] realized in my day. But searching the [illegible] closely, I found more written therein concerning these things than I had supposed. Soon that messenger from God, George Storrs, came into the place and gave a course of lectures upon these subjects, to which I listened with deep and thrilling interest, at the close of which I became fully convinced that these things were so, and near at hand.

With this view I commenced a close examination of my own heart, and, although thinking and trusting that I was a christian, yet I found myself where many professors of religion live at the present day—not only unprepared, but unwilling for the coming of Christ now; so absorbed in the things of the world, such slaves to the cares, labors and anxieties of this life, as to lose sight of the future. Truly, are we lovers of Christ, and unwilling that he should come to deliver us from sorrow and suffering, and gather us as children of one family to himself? Is it possible? We believe his true children will, by entire consecration to him, not only be prepared and willing to meet him, but will love his appearing, and long for his return. The professor, as well as the non-professor, while they keep the prospect of death and the scenes of the judgment behind them, or out of sight, will have but a very faint idea of the reality;—but place them upon a dying bed, or bring them to believe that the gospel dispensation is soon to close, and the judgment scenes in reality are to open up before them, and they will then, if ever, begin to see things in their true light—search deep—receive the truth, and make preparation to meet them. This was the case with myself. At first I was slow of heart to believe all that the prophets had spoken; but when the evidence was produced so clear and strong beyond all controversy, I yielded the point and submitted to its influence, and the consequences were, a letting go the world and seeking unto God with all my heart for a preparation to meet these events. I spent much time in meditation, prayer, and weeping before the Lord. I did not feel safe, neither could I rest, till I had obtained this assurance, which I did in the spring of 1842.

So great was the change wrought that I could only compare it to the days of my espousal. The light that shone upon my pathway, the love for my Redeemer, and the longing desire to behold him face to face, gave joy unspeakable and full of glory. How precious was the word of God! It seemed that almost every text pointed directly or had reference to that glorious event—the coming and kingdom of Christ. And a heavenly light shone upon its sacred pages, illuminating its hitherto dark sayings, reflecting its richness upon the heart and filling it with such melting love and power as was never enjoyed before. The soul seemed to bask in the sunbeams of living light, and drank from the everlasting fount of God.

My husband participated in the same belief. Truly, we did not so firmly rely upon the set time of '43 as some others; yet hoped it would prove to be the day of release. Thus we lived in joyful anticipation of deliverance till long after the time had passed, and the ministry generally in our vicinity had lain it aside, attended with no small share of contempt and reproach. My husband being more exposed to this influence, yielded soonest and gave it up. At length I complied with a request to say no more about it; yet the beauty, the glory and blessedness of the theme had left an impress upon my heart which time's varied changes has not been able fully to obliterate. We now began to sink down and down in our feelings and enjoyments, till nearly destitute of spiritual life. Prayer seemed a mere form of words, and every effort in religious duties was manifestly void of that feeling and power heretofore enjoyed. D. N. K.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 29, 1861.

"Anguished Faith."

In our article on Eternal Suffering last week, we had occasion to refer to language used by Albert Barnes on the subject, and cited him as having said—"I have never seen one ray of light that has given relief to my tortured mind on this subject; it is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it." We stated that we were obliged to quote from memory, but were confident we did so with substantial correctness. On examination, subsequently, we ascertained precisely what Mr. Barnes has said, and we think his deeply interesting and forcible utterances should be given in full to our readers. We take the extract from "Debt and Grace," the author of which cites it as an "instance of anguished faith." The fitness of the epithet will be appreciated by the reader when he has read the passage from Mr. B., who says:—

"That the immortal mind should be allowed to jeopard its infinite welfare, and that trifles should be allowed to draw it away from God, and virtue, and heaven; that any should suffer forever,—lingering on in hopeless despair, and rolling amidst infinite torments without the possibility of alleviation, and without end; that since God can save men, and will save a part, he has not purposed to save all; that, on the supposition that the atonement is ample, and that the blood of Christ can cleanse from all and every sin, it is not in fact applied to all; that, in a word, a God who claims to be worthy of the confidence of the universe, and to be a being of infinite benevolence, should make such a world as this, full of sinners and sufferers; and that when an atonement had been made, He did not save all the race, and put an end to sin and woe forever;—

"These, and kindred difficulties, meet the mind when we think on this great subject; and they meet us when we endeavor to urge our fellow sinners to be reconciled to God, and to put confidence in Him. On this ground they hesitate. These are real, not imaginary difficulties. They are probably felt by every mind that has ever reflected on the subject; and they are unexplained, unmitigated, unremoved. I confess, for one, that I feel them, and feel them more sensibly and powerfully the more I look at them, and the longer I live. I do not understand these facts, and I make no advances towards understanding them. I do not know that I have a ray of light on this subject, which I had not when the subject first flashed across my soul. I have read, to some extent, what wise and good men have written. I have looked at their theories and explanations. I have endeavored to weigh their arguments, for my whole soul pants for light and relief on these questions. But I get neither; and in the distress and anguish of my own spirit, I confess that I see no light whatever. I see not one ray to disclose to me the reason why sin came into the world; why the earth is strewed with the dying and the dead; and why man must suffer to all eternity.

I have never seen a particle of light thrown on these subjects that has given a moment's ease to my tortured mind; nor have I an explanation to offer, or a thought to suggest, that would be of relief to you. I trust other men—as they profess to do—understand this better than I do, and that they have not the anguish of spirit which I have; but I confess, when I look on a world of sinners and of sufferers; upon death-beds and grave-yards; upon the world of woe, filled with hosts to suffer forever; when I see my friends, my parents, my family, my people, my fellow citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger, and when I see the great mass of them wholly unconcerned, and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet He does not do it,—I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it."

"Suffer forever,—lingering on in hopeless despair, and rolling amidst infinite torments without the possibility of alleviation and without end": ponder the import of these words, as their author has evidently pondered it, and say whether they do not form an appropriate counterpart to the grossly detailed description of the agonies of the lost which we gave last week from Mr. Spurgeon's writings! Need we wonder at the "distress and anguish of spirit" which result from such conceptions of the Divine government, where they are believed? Shall we not rather wonder that any who profess to believe the common view, should fail to be "struck dumb" by the eternal horrors which such a faith involves?

We affirm with the utmost confidence—in the face of cautions from whatever quarter in regard to "a rash putting forth of hands to stay the sacred ark"—that "the case" is relieved immensely "of its difficulties" by the view which makes immortality dependent upon faith in Christ, the Life-Giver of a dying world. This doctrine harmonizes alike with the clearest teachings of the Bible, and with those conceptions of justice and right implanted in us by our Creator. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." But we did not intend to dwell again upon the subject ourselves. May we all be fully prepared to stand before "him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead," and to be partakers of his rest and glory in the everlasting kingdom.

Too True.

A correspondent of one of our religious exchanges says:—

"As to the effect of this war upon our church interests, it is very plain that it is to be, for a time, disastrous. People read the newspapers more than the Bible; and even of them, and the religious papers at that, the war is the subject of their reading. It fills the thoughts and absorbs the interest of all."

All true to the letter, and if we were to infer the nature of a Divine precept from what we see among the masses of professors of religion, we should conclude that Jesus had said—"Search the newspapers, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." Brethren and sisters, "these things ought not so to be." Are we guilty in this matter? If we are, let us ask forgiveness of the Lord, and then do so no more. If war "fills the thoughts" of men, then it follows that "God is not in all their thoughts;" if war "absorbs the interest" of people, they can feel little interest in the coming kingdom and the peaceful reign of Jesus. Upon the true "church" of Christ "the effect of this war" need not be "disastrous." God is the strength of his people and their sure hiding place; he will never leave us nor forsake us. Let us, then, esteem his Word as a priceless treasure, and while an ungodly world and a worldly-minded church "read the newspapers" and feed on husks, let us "take heed unto the sure word of prophecy as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." Of "the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly," the Psalmist says—"his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

"The Coming Conflict: With the Inquiry,—Ought Christians to bear Arms?" This discourse of 24 pages, by Bro. P. B. Morgan, is published and ready for distribution. It can be had at this office, and we shall be happy to fill orders for it. Price, 5 cents single, $3.00 per hundred. Our perusal of it has, for want of time, been only a cursory glance; but it needs no "puff" from us to commend it to the attention of our friends. The subject is a deeply interesting one, and now is the time to scatter light upon it. We believe Bro. M. has discussed the theme in an interesting manner; we know his discourse gave excellent satisfaction to the congregation who heard it. Send in your orders.

☞ Bro. R. R. York wishes us to state that there will be a Conference held in Kennebunkport or West Poland, Me., commencing June 13th and holding over the the Sabbath. Particulars next week.

Policy of Louis Napoleon.

Under the above heading, The Catholic of the 25th inst. has the following article, translated from the Paris Universel. It "has about it," says "The Catholic," "an appearance of truth, and at all events places the policy of the French Emperor in a novel light":—

"The Emperor has two strings to his bow; when he cannot control events, he studies how to turn them to his advantage. In 1859 he waged a disinterested war, but when Piedmont, in spite of the Emperor, extended its conquests to Parma, Modena, Florence and Bologna, Napoleon III., not wishing to prevent this, turned the occasion to his own advantage by extorting the cession of Savoy and Nice. This was the first phase of the Italian Revolution. We are now arrived at the second. The Emperor has protested against the annexation of Umbria and the Marches, against the annexation of Sicily and Naples, just as he protested against the annexation of Bologna and Florence; he has recalled his ambassador, and promised to protect the Holy Father. Nevertheless, events march downwards, the logic of the revolution ceases not, and we are now before the gates of the Quirinal. To allow these things, was to submit to a political check, to allow the danger to augment—and why?—to whose profit?

"We are now arrived at a moment of inaction like that which intervened betwixt the Peace of Villafranca and the cession of Savoy and Nice to France; a certain darkness broods over the Tuilleries, but already the experienced eye detects the dawn upon the horizon. The hesitations perceptible at Paris and Turin—what do they bode? Here is my opinion: that which the Emperor would not, or could not prevent, he is again about to turn to his own advantage. One slope of the Alps has been the price and the compensation for the conquest of Central Italy: what compensation will be exacted for the cession of Rome, which M. Cavour covets as a splendid capital, but the abandonment of which would entail serious political and religious embarrassments upon the Empire, whose importance the Emperor must already have calculated?

"The Island of Sardinia is spoken of, but for Sardinia it would not be worth incurring the danger. The price of Rome is Naples. The King was sustained at Gaeta quite long enough to rouse and keep alive the monarchial sentiment, and to divide the revolutionists, but not long enough to enable Francis II. to reconquer his capital and his kingdom; wherein anarchy is purposely permitted to spread, the spirit of reaction increases, and the desire for self-government grows stronger.

"In the meantime the garrison at Rome is increased, and reinforcements are poured in, probably with some more serious object than that of protecting the gardens of the Vatican. Prince Murat has thrown out an idea, in a letter now for some months made public, and which England has called upon the French Cabinet to disavow; he has voted in the Senate with the Catholic party and against Italian unity, he is a Catholic, and his family has had an important part assigned to it in the political world by the mission of his son to Berlin. At the very moment when the anarchy of the two Sicilies has become so great as to enforce its recognition in the Senate by Prince Napoleon, the Lieutenant General, and the Twelve Deputies of the City of Naples send in their resignation, and Liborio Romano raises at Naples the red flag, and announces the downfall of the Piedmontese edifice to Prince Carignan; the rats run off when the walls are crumbling. Murat-ism openly declares itself, enrolls recruits for it, the mob conspires and organizes, and is ready when events are ripe to proclaim it by a new and popular decree.

"The language of Lord Palmerston is breathing distrust, the threats of the armaments of England, the advice tendered by a Whig Cabinet to Victor Emanuel to establish without delay the Court of the King of Naples . . . . all these indicate that Napoleon III. will only cede Rome to Victor Emanuel when a Napoleonic dynasty—Murat of Leuchtenberg—shall have been placed upon the throne of Naples.

"In a few weeks, these will be so completely developed that the Roman army of occupation will be summoned by the loud cries of the population to establish order. Naples will be occupied, in the interests of order and of civilization. The Emperor may then perhaps take up his former scheme of Confederation, whose triumph will have been assured. The sacrifice of the Papacy will have, it is thought, its equivalent in the increase of French influence at Naples, and the murmurs of Catholic France will be drowned by the clamors of a satisfied national self-love. M. de Cavour declares that Victor Emanuel will not go to Rome without the consent of France. Well! France will give that consent, but only upon condition of her going to Naples. Naples or Rome—here is the dilemma proposed."

"The following," says the paper from which the foregoing article was taken, "is the text of the protest which the Pope lately caused to be addressed to all the representatives of foreign Powers at his court, against the title of 'King of Italy,' assumed by Victor Emanuel":—

Rome, April 15, 1861.

A Catholic King, forgetful of every religious principle, in contempt of all right, trampling under foot all law, after having by degrees despoiled the august Chief of the Catholic Church of the largest and most flourishing part of his lawful possessions, now takes the title of King of Italy. By this he wishes to put the seal on the sacreligious usurpations which he has already accomplished, and which his Government has manifested the intention of completing at the expense of the patrimony of the Holy See.

Although the Holy Father had solemnly protested against each fresh enterprise by which his sovereignty was attacked, he is not the less obliged to make a fresh protest against the act by which a title is assumed, the object of which is to legitimatise the iniquity of so many anterior ones.

It would be superfluous to mention here the sanctity of the possessions of the patrimony of the Church and the right of the Sovereign Pontiff over that patrimony—a right incontestibly recognized at all times and by all Governments; and whence it follows that the Holy Father can never admit the title of King of Italy, which the King of Sardinia arrogates to himself, since that title is opposed both to justice and to the sacred property of the Church. Not only can he not recognize it, but, still more, he protests in the most absolute and formal manner against such an usurpation.

The undersigned, Cardinal Secretary of State, begs your excellency to make known to your Government this act, made in the name of His Holiness, feeling assured that it will admit the absolute propriety of it, and that, by joining in such a determination, it will contribute by its influence to bring about an end to that abnormal state of things which has for so long a time desolated the unfortunate Italian Peninsula.

It is with these feelings, etc.,

Cardinal Antonelli.

Discussion Postponed.

H. Melville Fay, who challenged all the clergymen in the Northern States to discuss the subject of Spiritualism, has refused our acceptance, because we appointed the time in a summer month; but gives encouragement that he will attend to it some other time.

We clipped the following from the American Christian Review, published in Cincinnati, O., May 7th, 1861. Eld. Benjamin Franklin, who writes the "reply" to Bro. Davis, is its able editor, who has been writing a series of articles against "materialism;" and on this account, Bro. D. has invited him to discuss the subject with the writer. M. Grant.

CORRESPONDENCE ON MATERIALISM.

Charleston, Ill., April 11, 1861.

Bro. Franklin:—Dear Sir:—Yours of March 26th came duly to hand, and after the necessary advisement, I state that Elder Miles Grant, of Boston, is the man who will debate the subject of "Materialism" with you in Boston, Albany, Rochester, Buffalo or Cincinnati, and he proposes the following question, to-wit: "Will all men live eternally?"

Other questions I am authorized to state, if this does not suit you. The discussion to commence at the place where, and the time when, you and he may agree upon in the further preliminaries. He prefers the place where his views are known, and this accords with your demand. Hence please answer if you will debate the above question at either of the above named places, or any other question that he or you may propose involving the subject of Materialism, upon which both of you can agree. Respond early. Yours in christian hope,

Jewell Davis.

Reply.

Dover, Ky., April 28, 1861.

Bro. Davis:—Dear Sir:—Yours of the 11th inst. came to my office in due time, but, owing to absence and engagements, it could not receive attention till now; nor can I now devote but a few minutes to its consideration.

1. Who is "Elder Grant?" Suppose he were demolished! what would be accomplished? What has he ever done? What is he now doing? I am not aware that any thing of importance would be gained if he were refuted a thousand times. What footing has he, or what do the people know of him in Boston, Albany, Rochester or Buffalo? What has he at stake in these cities?

2. His proposition shows unfairness. Have Soul-Sleepers or Materialists simply been preaching in the negative? Have they simply been denying that all men will live eternally? Why this cowardly shirking? Why not come out boldly and manfully and affirm that the condition or state of all, both good and bad, from death till the resurrection of the dead, is precisely the same—that is, a state of unconsciousness? Why not come out and affirm that the final punishment of the wicked will consist of precisely the same as is the fate of all, both good and bad, from death till the resurrection of the dead—that is, a state of unconsciousness? Why not meet the question square in the face and affirm that heaven is simply eternal existence, and hell is simply eternal non-existence? that heaven is simply eternal consciousness, and hell is simply eternal unconsciousness? or that the heaven talked of, or rather dreamed of, by French Atheists—that death is an eternal sleep, or eternal unconsciousness, is the hell of the Bible. This would make the man who would boldly affirm it appear to believe it, but the evasion evidently in the question, "Will all men live eternally?" shows weakness and want of confidence, and manifest faltering, with a desire to escape the real issue. Before I talk of meeting any man in the discussion of the useless, ruinous and speculative philosophy of Materialists, I must at least have a man that will give some evidence that he believes it himself. I have nothing to do with mere tricksters, shrewd dodgers and mere experimenters in religion, who are simply trying how much they can do in tearing up the foundation of the faith of the gospel, only to hold them at a distance and show up their shallow pretenses. Men who are grave, will meet grave issues fairly and discuss them in an honorable way, I will meet.

With kindest regards, I am respectfully yours, Benjamin Franklin.

Explanation.—The letters to Elder J. Knapp on another page of this paper, were written in the spring, one year ago, while he was preaching in Boston. Having been requested to have them published, so that they may have a more general circulation, I now send them to the Crisis, believing that their insertion may be of service to some in reminding them of the fulfillment of scripture in the direction of infidelity and scoffing, which were to obtain in the last days. J. S. White.

Voting and Fighting.—"He that taketh the sword shall perish with the sword;" therefore to fight is wrong. But is it duty to fight if we vote? then, may be, we are led to the conviction that it is not right to vote. Admit, then, it was wrong, (for argument's sake,) will you now make amends by entering the bloody arena, and engaging in mortal combat there? Can we right one wrong by doing another, even though it be called "manly"? Is it Christian-like? Let us take good heed as to what logic we use in these perilous times. "The Judge standeth before the door." P. B. M.

For the Crisis.

To the Church and Friends.

Several of our brethren and sisters, from time to time, wish us to keep them informed of the cause here. As to our school, we have not been able to gather in many new ones recently, on account of other duties. Yet our old number remains. We are about starting out into the huts and hovels to find out the destitute, the sick and the sad. The city is full of them. We only require time and means to fill up the vacant places in our house of worship.

As there is nothing very important to say of the school just now, I will tell you what the Lord has been doing among our friends. A sister, who is not "tough and hardy," writes:—

"Ashfield, Mass.

Dear Sister Maria:—I take a great interest in the Mission S. S. May the Lord bless you and Sister Hastings in the work you have undertaken, and incline the hearts of his children to give with a liberal hand, and thus enable you to carry forward the noble cause. My widowed mother (seventy-three years of age), my sister and I, have set apart one half day each fortnight, the earnings of which are to be devoted to the school. We get no work to do but hat braiding, and get only six cents apiece for them. * * * I dress quite plain. Have not bought a dress for seven years that cost more than twenty cents per yard. I wear no jewelry. We live alone. My father died when I was very young. He sleeps in Jesus. It will be a glorious day when he comes back to us from the dead.

Yours, etc., Abbie."

These sisters have sent us $2.00. If they were anxious to spend much, as some do, for finery, I guess the hat money would be used at home.

Another Sister, who "writes like a school ma'rm," belonging down in Maine, wrote thus:—

"Dear Sister Hastings:—I read your accounts of the Sabbath School, and feel as though I wanted to aid you. I have two silk dresses that you may have to sell for that object. I feel that it is wrong for 'women professing godliness' to wear costly apparel."

She sent them on. We sold one of them the other day for $6.00. The other is yet for sale. Who'll buy? Another little christian sent $1. Thank you. Be a good girl, and keep serving the Lord.

We have not received much "old clothing" lately. Perhaps the war may hinder us some. We want material to make them summer clothes. We want shoes. The children are learning to behave and read too. The teachers seem more interested than when I last wrote you. They do all they can. They are poor themselves. Some of them get very little work to do. They have no disposition to go into any sort of "speculation," and will never get rich. Pray for us. We are glad to receive letters from any of you. Whether you send us money or not, your letters encourage us. As we are prospered we will communicate to you.

The city is in a commotion, and it requires cunning to interest "union boys" now. The drum and fife and soldiery are uppermost in the minds of men and boys. May God bless us all abundantly, and save us in his glory.

Your Sister, in hope of rest when Jesus comes, M. Matthews.

Providence, R. I.

☞ It is folly for us to think of doing good during life, in the highest sense, without pure hearts,—hearts animated with the love of God.

For the Crisis.

"And make Straight Paths for your Feet."

The christian pathway is one of exceedingly straight and narrow dimensions. It admits of no crooks nor turns, which the feet may take, off-shoots of ease or comfort, where the body may rest awhile from its labor; but its going is straight forward and onward, whatever may be the difficulties of the way. And there is no time to loiter or linger in the work, nor liberty afforded to make a compromise with the duties required, by substituting anything else in their place. But the command is imperative, and must be obeyed, not only to keep in the path, but keep it straight, and keep going. The difficulty of many who profess Christ, and yet have wandered from the path of duty, arises from the fact that they have forgotten to observe closely the direction of the Apostle, in this simple injunction, "Make straight paths for your feet," and the reason he assigns for so doing is so obvious, that the sequel to the downfall of any is at once seen and understood. He knew that so long as we remained in the world, we should be the subjects of infirmity, surrounded by temptations without and the corruptions of our hearts within, which would ever and anon lead us astray, and incline us to halt, to become tired and weary, even of the delightful service of our Lord and Master. And as a caution, or means of preventing the many infirmities with which we are beset, and the lameness in duty to which we are prone, from "turning us out of the way," he would have us "make straight paths for our feet" in order that our lameness, our difficulties and besetments, might be healed. For instance, when we become tired of the closet, and feel that we can do with much less prayer, that it takes time which we wish to devote to something else, to so often commune with God, he would have us stop right here and make no such compromise with the enemy of souls, but make a "straight path" to the closet, and there confess our fault, and ask to be forgiven of our particular lameness in this duty. Also, when the services of the family altar become irksome, and we cease to take delight in gathering our little ones around our own hearthstone, that, night and morning, we might present them, with ourselves, as living sacrifices before the Lord,—then it is that the Apostle's admonition would stand right up before us in broad, bold letters, "Make a straight path for your feet" in this duty, lest otherwise its lameness should turn you out of the way, but at once with penitence and humility perform it, that you may "be healed."

Again, when the prayer-meeting hour arrives, and we are more inclined to stay at home than to go and mingle ourselves with our brethren and sisters, in waiting upon the Lord, (for a failure in duty never comes single handed, but always in groups, a failure in one making way for another,) we should feel that our halting had fairly commenced, and if persisted in would so increase our lameness in spiritual duties as to make us lose all relish for spiritual food, and, as a consequence, we shall sink down into the whirlpool of indifference, and made subject to the woe pronounced upon those who are at ease in Zion. O, who does not see, at a single glance, how much easier the yoke is when we constantly wear it, and the burden of the Lord's service always light and easy when willingly borne, bringing with it help and strength equal to our day and trial, joy and peace to the heart, and elasticity and life to our footsteps, so long as we walk with delight the way of the Lord's commandments. Then let us, as children of the light, ever "make straight paths for our feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed." M. A. T.

Apocalyptic Vials Opened.

If one will pause and take a view of the world at this moment, he will see what was never before seen upon the face of the earth. The world is convulsed, as it probably never has been since the creation, with wars and rumors of wars, by famine and desolation. History does not present such a general tumult of nations as we now see. It would seem that the vials of the Revelations were rained down upon our generation. What the issue will be of all the dreadful entanglements which now environ the nations, time only will show. Certainly no one can divine it. Within a few years we have beheld the most magnificently dreadful wars of which history has any record. Nations have been conquered and subjugated to the caprices of ambitious and tyrannical sovereigns.—Indian revolts, Syrian massacres, and murderous sieges have sapped the life-blood of millions. Europe is just now convulsed from centre to circumference. Poland and Hungary are ripe for revolt. Russia has emancipated her serfs, and annexed a large tract of country lately derived from China, whose coasts are still infested and gaurded by English and French fleets. Sardinia stands demanding Venetia and Rome, and Austria and Germany proper resist her. France holds Syria for the Sultan of that wretched country, but is ready to appropriate it to herself whenever the Emperor Napoleon thinks it policy to do so. England and France are fitting out naval fleets for the coast of the United States, and the United States themselves are disrupted, threatening civil war at any moment. Spain has seized upon San Domingo and threatens Hati and Mexico, while Mexico on her part threatens to conquer Texas. Several of the South American Republics are quarrelling. Buenos Ayres and Paraguay are at swords' points. In India famine is following a dreadful massacre and revolt, and this famine reaches into Persia and China. In Holland the inundation of the country, caused by the breaking away of the dykes, has destroyed its thousands, and left houseless and starving thousands upon thousands more. The temporal power of the Pope topples. The whole world seems on the eve of a general war, and only waiting for some one to strike the first blow.—Religious Herald.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. E. Armstrong.

DEAR BRO. WENDELL:—Seeing a change has been made in the editorial department of the Crisis, I would say that I welcome you (although to me personally a stranger) to the arduous and responsible post to which I trust God in his providence has called you; and you may rest assured, whatever your course may be, my prayer shall be that God may direct and sustain you in the right. The doctrine of the personal appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the nearness of his coming, is the all-absorbing theme with me, and the heralds of his approach (in one of which you are called to the editorial chair) I always welcome with delight. It is true I differ in some respects with most of the brethren as to the time and order of the setting up of the kingdom; but blessed be God, I have found a people with whom I can unite on the broad platform of a Savior's love, without a sectarian creed to distract or mar our peace. God's people are my people, and all who have accepted Jesus as the Life-Giver, and love his appearing, (let their own views be what they may,) are the objects of my especial love and sympathy. The little scattered waiting flock claims the largest interest in my prayers, and their hopes, their trials, and mutual encouragements, expressed through the medium of the advent press, stir up in my soul tender feelings of reciprocal emotions. Although I have never had the pleasure of seeing any of the brethren or sisters of New England, (Brothers Himes, Hastings and Burnham excepted,) I can read the breathings of many faithful hearts in the Crisis, and have many a meek and God-trusting countenance pencilled in my imagination, and feel assured that the time shall not be long delayed when we, who have known each other only by written epistles, shall no longer be separated by death or distance, but meet together to greet our descending King, and be forever with the Lord. Yours in this glorious hope.

Celesta, Sullivan Co., Pa., May 19, '61.

From Bro. A. H. Bolton.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me once more to say a few words to the scattered flock through the columns of the Crisis. I have for a long time remained silent, but the time has come when all who profess to be followers of Jesus should awake out of sleep and "cry aloud and spare not," whether men will hear or forbear, for surely our salvation is nearer than when we believed. The present aspect of things speaks in thunder tones of some great event which is soon to burst upon this guilty world. The prophets and apostles have told us what should be in the last days; that perilous times should come; that men should be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." He says, "from such turn away." And can it be that we have become so hardened in sin that we cannot discern this time, while a copy of the Bible is placed within the reach of almost every individual? Hath the god of this world so blinded our eyes that we cannot see? O, let us arise by faith and go to our great Physician, have our eyes anointed with eye salve that we may see, and examine our own hearts daily, prove our own selves, and be established in the present truth. It rejoices my heart to read the epistles right from the hearts of God's faithful children, through the columns of the Crisis; and I trust while I read, their prayers ascend the throne of grace, that their exhortations and warnings might be overruled to the good of the reader and to the glory of God.

Dear brethren and sisters, it is high time to awake out of sleep and gird on the armor of light, and not have our light under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that others may see the light and be led to glorify our Father in heaven. Let us be like our blessed Master, going about doing good. Let no one be ashamed of his or her talents, but improve upon what the Lord has given us, whether our talents be great or small; and remember, that it was the broken bread that fed the mulitude. Brethren and sisters, write epistles for the Crisis. I love to read them, (though they be a little broken,) when I can feel that they come from hearts filled with the love of God. Let us then be up and doing, that when the chief Shepherd shall appear, it may be said unto us, "well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of the Lord."

Your brother, in hope of life and immortality through Christ.

West Brookfield, Vt., Feb. 18.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Bangor, Me., May 9th, DAVID T. POLLARD, aged sixty-eight years.

His health has been in a feeble condition for the last six years, and for twelve weeks he was unable to leave his room, during which he suffered much at intervals, but with a calm resignation to the afflictive providence of an all-wise, merciful Creator. Never did he murmur or complain. He died in faith that the grave would be his resting place until the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God should awake him, with all the saints, to immortality and eternal life, to live forever with the Lord. Thus again have the fondest ties been riven by the fell destroyer, consumption, and it will continue to be so until Jesus comes and destroys the monster and him that has the power of death, which is the devil. And let every saint of the living God pray, "come, Lord Jesus, O! come quickly." Our brother has left a companion and one son, who deeply feel their loss. May they so live as at last to meet where parting will be known no more.

C. DAGGETT.

Bangor, May 18, 1861.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at the residence of her daughter, R. A. Wheeler, North Stonington, Ct., May 7th, 1861, POLLY ANDERSON, aged sixty-one years, two months and twenty-one days.

My dear mother was feeble for a long time with consumption, but had been failing since last August. She endured it all with christian meekness and patience. She has left five children to mourn her loss, but we mourn not as those without hope. She suffered much, but without complaint. She talked with me about her things and concerning her burial as calmly as if she was going away and coming back again. Thank the Lord, she will come again. The night of her death was very stormy without, but there was peace within. She waved her hand and said, "hallelujah! glory! amen!" She was a believer in the second coming of Christ—the resurrection and sleep of the dead; said she should rest a little while in the grave. If she saw us weeping she would say, "don't, don't weep." But we could not restrain grief when thinking that death must separate us from one so kind and affectionate. She gave us good advice and kissed us and the grandchildren. Jane (six years old) and her little brother (younger) were in another room talking; the brother said to the sister, "we never shall see grandmother any more." "O, yes, we shall, Riley," replied Jane, "we shall see her on the new earth." They seem to be rejoiced with the idea that they shall see grandmother again, and our hope is a consoling one. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."

Eld. Lewis preached her funeral sermon from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14. He came in to see her a few weeks before she died, and asked her of her hope and trust. She told him that Jesus was all her trust. Said he in his discourse—"let wars rage—your mother is unconscious of it all; but when the last loud trump shall sound, she will awake." May this affliction be sanctified to the children's good and to those around, that we may be prepared to meet her, as Jane says, "on the new earth."

"When the last trumpet's awful voice
This rending earth shall shake;
When opening graves shall yield their charge,
And dust to life awake!"

ARRIVAL OF THE ETNA.

Proclamation of the Queen.

New York, May 17. The Etna arrived up at 2 30 P. M.

The following is the proclamation of the Queen:

Whereas, we are happily at peace with all sovereign powers and States; and whereas, hostilities have unhappily commenced between the government of the United States and certain States, styling themselves the Confederate States of America; whereas, we being at peace with the government of the United States, have declared our royal determination to maintain a strict and impartial neutrality in the contest between the said contending parties. We therefore have thought fit, with the advice of Privy Council, to issue our royal proclamation.

And we hereby warn all our loving subjects and all persons whatever entitled to our protection, that if any of them shall presume in contempt of this proclamation to do any act in derogation of their duty, as subjects of a neutral sovereign in said contest, or in violation or contravention of the law of nations, and more especially by entering military service of either of the contending parties, as commissioned or non-commissioned officers or soldiers, or by serving as officers, sailors, or marines on board any of the ships or vessels of war or transport of or in the service of either of the contending parties; or by engaging to or going to any place beyond the seas with intent to enlist or engage in any such service, or by procuring, or attempting to procure, within Her Majesty's dominions, at home or abroad, others to do so; or by fitting out, arming or equipping any ship or vessel to be employed as a ship-of-war, or privateer, or transport, by either of the contending parties, or by breaking, or endeavoring to break, any blockade lawfully and actually established, by or on behalf of either of the said parties; or by carrying officers, soldiers, dispatches, arms, military stores, or materials, or any article considered and deemed to be contraband of war, according to law or modern usage of nations, for the use of either of the said contending parties.

All parties so offending will incur and be liable to the several penal consequences by said statute or by the law of nations in that behalf imposed, and we do hereby declare that all our subjects and persons entitled to our protection, who may misconduct themselves in these premises, will do so at their own peril and of their own wrong, and they will in no wise obtain any protection from us, against any liabilities or penal consequences, but will on the contrary incur our displeasure by such misconduct.

WAR ITEMS.

Baltimore, May 25.—We learn from a reliable source that three thousand Pennsylvania troops left Chambersburg yesterday afternoon, going in the direction of Harper's Ferry.

New York, May 25. It is reported that two regiments of Federal troops left Chambersburg before daylight yesterday morning, and proceeded to Hagerstown, to make, it was supposed, a demonstration at Harper's Ferry. Their scouts were seen yesterday reconnoitering the Ferry at Williamsport, from which it may be inferred that they intend to take possession of the Ferry. The scouts, upon being fired on, ran into the woods.

It is reported at Grafton that the Ohio troops have crossed the Ohio river at Marietta and are moving on to Harper's Ferry. Twelve heavy Columbiads are in the batteries on the Maryland heights, opposite Harper's Ferry. These Maryland heights are the highest at the Ferry, and the key to the whole position. The Loudon heights, south of the Shenandoah, are the next highest, and both these and the Virginia heights are strongly fortified. The troops in charge of them are armed with Enfield rifles, and well supplied with provisions.

Chambersburg advices from Hagerstown state that the railroad track has been torn up on both sides by the rebels. It is reported that not less than 10,000 of them are at that point and in the neighborhood. Virginia troops are guarding all the ferries between Harper's Ferry and Hancock. This town is perfectly quiet, and there is no fear of an invasion; but if it should come, the rebels will meet with a warm reception. Although reinforcements have been reported daily at Williamsport by the secessionists, none had reached there up to Friday evening. Provisions were scarce there, and the troops were without tents, and desertions were numerous.

A floating battery has been erected by the Virginians at Craney Island, and five new batteries are being completed between Lynd Haven and Loudon Bridge.

It is said that a million dollars have been expended in fortifying York river to defend Richmond.

A Washington dispatch to the Post says it is expected that the Government forces will soon advance into the interior of Virginia, via. Orange and Alexandria road.

The War Department have taken efficient measures to improve the commissariat of the army.

Occoquan, Va., gave sixty votes against secession, but the rebel troops marched into town the next day and drove away the Union men.

The rebels are said to be concentrating forces about fifteen miles below Alexandria for an attack.

A special dispatch to the American from Alexandria to-day says that Col. Wilcox, the commandant there, has issued a proclamation, proclaiming strict martial law. Capt. Whittlesey of the Michigan regiment has been appointed Provost Marshal, and Company H of that regiment, city police. Citizens are assured that they will be protected in their persons, property and slaves. All public property will be protected unless the United States forces should be attacked. Citizens are prohibited from entering or leaving the city without a written permit. All outrages or excesses by Federal soldiers will be promptly punished if reported.

The pickets of the forces at Alexandria were last night fired upon, and the troops called to arms in consequence, but nobody was hurt.

Notice.

There will be a Tent and Conference meeting about two miles and a half north of New Milford Ct., on the road to [The place here named in the written notice sent us we cannot decipher: it seems to read "Mansall."—ED.] to commence June 13th, and continue over the Sabbath. In behalf of New Milford church,

EDWIN SOLE.
MASON I. READ,

Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will commence on Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., June 13th, at Chandler's Mills, Belgrade, and continue over the following Lord's day. Call on Brethren Hiram Towle, Wm. Kelly, Noah Goodrich, and others.

I. C. WELLCOME, Clerk.

Richmond, Me., May 27, '61.

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting in Plainfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., on land we occupied last year for a meeting. The meeting will commence June 27th, at half past ten o'clock, A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Brethren are invited. For the church, RUFUS STARKS.

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting at Pine Swamp, Sharron, Ct., on the ground where our meeting was held last year, commencing June 19th, and continuing over Sunday. Provision will be made for taking care of horses. Those wishing to stay in the woods had better come prepared. We expect there will be one or more tents on the ground; those wishing to bring tents can do so. Some of the Lord's servants will be there to preach the word.

In behalf of the Church at Pine Swamp,

S. B. MUNN.

Western N. Y. General Association.

The Annual Meeting of this Association will be held at Seneca Falls, to commence on Thursday, June 6, 1861, at 7 1-2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. All are invited to attend.

Arrangements will be made by the Church at this place to accommodate all who come with bed and board. Let all come by railroad who can, as it will be more inconvenient to provide for teams than mankind. However, let all come, and we will provide as best we can. Some two or more of our eastern elders are expected, and we desire more, may all who can and will come, both east and west—both male and female.

Come, brethren, let us meet once more in love and harmony and worship before the Lord, as it were on the very threshold of the "time of trouble."

B. B. SCHAUER, President.
T. G. NEWMAN, Secretary.

Notice.

Our Quarterly Conference at the Pitcher School-house, in Utica, Winona Co., Minn., is adjourned to Saturday, June 1st, at 10 o'clock, A. M., to continue over Sunday following. Brethren from a distance are requested to attend. Eld. WM. SWEET.

Conference.

Providence permitting, there will be a Conference in West Poland, Me., to commence Thursday, June 13th, and continue over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters from abroad are invited to attend, with hearts to work for the salvation of men and the promotion of Christ's cause.

W. H. MITCHELL.

Discussion.

I am to hold a discussion with Rev. Jacob Baker in Wales, commencing the first Tuesday evening in June, and continuing four evenings and days, if thought best.

Questions.—1. Will all men live forever? 2. Will any portion of mankind cease to be?

H. PRATT.

New Hampshire State Conference.

As the time draws near for our State Conference, (June 20th, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M.,) it is desirable that the place for holding it be decided upon as soon as practicable. Will brethren who may desire the Conference holden with them, inform us, so that we may be able to give seasonable notice?

T. M. PREBLE, Clerk of Conference.

Concord, N. H., May 3, 1861.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. WENDELL, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

In Memory of Carrie.

Gentle Carrie! thou hast left me
Lonely in this world of sin;
It was painful parting with thee—
But we soon will meet again.

Thou hast left me, sad and weary,
Longing for that heavenly rest;
All on earth looks dark and dreary—
But in Jesus I am blest.

Not as others do I sorrow
Who are left alone to grope,
In a night without a morrow,
With no blessed gospel hope.

In the resurrection morning
Cruel death will lose its sting;
Jesus, in that day now dawning,
From the dead his saints will bring.

Carrie then will rise triumphant,
Shouting victory o'er the grave!
Filled with joy to see her Savior,
Who from sin and death did save.

Hail the glorious restitution!
Day of splendor hasten on—
End this strife and rude commotion,
Let God's people all be one.

Springfield, Mass. G. L. Rice.

For the Crisis.

Why not Fight?

TWELVE REASONS FOR NOT IMBIBING THE PRESENT WAR SPIRIT.

1. Carnal warfare is not our calling, for "God hath called us to peace," 1 Cor. 7: 15. Our work is the same as our Master's, who once said, "I came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." If his Spirit sends us to save men, some other spirit must send us to destroy.

2. In saving men, "our weapons are not carnal." True, the sword has opened doors for the gospel; true, the present conflict may (and it may not) free the slave;—but "shall we do evil that good may come?" Because God "maketh the wrath of man to praise him," shall we become [illegible]

3. We cannot fight, or prepare fight, or talk fight, "led by the Spirit of God," and "if any man have not the Spirit of God he is none of his." It is all nonsense to say—"go and fight, but fight in love." The spirit of war, in Scripture, is called the "wine cup of fury." Just as wine intoxicates, infuriates, and transforms a man into a ferocious beast, so does war. The testimony of the warrior is, that, after the "first round," all tender emotions are banished and a demoniac furor seizes upon him. Shall the christian exchange the "lamb" for the "tiger?"

4. God has ever used one wicked people to chastise another: Babylon and other wicked nations to chasten Israel. The Saracens and Turks to punish apostate Christendom, and, to all appearances, He is doing so now. Must we join with the wicked, and in our turn be chastened as other wicked people have been, after God has used them for a scourge?

5. This trouble in our land is evidently a judgment from God sent for national guilt. Jer. 25: 15, 16, 20, 32. "God hath a controversy with the nations—he will give them that are wicked to the sword—evil shall go forth from nation to nation." Shall we press the "wine cup" to our lips? Shall the innocent identify themselves with the guilty and rush into the whirlwind?

6. The nations are gathered to battle by "the spirits of demons." Rev. 16: 14, "These are spirits of demons which go forth to the kings of the earth to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Although this refers to the final gathering of all nations, yet these spirits could not gather them on that occasion unless they had first got control of them and diffused the warlike spirit. Are christians to be drawn by demons into battle?

7. When the nations become intoxicated by war, and anarchy prevails, as it doubtless will in spite of armies, then they are to be deceived. Isa. 30: 38. From this prophecy it appears that when God shall "sift the nations in the sieve of vanity, there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, causing them to err." This is the same as Paul's "strong delusion." This delusion is to move whole nations, so that when Jesus comes he will find "the kings of the earth and their armies" arrayed against him, Rev. 19: 19. The order of events seems to be—national corruption, national strife, national deception, national hostility to Christ; then Christ's triumph over them, and deliverance and blessedness of his saints. Whoever, therefore, will go with the nation, this or any other, will come out opposed to Christ. But some will say—"we'll go as far as we can and then stop." This seems like jumping upon the platform of cars to ride until under headway and then leaping off, as boys often do for sport. They come back bruised, often broken and sometimes lose their life. Better keep off the train. "Be ye separate," saith the apostle.

8. If we must allow that christians fight in the Northern army, we must also allow that some conscientious souls are also in the Southern ranks. Then christian is shooting christian, and both at Christ's command! No! never! The Master says to each, "put up thy sword."

9. Christians have been forbidden to fight for the gospel, yea, even for their Master, the "Author of our faith." If they could not fight for these, shall they fight for a guilty nation of no value compared to these? We can spare every throne or nation under heaven, but we cannot spare the gospel and much less its Author; and yet for these we must not fight.

10. Our kingdom is not of this world. "If my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight." Let them of this world fight; as for us, "let us pray."

11. There seems to be no need of Christians. Some one will say, "Suppose all should stay at home!" Well, suppose all should go—which of the two evils would be the less? Then if some must needs stay at home, to till the ground, provide for women and children, etc., who so safely trusted as christians? Divine wisdom says, "first purity, then peace." When all has been done for purity that can be done, all has been done for peace that can be. Christians have served their country well by laboring incessantly for purity; now let those who have done worse than nothing in this respect, do something, if they can, with the sword. As for us, our duty ends with the "sword of the spirit." "But we shall be drafted!" Never fear it; the devil has too many willing subjects to be dependent upon God's servants.

12. When the sword came upon Jerusalem, previous to its overthrow at the hand of the Lord, the disciples, every one of them, kept separate and escaped to the mountains. The sword has now come upon all nations previous to their utter and eternal overthrow. Let us keep separate and watch for the signal to go forth unto our Savior to be "forever with the Lord." Be not deceived by vain words, for some will say, "Our religious liberty, our religious institutions are at stake." So they were at Jerusalem, and also at Rome, [illegible] yet the disciples [illegible] fought for them. The existence and strength of God's church does not depend upon national favor. The church of Christ has outlived the overthrow of the mightiest empires, and has been valiant and strong, and far more healthful in its spirit and power, without political favor. National favor and assistance has ever weakened and adulterated 'pure religion.' Let no one think, then, that he must war for his country if he would serve his Master's cause, for the church is built, not upon national strength, but upon Christ—'The Rock.' 'Government is of God,' says another. Yes, but no more now than when "the powers that be" crucified our Lord, imprisoned his apostles and persecuted the church; or when the papal hierarchy breathed out threatenings and slaughter upon the flock of Christ. All this time, and in reference to despotic governments, too, it was said, as well as now, "The powers that be are ordained of God." Shall, therefore, the disciples fight for Herod? or Paul defend Nero's throne with the sword? or the martyrs join the papal army to defend the Pope? Yet they were "ordained of God," being at that time "powers that be." The truth is, God has no kingdom nor nation under heaven as his at the present. When the seventh trumpet sounds, "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord." If not his till then, they are not his now. Think not, then, that you are sustaining what belongs to God in warring a carnal warfare for this Republic. Our Kingdom, our "better country," God's own dominion, lies beyond all human fabrics of government. Let us claim a citizenship there. Our treasures are there. Let us confess that we are pilgrims and strangers even amid this people, keep ourselves in the love of God and in a patient waiting for the Son of God. Let us "go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach." May we be found of him in peace, standing where he may say of us, "Ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world." H. F. C.

For the Crisis.

Rev. 17: 8.

"The beast that was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit."

In order to a clear understanding of this beast of Rev. 17th, it is necessary that we view it from the same stand point from which John saw in his vision. And where was that? I answer, in the wilderness: see verse 3d. One of the seven angels which had the seven vials said to him, "Come hither; I will show unto thee the JUDGMENT of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters." "So he carried me away in the spirit into the WILDERNESS; and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast full of names of blasphemy," etc. John is now in the wilderness, and is looking down towards the JUDGMENT of the great whore; and there he sees the woman on the scarlet beast riding to the judgment, or to perdition, which caused him to wonder. It is something which he does not understand—it needs explanation. The mystery to John seems to be—why should that scarlet or red beast be down there nigh to the judgment, when his position as previously pointed out to John was at the beginning or alpha of the gospel dispensation, and more than eighteen hundred years before the judgment? See chap. 12: 3. The angel proceeds to explain the mystery of the woman and of the beast, (John still standing in the wilderness.) "The beast" (i. e., the red beast) "that that thou sawest was," i. e., it is the same one you saw standing before the woman, chap. 12; "is not"—not now in the wilderness. Why? because he is now in the abyss or bottomless pit, that is, just where the red dragon was cast: (see chap. 20: 1-3; this chapter is evidently connected with the 12th, 13th and 17th:) "and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition," or to its final judgment.

"And there are seven kings," (kingdoms); "five are fallen." What five? 1st, Babylon; 2d, Medo Persia; 3d, Grecia; 4th, Rome under the symbol of the great and terrible beast of Dan. 7: 7; 5th, Rome dragon. "One is"—i. e., one is now in the wilderness just where John is in vision. What one? Answer: the leopard of Rev. 13th, or the forty-two month papal beast. "The other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. This is the seventh or two-horned beast, and he came up in sight of the leopard, viz., England and Wales in the early part of the sixteenth century. "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." How is he of the seven? He is scarlet or red—so was one of the seven, viz., the dragon. Where did he come up from? Answer: from the bottomless pit. Where did the red dragon go? Answer: into the bottomless pit; proof, Rev. 20: 1, 2—evidently the same, or a beast having the same characteristics, as the red dragon; and on this eighth or red beast the woman sits and is riding to perdition; and no doubt the other beast on which she sits is very nigh to perdition.

How long was the dragon to be bound in the abyss or bottomless pit? Answer: a thousand years. As this is the only thousand years mentioned in the Bible, and marks the duration of the dragon in the abyss, it is evident that the thousand [illegible] years is in the past. So long as we look for a millennium, or one thousand years in the future, we shall fail to grasp the plan of redemption, and we will be out of harmony with that plan; and yet Adventists, almost all as a body, are looking for the thousand years in the future.

What features of the scarlet beast which the woman rides marks it as an image of the red dragon of Rome? We must look for a beast, not for a head, or a horn of a beast. A beast in prophecy represents the ruling or controlling power—that which exercises dominion. A head of a beast is not the beast, neither is a horn a beast; they are only parts of a beast. Now the scarlet beast has seven heads—just as many as the dragon had; it has ten horns, —just as many as the dragon had; it is red—so was the dragon; it came out of the abyss—the dragon went into the abyss. These particulars mark it as having the same characteristics as the Roman dragon.

Mark—the beast which had dominion in the wilderness, where John stood in vision, was the sixth beast, denominated in the prophecy as "one is;" it was the leopard of Rev. 13th, and was to continue forty-two months, or 1260 years. His time has expired, beyond a doubt, as all agree that beast was a symbol of the papacy, when papacy had political dominion. The dominion of the Pope was taken away by the allies in 1815-16; consequently he has had his day of dominion, and ever since 1815-16 the papacy is under the symbol of the woman or the scarlet beast—no longer has dominion, but is carried by another beast. As before said, a beast is the power which is above all, or has dominion for the time being. Well, what power has controlled the destinies of Europe from 1815 down to now? Evidently, the holy alliance, as it is called—the allied powers of Europe; they have held the destinies of Europe, and do now hold it. Napoleon III., great as is his power, evidently felt and acknowledged a power above him in the late Crimean and Italian wars, and he is now checked or held in by a power stronger than himself. He is not able in all things to do according to his will; he has to heed the power above him; he has to move cautiously; he is, no doubt, one of the heads of the scarlet beast. Let us see if we can find all the seven heads:—1st, England; 2d, France; 3d, Russia; 4th, Austria; 5th, Prussia; 6th, Spain; 7th, Portugal.

The ten horns on the head of the scarlet beast find their counterpart in the ten Italian States, especially in this, "they had received no kingdom as yet," (are represented as uncrowned,) "but receive power as kings one hour with the beast," v. 12. "These shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." How striking is the fulfillment of this prophecy now going on in Italy! Truly, the JUDGMENT upon this harlot is being now executed, her plagues are upon her, and "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth, which is drunken with the blood of the saints," her "cup full,"—is about to receive her final judgment and total overthrow, and, like a mill stone, will sink to rise no more. The word of the Lord is sure, and every jot and tittle will be fulfilled.

The two-horned beast was to perform his miracles in sight of the leopard beast. As we have shown the leopard beast has had his day, the two-horned beast cannot be any power which has arisen since the leopard went down; and there seems to be no power which has arisen in its proper prophetic place, to mark it as the two-horned beast, but England and Wales about 1540.

The Napoleon dynasty cannot be the scarlet beast, because the scarlet beast "was," i. e., before the wilderness state, and the wilderness state must have commenced centuries before Napoleon or even Charlemagne's day. Take the position of John in the wilderness, and look down to the judgment of the great whore, and all seems plain and in harmony with the Scriptures. W. S. O.

Signs of the Times.

Bro. Wendell:—Reading in the last issue of your paper an article on the "Signs," I noticed that the writer alluded to the darkening of the sun in 1780, adding that the generation who saw that sign had nearly all passed away. This brought to my mind a paragraph I read, about eighteen months since, in the "Scientific American" of that date, which, though I did not at that time believe in the near coming of Christ, still made a great and lasting impression upon me. As it may be interesting to some of your readers who probably never read the article, I will copy it entire.

"IS THE SUN GROWING COLD AND DARK?

There are now more spots on the sun than have been seen before for many years. Some of these are visible to the naked eye. Several stars—some of them of great brilliancy, which, from their ascertained distance, must have been as large as our sun—have totally disappeared from the sky; and the question has been raised among astronomers whether the light and heat of the sun are fading away. As this would be [illegible] accompanied by the destruction of all the plants and animals on the earth, it is rather an interesting question. The sun's light and heat is diminished by the dark spots at the present time about one per cent."

Coincident with this statement, there appeared last fall, about the time of the Presidential election, a star at mid-day. This, though unimportant of itself, is corroborative of the important fact that the sun is darkening. Other signs might be adduced, such as the great increase of earthquakes within the last twenty years—the large number of falling stars that were seen towards the close of last year; occurrences taken collectively, and viewed by the light of prophecy, of startling significance.

It seems to me, in view of the great speed with which events are rushing on, and the signs which are being manifested in the natural and moral world, we can have no doubt that we are nearing the close of the present dispensation. And this, I think, should not be a source of trouble or disquietude, but rather give us increased zeal and determination to persevere and be faithful to the end, and in watchfulness and prayerfulness to await the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior.

Selections.

Christ's statements regarding Himself.

There is yet another point related to this, in which the attitude of Jesus is even more distinct from any that was ever taken by man, and is yet triumphantly sustained. I speak of the astonishing pretentions asserted concerning his person. Similar pretentions have sometimes been assumed by maniacs, or insane persons, but never, so far as I know, by persons in the proper exercise of their reason. Certain it is, that no mere man could take the same attitude of supremacy toward the race, and inherent affinity or oneness with God, without totally shocking the confidence of the world by his effrontery. Imagine a human creature saying to the world, "I came forth from the Father"—"ye are from beneath, I am from above;" facing all the intelligence and even the philosophy of the world, and saying in bold assurance—"Behold, a greater than Solomon is here." "I am the light of the world"—"the way, the truth, and the life;" publishing to all peoples and religions—"No man cometh to the Father but by me;"—promising openly in his death "I will draw all men unto me;" addressing the Infinite Majesty, and testifying—"I have glorified thee on the earth;" calling to the human race—"Come unto me, follow me;" laying his hand on all the dearest and most intimate affections of life, and demanding a precedent love,—"He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." Was there ever displayed an example of effrontery and spiritual conceit so preposterous? Was there ever a man that dared put himself on the world in such pretensions?—as if all the light was in him, as if to follow him and be worthy of him was to be the conclusive or chief excellence of mankind? What but mockery and disgust does he challenge as the certain reward of his audacity? But no one is offended with Jesus on this account; and what is a sure test of his success, it is remarkable that, of all the readers of the gospel, it probably never even occurs to one in a hundred thousand to blame his conceit, or the egregious vanity of his pretentions. Nor is there anything disputable in the pretensions, least of all, any trace of myth or fabulous tradition. They enter into the very web of his ministry, so that if they are extracted and nothing left transcending mere humanity, nothing at all is left. Indeed there is a tacit assumption, continually maintained, that far exceeds the range of these formal pretensions. He says—"I and the Father that sent me." What figure would a man present in such language—I and the Father? He goes even beyond this, and apparently without any thought of excess or presumption, classing himself with the Infinite Majesty in a common plural, he says,—"We will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Imagine any, the greatest and holiest of mankind; any prophet, or apostle, saying we of himself and the Great Jehovah! What a conception did he give us concerning himself, when he assumed the necessity of such information as this—"My Father is greater than I;" and above all, when he calls himself, as he often does, in a tone of condescension, "the Son of man." See Him also on the top of Olivet, looking down on the guilty city and weeping words of compassion like these—imagine some man weeping over London or New York, in the like, "How often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth gather her chickens under her wings and ye would not!" See Him also, in the supper, instituting a right of remembrance for himself, a scorned, outcast man, saying—"This is my body," —"this do in remembrance of me."

I have dwelt thus on the transcendent pretensions of Jesus, because there is an argument here for his superhumanity which cannot be resisted. For eighteen hundred years these prodigious assumptions have been published and preached to a world that is quick to lay hold of conceit, and bring down the lofty airs of pretenders, and yet, during all this time, whole nations of people, composing as well the learned and powerful as the ignorant and humble, have paid their homage to the name of Jesus, detecting never any disagreement between his merits and his pretensions, offended never by any thought of his extravagance. In which we have absolute proof that he practically maintains his amazing assumptions! Indeed it will even be found that, in the common apprehension of the race, he maintains the merit of a peculiar modesty, producing no conviction more distinctly than that of his intense lowliness and humility. His worth is seen to be so great, his authority so high, his spirit so celestial, that instead of being offended by his pretensions, we take the impression of one in whom it is even a condescension to breathe our air. I say not [illegible] and followers take this impression,—it is received as naturally and irresistibly by unbelievers. I do not recollect any skeptic or infidel who has even thought to accuse him as a conceited person, or to assault him in this, the weakest and absurdest, if not the strongest and holiest point of his character.

Come now, all ye that tell us in your wisdom of the humanity of Jesus, and help us to find how it is that he is only a natural development of the human; select your best and wisest character; take the range, if you will, of all the great philosophers and saints, and choose out one that is most competent; or, if perchance, some one of you may imagine that he is himself about upon a level with Jesus (as we hear some of you do,) let him come forward in this trial and say, "follow me"—"be worthy of me"—"I am the light of the world"—"ye are from beneath, I am from above"—"behold a greater than Solomon is here;" take on all these transcendent assumptions, and see how soon your glory will be sifted out of you by the detective gaze, and darkened by the contempt of mankind! Why not, is not the challenge fair? Do you not tell us that you can say as divine things as he? Is it not in you too, of course, to do what is human? Are you not in the front ranks of human developments? Do you not rejoice in the power to rectify the mistakes and errors in the words of Jesus? Give us, then, this one experiment, and see if it does not prove to you a truth that is of some consequence, namely, that you are a man, and that Jesus Christ—is more—Dr. Huntington.

Controversy.

"I like controversy, when it is thoroughly honest. I do admire to see two large and generous minds approach a subject from opposite quarters, and then to watch the new lights that flash over it and show it in a thousand relations that were not obvious before. It lifts us out of the ruts of our sect and party, in whose treadmill we have been grinding all our lives, and mistaking it for the universe. But controversy with small minds is the smallest business that is done in this world. It slides inevitably into word-catching, and ends in personalities. The moment I saw a man consciously trying to put my language to a different use from what I had put it myself, I would stop short with him and say: 'I am glad to compare ideas with you, but I have no time for word-catching.' To say, as Dr. Johnson did, 'I can't furnish meaning and brains too,' is not courteous. The only controversy that ever convinces the controvertists is a friendly comparison of beliefs, each turning the other's round, and viewing it under all the angles of reflection. It is not this sort of controversy, but fighting with word-mongers, that Dr. Holmes must have in mind. "You know that, if you had a bent tube one arm of which was the size of a pipe-stem, and the other big enough to hold the ocean, water would stand in the same height in one as in the other.' Controversy equalizes fools and wise men in the same way, and the fools know it."—Rev. E. H. Sears.

The Dead Wife.

In comparison with the loss of a wife, all other bereavements are trifles. The wife; she who fills so large a space in the domestic heaven; she who is busied, so unwearied; bitter, bitter is the tear that falls on her clay. You stand beside her grave and think of the past; it seems an amber colored path-way where the sun shone upon beautiful flowers, or the stars hung glittering overhead. Fain would the soul linger there. No thorns are remembered above the sweet clay, save those your own hands have unwittingly planted. Her noble tender heart lies open to your inmost sight. You think of her as all gentleness, all beauty and purity. But she is dead. The dear head that has so often lain upon your bosom, now rests upon a pillow of clay. The hands that administered so untiringly are faded, white and cold beneath the gloomy portals. The heart whose every beat measured an eternity of love, lies under your feet. And there is no white arm over your shoulder now—no speaking face to look up in the eye of love—no trembling lips to murmur, "Oh, it is too sad!" There is a strange hush in every room! No smile to meet you at nightfall—and the clock ticks, and ticks, and ticks! It was sweet music when she could hear it. Now it seems to knell only the hours through which you watch the shadows of death gathering upon the sweet face. But many a tale is telleth of joys past, sorrows shared and beautiful words registered above. —N. Y. Traveller.

Tobacco Culture: A Case of Conscience.

From time to time articles have appeared in the Crisis headed, "My Experience;" so with your permission I will give a little of mine about tobacco raising. One year ago the care and control of a small farm came upon me, where tobacco had been the principal crop. The question was forced upon my mind,—can I conscientiously assume the responsibility of raising that which is poison, and injures and enslaves my fellow men? As I beheld young men entering upon the battle of life, needing all the powers which God had given them for the conflict; saw their pale cheek, trembling nerve and weakened frame; heard them acknowledge that their use of tobacco debilitated and enslaved them,—could I entreat them to break away from the bonds, and be free men, if I cultivated it for their use? Should I be consistent, while instrumental in placing it before them, to warn them against it? When I learned how much of God's earth was used to raise this vile poison, while thousands were stinted for bread, should I, too, "when asked for bread, give them" worse than "a stone?" No, never, God being my helper.

But then, good men raise it, ministers raise it, and feel no condemnation;—am I so much better than they? Conscience could not be quieted, and reading that "they who compare themselves among themselves and measure themselves by themselves are not wise," I left them out of the account; desiring to be found among the "wise" at the appearing of my Savior, with Him alone I settled the matter.

But what was to be done? The most convincing argument that it was right, with the majority, was, that it "paid better" than anything else, and there was labor to to be performed, and provision made for expenses to be met, and how? Well, in the first place, I felt that I was the Lord's; that he was my Father, rich and kind; that he would be much more likely to fulfill his precious promises to me, if, trusting in Him, I strove to keep my eye single to his glory as a good, obedient child; that it was far more safe and blessed to do right, "trusting in the Lord with all my heart, than to lean unto my own understanding" about it; and, believing he required nothing of me which he would not enable me to perform, I was willing to sacrifice many things rather than a good conscience; and so went forward. "Being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform," I "cast all my care upon him," and proved his care for me. I could constantly say, "whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he;" had "strength given according to my day;" had that raised which would strengthen instead of poison; paid $150 for labor, $50 for expenses incurred previously, our wants were all supplied, and as much to give to the Lord as ever. Now, who says the path of duty is not the path of safety? that I should have been happier in raising tobacco, that I might receive a few more dollars (which I might not have done) to spend in gratifying a troubled mind with the pride of life? Surely, no christian.

Some with whom I converse, who raise it, say, "I never use it myself;" others, "I used it till convinced that it or my health must be sacrificed;" others still, "I know it injures and enslaves me, but the habit is so fastened upon me that I cannot do without it,—would not consent to have my sons or daughters follow my example." After all these admissions that it is an evil, they try to persuade themselves that it is right to do evil that good may come; and, although unwilling that their children should be victims to so degrading a habit, are very willing to place it within the reach of others' children if they can get the pay! Does the principle differ in the man who refrains from the intoxicating cup, but is ready to deal it to others for the pay? Again, others say "they would not raise it, but they have families to support, debts to pay, and what can they do? Let me ask, does God require men to glorify him, and keep ourselves pure, and then leave us no other way but to do that which will dishonor him and degrade ourselves? Ye strong men, who are so distrustful of God as this! remember, "He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely." Let the experience of a humble female show you that in dependence upon God, you may be sure "He will withhold no good thing from you if you walk uprightly;" that "the blessing of the Lord it maketh rich and addeth no sorrow with it." "Better is a little with righteousness than great revenues without right." "Believest thou this?"

Marvels of Man.

While the gastric juice has a mild, bland, sweetish taste, it possesses the power of dissolving the hardest food that can be swallowed; it has no influence whatever on the soft and delicate fibers of the living stomach, nor upon the living hand, but, at the moment of death, it begins to eat them away with the power of the strongest acids.

There is dust on sea, on land; in the valley, and on the mountain-top; there is dust always and every where; the atmosphere is full of it; it penetrates the noisome dungeon, and visits the deepest, darkest caves of the earth; no palace door can shut it out, no drawer so "secret" as to escape its presence; every breath of wind dashes it upon the open eye, and yet that eye is not blinded, because there is a fountain of the blandest fluid in nature incessantly emptying itself under the eyelid, which spreads it over the surface of the ball at every winking, and washes every atom of dust away. But this liquid, so mild, and so well adapted to the eye itself, has some acridity, which, under certain circumstances, becomes so decided as to be scalding to the skin, and would rot away the eyelids were it not that along the edges of them there are little oil manufactories, which spread over their surface a coating as impervious to the liquids necessary for keeping the eye-ball washed clean, as the best varnish is impervious to water.

The breath which leaves the lungs has been so perfectly divested of its life-giving properties, that to rebreathe it, unmixed with other air, the moment it escapes from the mouth, would cause immediate death by suffocation; while if it hovered about us, a more or less destructive influence over health and life would be occasioned; but is is made of a nature so much lighter than the common air, that the instant it escapes the lips and nostrils, it ascends to the higher regions, above the breathing-point, there to be rectified, renovated, and sent back again, replete with purity and life. How rapidly it ascends, is beautifully exhibited any frosty morning.

But foul and deadly as the expired air is, Nature, wisely economical in all her works and ways, turns it to good account in its outward passage through the organs of voice, and makes of it the whisper of love, the soft words of affection, the tender tones of human sympathy, the sweetest strains of ravishing music, the persuasive eloquence of the finished orator.

If a well-made man be extended on the ground, his arms at right angles with the body, a circle, making the naval its center, will just take in the head, the finger-ends, and feet.

The distance from "top to toe" is precisely the same as that between the tips of the fingers when the arms are extended.

The length of the body is just six times that of the foot; while the distance from the edge of the hair on the forehead, to the end of the chin, is one tenth the length of the whole stature.

Of the sixty-two primary elements known in nature, only eighteen are found in the human body, and of these, seven are metallic. Iron is found in the blood; phosphorus in the brain; limestone in the bile; lime in the bones, dust and ashes in all! Not only these eighteen human elements, but the whole sixty-two, of which the universe is made, have their essential basis in the four substances—oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and carbon, representing the more familiar names of fire, water, saltpeter, and charcoal; and such is man, the lord of earth! a spark of fire, a drop of water, a grain of gunpowder, an atom of charcoal!

But looking at him in another direction, these elements shadow forth the higher qualities of a diviner nature, of an immortal existence. In that spark is the caloric which speaks of irrepressible activity; in that drop is the water which speaks of purity; in that grain is the force by which he subdues all things to himself, makes the wide creation the supplier of his wants, and the servitor of his pleasure; while in that atom of charcoal, there is the diamond, which speaks at once of light and purity, of indestructibility and of resistless progress, for there is nothing which outshines it; it is purer than the dew-drop; "moth and rust corrupt" it not, nor can any ordinary fires destroy; while it cuts its way alike through brass and adamant and hardest steel. In that light we see an eternal progression towards omniscience; in that purity, the goodness of a divine nature; in that indestructibility, an immortal existence; in that progress, a steady ascension towards the home and bosom of God.—Hall's Jour. of Health.

Note.—We give the foregoing article to our readers on account of the interesting facts it contains—not to commend the unscriptural, and hence untruthful, speculations concerning man's "higher qualities" and his relation to a future life which are found in the closing paragraph. See editorial columns for further comments.—Editor.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Follow thou Me.

BY HORATIUS BONAR, D. D.

Restore to me the freshness of my youth,
And give me back my soul's keen edge again,
What time has blunted! O, my early truth—
Shall I not you regain?
Ah, mine has been a wasted life at best,
All unreality and long unrest;
Yes, I have lived in vain!

But now no more in vain;—my soul, awake,
Shake off the snare, untwist the fastening chain:
Arise, go forth, the selfish slumber break,
Thy idle dreams restrain!
Still half thy life before thee lies untrod,
Live for the endless living, live for God!—
I must not live in vain!

My God, the way is rough and sad the night,
And my soul faints and breathes this weeping strain:
And the world hates me with its bitterest spite—
For I have left its train,
With thee and with thy saints to cast my lot:
Ah, my dear Lord—let me not be forgot,
Let me not live in vain!

Can we not part in silence, since forever?
This world and I? From scorn and taunt refrain?
Must it still hate and wound? still stir the fever
Of this poor throbbing brain?
Ah, yes, it must be so, my God, my God,
'Tis the true discipline, the needed rod,
Else I should live in vain!

The foe is strong—his venomed rage I dread,
Yet, O my God, do thou his wrath restrain;
Shield me in battle, soothe my aching head
In the sharp hour of pain;
But more than this, O, give me toiling faith,
Large-hearted love and zeal unto the death!
Let me not live in vain!

Restore me to the freshness of my youth,
And give me back my soul's keen edge again;
Ah! let my spring return! bright hope and truth,
Shall I not you regain?
No wasted life, my God, shall mine now be,
Hours, days, and years filled up with toil for thee,
I shall not live in vain.

The Least One in the Kingdom.

BY P. R. ARMSTRONG.

"Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."—MATT. 11: 11.

The text we have chosen for examination is considered by many a difficult passage, and various and often absurd have been the opinions formed in relation to it. My own view, when a member of the Methodist church, some twenty years ago, was rather indefinite, but something like the following: I thought the kingdom was already established in heaven, and that perhaps the least, or most ignorant immortal soul there, was greater than the mightiest prophet or apostle while tabernacling in flesh. The learned Albert Barnes, although an advocate of what we term the "natural immortal soul theory," is, we think, a step in advance of my old view. He says in his notes on this passage:—"The phrase, 'kingdom of heaven,' is used in many senses; it here probably means, in preaching the kingdom of God, or the gospel." He further says:—"It could hardly be affirmed of the obscurest and most ignorant christian, that he had clearer views than Isaiah or John; but of the apostles of the Savior, of the first preachers who were with him, and who heard his instructions, it might be said that they had more correct apprehensions than any of the ancient prophets or John."

We have abandoned our old view some eighteen years ago, and have quoted the above note, not for the purpose of using strictures thereon, or to denounce other men's views, (his using the word "probably" shows the writer is scarcely satisfied with his own comment) but to show how we may honestly differ, and to incite at the same time a spirit of inquiry in the minds of the waiting church to trim their lamps, and examine the chart that shall guide us to the haven of eternal blessedness and life.

To understand this passage, it will be necessary to examine briefly the greater part of the chapter with which it is connected. The previous chapter speaks of Christ sending out his disciples to reiterate the proclamation made by John, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" but he strictly limited this proclamation to the cities and people of Israel; showing conclusively it was for them to accept or reject the kingdom offered them. It was known by the foreknowledge of God that they would reject it; (if the kingdom was at hand to the whole world spiritually, there was no need of any restriction to Judea); but it was necessary for their condemnation that the kingdom in due form, as predicted by their prophets, should be offered them. Therefore, to agree with the prophecy of Isaiah and Malachi, it was necessary for the Messiah, or King, to be heralded by a forerunner like Elijah, (who was a reformer of the errors and vices of the nation); but, as John did not claim to be the identical person of Elijah—although a great body of the common people were persuaded, by his fasting, sanctity and earnest teaching, that he was a prophet—yet, no doubt, the rulers caused the people to stumble at his frank avowal that he was not Elijah, and thus prepared the way to reject the Son of God, of whom he was to them the forerunner.

John had now fulfilled his mission in announcing the Savior, and was cast into prison; (see 2d verse); but he had not succeeded in bringing a people to the standard of repentance and love which the fulfillment of the prophecies demands preparatory to the setting up of the kingdom, and which, no doubt, he expected to accomplish; and hence, with desponding hopes and depressed feelings, while immured in the prison of his own country, he began to doubt (as any of us would) the truthful issue of his own mission, as well as that of his Lord's, (who had come to his own, and his own received him not); and in the anxiety of his mind he sends two of his disciples to inquire again of the Savior, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" after having the most undisputed evidence at his baptism and elsewhere. Such is the weakness of poor human nature when it meets with reverses in its expectations. But John acted wisely, and, instead of giving himself up as a prey to his doubts and fears, he sends to the Savior. Jesus at once sees the condition of his mind, and, instead of rebuking him for unbelief, or simply asserting he was the Christ, his tender feelings flowed out in his answer. He well knew what kind of an answer would most comfort him, and adverts to the scriptural proof of his Messiahship, and says, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me." What a catalogue of facts to sustain the faith of the poor desponding prisoner! John suffered death shortly afterwards for the cause of truth, and we have no doubt these kind words of the Savior sealed his faith for the trying scene.

After the disciples of John had departed, Jesus began to address the multitude on the subject of John's mission, which brings us to the words of our text; and we are going to prove, to a logical demonstration, that the "least one" (or small one) spoken of, is to be a forerunner like unto John, but who will meet with better success, and fulfill the scriptures, which, through the unbelief of the Jewish nation, John failed in doing. If the seventh and eighth verses, from the clause which reads, "What went ye out into the wilderness for to see?" etc., together with John's despondency and facts in the case, do not prove the total failure of John's preaching to prepare a people, and bring them to the standard of love and unity which the scriptures demand, (and which must needs have taken place if Christ had set up his kingdom then,) we confess we are incapable of understanding the import of scripture testimony.

One of the characteristics of John's preaching to prepare a people for the kingdom was this: "If any man have two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise." Who will pretend anything like this was effected? There is no record of it in an individual case, much less by any considerable body of people. The great preacher of this christian love doctrine was thrown into prison and beheaded; while his Lord, the Savior of the world, wandered unnoticed and uncared for by the rich worldlings of Judea, exclaiming, "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." And that Christ foresaw and alluded to John's and his own mission to the Jews as abortive, is evident from what follows the text. At the 16th verse he says, "Whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like children sitting in the markets, and calling to their fellows, and saying, we have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented." He compares the rulers of the Jews who controlled the common people to the obstinacy and inconsistency oftentimes manifested in children; while a portion wished to play, their fellows opposed with a stubborn firmness any form of play they propose. Thus with the Jews. They professed to be looking for their Messiah, and John came preaching fasting, with self-denial and repentance, to the ushering in of the kingdom; but they objected to his manner of teaching, and accused him of having a devil—perhaps for assuming an office which they would wish to make appear could only be fulfilled by the literal return of Elijah from heaven. They could accommodate and mystify every other text of scripture to suit their purposes but that of Malachi; and we think it would have made but little difference in their faith if it had been Elijah himself, if he had preached the same christian love doctrine that John did. And how much better some of our modern pharisaical rulers would act, under the same circumstances, we will leave our readers to judge. But the Son of man came preaching the same kingdom at hand, eating and drinking, or with a desire to usher it in with joy; but they construed his good will towards them into the basest motives, and pronounced him a glutton, a wine-bibber, and a friend of publicans and sinners. Neither mourning nor dancing satisfied them, and the mission of John was to them no more than a reed shaken with the wind. He commenced preaching in the wilderness, as we think is predicted of the ultimate forerunner of the Savior; but they were not lured there in fulfillment of Hos. 2: 14—out of a sincere desire to practice the love doctrine taught by John, but out of idle curiosity to see a man clothed in soft raiment, and to counteract, by cavil and gainsaying, the truths spoken by this self-denying man. And we are not to understand, when the Savior speaks of him as a reed shaken by the wind, he is alluding to his weak and vacillating faith because he sent for fresh evidence of his Messiahship, but to the utter failure of his mission through their unbelief, and hence he says, John was the Elias "which was for to come, if they would receive it;" but, as they rejected him as such, another should arise before his last advent—"a least" or, as the Syriac version has it, "a small one," who would be greater than John, and would prepare a people for his coming. We are aware this position cannot be established from this chapter; but to do so, we will commence with the text, and follow its connections through the teachings of our Lord, and leave it with the candid judgment of our readers for their decision.

Our Lord, in speaking of the kingdom, although he uses the present tense, is evidently calling things that are not as though they were, (see Rom. 4: 17,) and anticipates the order of it. We contend the phrase "kingdom of heaven," is not used in many senses as some affirm, but always means the plain import of the term, and comprises a king, subordinate rulers, subjects and territory. It is true, it is sometimes used in connection with the preparation of subjects for it, as in Rom. 14: 17, which reads, "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost;" that is, such feelings will actuate the participants of the kingdom, instead of a discussion about meats and drinks. And we see no reason for quoting this text to prove a visionary, spiritual kingdom set up in the heart, subversive of the true literal kingdom we now again proclaim at hand.

Again, Luke 17: 21, "the kingdom is within you," is also quoted to prove a spiritual kingdom; but it will not bear examination. The words were used in answer to the proud Pharisees, and we do not understand it to mean within their hearts, but within their acceptance as a nation. This was before Christ had rode into Jerusalem as king; they had not as yet absolutely rejected him; but they despised his humble pretensions, and were looking for some gorgeous and supernatural manifestations of kingly glory, which accorded better with their proud feelings; and hence our Lord warns them against this, and says the kingdom of God cometh not with such observations, for their king was among them, in their midst, and about to offer himself to them as such. And he might have here added, as he did on another occasion, if you reject me, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you (not out of their hearts, for it never existed there,) as a nation, and given to a people bringing forth fruit thereof; and the balance of my mission will be to weep over your approaching desolation, and die for the future life of the seed of faith of all nations, as well as the elect of the house of Israel. And, in the fullness of times, he would raise up another forerunner, proclaiming the kingdom again at hand to the "Lo-ammi," or the offcasts of Ephraim, (or spiritual Israel.) And the Jews, instead of being first, would be the last to inherit the kingdom, excepting such as complied with the terms of the gospel; but as a nation the vail would remain on their hearts down through their long dispersion, and till the Redeemer should come out of Zion and turn away their blindness.

But to return to our subject. There is one more phrase we wish to examine in relation to the kingdom before we pass this part of our text. It is found in John 18: 36, and is supposed by some to teach a kingdom in the heart, or in heaven, or at least not in this world. It reads as follows:—"My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence." The objectors to a literal kingdom, with much assurance, quote the first clause of this verse, but take care to avoid the qualifying part. When our Lord used these words, it was after the Jews had rejected him as king, and he had told them the kingdom was taken from them, and that Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and hence says, first, "My kingdom is not of this world"—that is, not like the kingdoms of this world. Whereas worldly kings gather armies, and fight for a selfish, tyrannical mastery, his was to be a kingdom of love and peace; but since the Jews had rejected him, his kingdom was not now from hence, yet implying it would be when the times of the Gentiles were fulfilled.

We will next inquire what we are to understand by the least one in the kingdom. From our Lord's subsequent teaching, he evidently means the most meek and lowly, or, the one that approached nearest his own character for meekness, should be the greatest in his kingdom. He certainly did not mean that John should be less than the least in holiness and faith, for that would shut him out of the kingdom; but, as it is rendered from the Syriac, "the small one in the kingdom is (should be) greater than he"—greater in authority, which agrees with his other teachings. See Matt. 18: 4. First he says, "except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." And then adds, "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." Here he uses the future and present tense as synonymous, as is the case in our text, and proves to a demonstration that, while all must become as little children in some sense to enter at all, the humblest should be the greatest. We do not understand our Lord to mean the most ignorant humble, but the one who could bear the most wisdom and yet maintain the most meekness. Our first parents, as soon as they had eaten of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, found entailed upon themselves a species of pride and independence of their God which caused them to hide from his presence. Knowledge without grace always begets pride; and the best of men, as they advance in knowledge, without much prayer and watchfulness, will become bigoted, and are apt to think more of themselves than they should, and look down on their brethren of humble attainments, if not with contempt, with a feeling of superior worth, which they feel should command their respect, and their silence in opposing their views.

Again, let us examine Matt. 23: 12. "And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Here is the same doctrine teaching that the humblest or meekest one shall be the greatest. We have not space to enlarge here on loving the vain titles of men with which this text is connected, but pass to notice Luke 22: 24. "And there was also a strife among them (his disciples) which of them should be accounted greatest." This was on the last sorrowful night preceding the day of our Lord's suffering and death; and his disciples, so far as yet from having the meek spirit of love, as taught by the forerunner of our Lord, and himself also, just in view of their Lord's death, instead of partaking of the sorrow which burdened his soul, commenced a selfish dispute which of them should be the greatest in his kingdom. How painful it must have been to the Savior, on this trying occasion, to have to instruct them again in the first principles of his gospel, which was to love and esteem each other better than themselves. The Savior at once rebuked them, though in love; it seems he did not accuse them of the hardness of their hearts, and their lack of sympathy for him in view of his suffering; he did not use harsh, impatient language at their dullness to receive and practice his glorious law of love; but changed the form of his former precept to become as a little child to obtain this high calling for which they strove, and draws a contrast to show how different his kingdom of peace and love should be from that of the Gentile governments of earth; the officers of which, oftentimes through much contention and blood, obtained their positions of honor and profit, and, after having obtained high places, they exercised a tyrannical lordship over their subjects. But in His kingdom the rulers would be actuated by a different spirit; they must, who received these high places of favor with their Lord, acquire such a meek spirit of love that they will feel more like serving than lording; and therefore there should be no cause for contending for high places in a kingdom where all is love, and the only way to obtain the highest position was by pursuing the most humble and unassuming course—the very opposite from that which their selfish passions dictated; and he who strove with a gentile spirit for a high place, instead of being exalted, should be abased. And to confirm this doctrine of love service of the rulers of his kingdom, he says, Luke 12: 37, speaking of himself, though Lord of all, "Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that He shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them." Blessed be God for the promise of such a kingdom! Who but the Son of the God of love could practice such condescension? This heavenly principle is not to be found among the lords of earth, and the very record of such promised condescension bears the impress of divinity and truth.

We will next examine Luke 12: 42, to show that this least, though greatest one, is, like John, a forerunner of Christ. "Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing. Of a truth, I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath." These are the words of our Lord, and are recorded in two of the Gospels; and we think a distinctive forerunner is sustained by the whole volume of the book of God, and that we have shown heretofore and can show more clear prophecies corroborating this prospective fact. And further, we think that this forerunner must succeed, by the operating spirit and power of God, to bring the waiting Bride, or church, to the standard of love or christian charity which was the object and aim of John, and which succeeded temporally and typically under the apostles at Jerusalem.

To sum up the evidence we have adduced on our position, we make our statement thus: Our text proves, First, that, although John, as the forerunner of Christ, had none to exceed him, yet the smallest in the kingdom (speaking in prospective) should be greater than he. Second. From Matt. 18: 4, we show that this least one is he who, like a little child, approaches nearest the character of our Lord in humility and meekness, and is therefore exalted to be the greatest. Third. From Luke 12: 42, we show that the greatest, or chief ruler next the king, is a forerunner, who prepares a people for his coming,—which makes a very simple algebraic equation to solve, as follows: The least one is the greatest; the greatest is a forerunner; therefore, the least one mentioned in connection with John must be a forerunner like John. Consequently, when the mother of the apostles James and John applied to our Lord for this first position for her sons, he, foreseeing they could not attain to it, could not promise it to them; his Father having, in his foreknowledge, foreordained it in fulfillment of his promises (we think) to the issue of Joseph through the line of Ephraim, and adds an important link to the chain of internal evidence which confirms the truth of God's word.

We are aware that all will not see our remarks in the light and with the force we do; and we shall love those none the less who love the appearing of the Savior, and cannot see as we do. We merely assert that these are our honest convictions of truth as we understand the passages we have quoted. We make no pretensions to more wisdom than those who have preceded us in theological knowledge, but believe the things of the kingdom will be better understood as the kingdom approaches, and rest our pretensions on the assurance given us by our Lord in the context—"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight."

That the day of the Lord and his coming kingdom are nigh at hand, we have no scriptural doubt. Perilous times are upon us, both political and in the guise of religion. Satan is transforming himself into an angel of light, to seduce if possible the very elect. In every crisis of the world's history God has raised up some one to lead his people, and exercise a faith to condemn the unbelief, not only of the world, but those also who are trying to serve two masters. But who shall be this mighty man of valor? Who is it that has enough moral courage to come out on the bare word of the Lord, in the face of every opposition, and attempt to gather a living bride to greet the Savior? Who will break through the uncircumcised host of opposers, and plant the standard of Love on the battlements of the stronghold of Zion? When and where will the angel ascend to, from the east, to seal the servants of God in their foreheads? May the Lord hasten the preparation of his Bride and his kingdom of Love, where the chief rulers delight in serving the co-heirs of the kingdom, and the only revenue exacted will be the tribute of reciprocated love. What a glorious era! What a reversion from the present order of things! O, glorious change! O, transporting thought! Well might the apostle reiterate the words of the prophet, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath the heart of man conceived, what God hath prepared for those who love and wait for him." These promises are truly worth contending for, worth suffering for, worth praying for. Then why is it not the response of every heart,—"Thy kingdom come?" "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Choose thy immortal cabinet of rulers, and reign over us forevermore.

War: What is the Christian's Duty?

While a "war-spirit" is not the spirit of Christianity, we are not among those who suppose no cause can exist justifying the taking up arms by the civil magistrates; and hence it may be a Christian duty to aid in some way those magistrates in carrying on a war. No duty is more clearly laid down, even in the New Testament, than that of obedience to rulers. See Rom. 13: 1–7; also 1 Pet. 2: 13—"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well: for so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men," etc. Our Lord, both by precept and example, sanctioned paying "tribute" to the civil authorities; commanding to "render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's." Paul commanded, "Let every soul be subject to the authorities of magistracy: for there is no authority which is not of God: and the authorities which exist are established by God: he therefore who opposeth the authority, opposeth the establishment of God; and they who oppose them, shall receive judgment." Syriac of Rom. 13: 1, 2.

It were easy to multiply similar testimony, but the samples we have given are sufficient to show that Christians are bound by Christianity to show themselves loyal to civil magistrates and rulers under whom God has cast their lot: not to do so, is to forfeit their Christian character. That individual revenge, or the taking our wrongs into our own private hands, and not leaving them in the hands of the magistrate, is unchristian, there can be no doubt: and where rulers command to do that which is plainly forbidden of God, we may and ought to suffer, unresistingly, the pains or penalties they may inflict rather than disobey God, whose law is supreme, as in the case of the three Hebrews, commanded to worship Nebuchadnezzar's image.

In promulgating the Gospel, "carnal weapons" are forbidden; but such is not the case in protecting ourselves against unlawful assaults upon our lives as citizens. Paul often appealed to the civil magistrate for protection against such assaults. We may note one case as illustrating all others, recorded in Acts 23. More than forty Jews had banded together to kill Paul. Information of the fact came to him by his sister's son. He immediately sent this young man to the "chief captain" to seek the protection of the "powers that be;" that power was a "war" power. That military officer provided forthwith "two hundred soldiers, three score and ten horsemen, and two hundred spearmen," to convey Paul beyond the reach of those blood-thirsty Jews. Was that a "war-spirit" invoked by the apostle? Would he have told his military escort, if attacked by the forty Jews, You must not fight: take care you do not hurt them, if they fall upon me in the way! Would Paul have given place to such monstrous folly?

The government which gives protection to christians, and secures their right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences, has a right to expect the support of those Christians. None can doubt but the Gospel requires them to pay tribute to such government; and if, it requires this tribute to sustain war, and Christians are bound to pay it, may it not also call them to active service in that war? and if it becomes necessary, may not a Christian man, put forth his arm to defend that government against any and all enemies who may attempt to overthrow it by brute force? If Christians should conclude gratitude to God for privileges they enjoy under that government demanded them to defend it by arms, at its call, we believe it might be a Christian duty to obey.

So far as a "war-spirit" is concerned, it is equally manifested in the civil magistracy with its machinery to punish criminals, or invaders of private or social rights, as in what is called war in defence of national rights, or lawful government. If, then, it would not be unchristian to aid magistrates in arresting and punishing the violators of personal rights—which is war on the transgressor—so neither can it be wrong to aid the highest Magistrate of a nation in executing the constitutional laws of that nation, even though it involves "bearing the sword" to accomplish it. He that denies this, should equally denounce all police arrangements in our cities or villages, which are a war power against transgressors: house-breakers, incendiaries and midnight assassins should not be molested by Christians, because that would be "a war-spirit!" All they "want is to be let alone." Does Christianity require such a pusillanimous course? Let Paul's example, to which we have referred, and his teaching of obedience to magistrates, answer.

We have felt called to say thus much by what we have seen in some of our exchanges. "If possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." Rom. 12: 18. If war must come, and Christians feel themselves called to take up arms to repel assaults on lawful government—deeming it better to sustain such government than to have anarchy—let them not give place to revenge, or a desire to gratify private animosity, but to promote the public good. It may be necessary to fight for peace. Let us not judge those Christians who think such a duty devolves on them.

A more holy man of God than JOHN FLETCHER, Vicar of Madely, England, has seldom blest the world. He lived in the last century. In remarks on "The Bible and the Sword," he notices an objection drawn from the Gospel being a Gospel of peace. He says:

"Our Lord, who said to his apostles that a kind of raging spirit goeth not out but by fasting and prayer, said also to them: 'He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords: and he said, It is enough.' Luke 22: 36, 38. I grant, that when Peter drew his sword, and [rashly] struck a servant of the high priest, Jesus said unto him, Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword [to use it rashly, as thou dost, without any order, and without the least probability of success] shall perish with the sword,' Matt. 26: 52. From the whole of this evangelical account, it appears that our Lord allows his followers the use of the sword; and that he only blames it when it is precipitate, and likely to answer no other end than that of throwing the triumphant friends of vice into a greater rage."

To say war is absolutely prohibited by the Gospel, is the same as to say, "All human government is prohibited;" or that the civil magistrate has no right to "bear the sword." If we had only Christians to deal with, the matter would be different; but if men rise up to overthrow the ruling power of a constitutional government by force, having themselves been represented in that government, they place themselves in the position of a war power, and Christianity condemns them.

We look for a kingdom of peace, and pray that it may soon come; but we are mortal yet, and earthly despots would take away peace from the earth to establish a reign of terror for their own aggrandizement; but such despots shall be broken in pieces: whether God will do it by a direct act of his power, or use human instrumentality to accomplish it, we cannot tell. Hitherto he has used the latter for the most part. Whatever part we may be called to act, let us watch and pray, remembering our only safety is in God and his providence. Undue excitement is not safe, whatever be the subject. It is just as hurtful in religion as in any thing else. Let us calmly rely on God in all things. So will it be well with us, come what may.

THE MYSTERY OF MUSIC.—What a mystery is music!—invisible, yet making the eye shine; intangible, yet making all the nerves vibrate; floating between earth and heaven; falling upon this world as if a strain from that above, ascending to that as a thank-offering from this. It is God's gift, and it is too lofty for anything but his praise! too much the immortal to be made the minister of sinful pleasure; too clearly destined to mount upwards to be used for inclining hearts to earth. Oh! that the churches knew how to make singing a joy, [illegible] a song of faith, as well as [illegible] of righteousness [illegible]

THE WORLD'S CRISIS. WHOLE NO. 298.

For the Crisis.

The Company of the two or three met together in the name of the Lord.

Earth has its palaces and riches, its stately mansions and splendors, its gathering concourse of the mighty and the great, its companies of kings and princes, of crowned heads and monarchies. But what are these, with all their show and parade, their momentary lustre and fleeting brilliancy, to be compared with the little company of the two or three who have met together in the name of the Lord, with the full expectation of having his majesty mingle in their midst! There is no sight, we think, so full and commensurate with joy and gladness, this side of the world of glory, where the Eternal holds his throne, and saints and angels join in concert, in their songs of praise to Him who sitteth thereon, equal to the circle of humble worshippers who have met, in truth and sincerity, to talk with God, to hold audience with the blessed Redeemer, who has bought them with his blood, and, according to his own arrangement, has appointed to be with them at every coming together, when they shall meet to invoke his presence.

Then why is it, with the guarantee of the Savior himself, to be present with his children at every season of waiting upon his name, that we should often be so slow in leaving the business or the pleasures of the world, in order to enjoy this most precious and exalted privilege. This is never the case with the new-born soul just merging out of nature's darkness into the luminous light of the glorious gospel of the Son of God. All, then, is life and animation, peace and joy, with a continual desire to be near the object of their love, that they may pour out their full soul in praise and adoration before him. And whenever this ceases to be the case with us, should we not entertain great fears lest we are in a good degree losing the savor of our first love, and are in danger of grieving the Holy Spirit, and lessening our influence for holiness over those with whom we mingle. With sorrow of heart we are made to know and feel that this is the condition with thousands who have professed Christ; and hence our churches are small and dwarfish in their christian graces, faint and feeble in point of strength, exerting but little of that high toned and holy influence expected from the professed members of Christ's mystical body. And all this drought and barrenness, this apathy and leanness of soul, for want of spiritual relish to enjoy that sweet and conscious communion that is known and realised in the faithful performance of duty in the closet, around the fireside, and in the prayer meeting where the two or three have met together in the name of the Lord.

O, will not all those who feel in their hearts that they have suffered great and incalculable loss in their spiritual enjoyments, wake up, as out of sleep, and bind their heavenly armor more closely around them, and never again, where God commands, fail to obey. Let us no longer be found attaching small or minor importance to the place where Christ will deign to visit, and has chosen as the point where he will exhibit the special manifestation of his spiritual presence, but may we be found saying with the Psalmist, "I was glad when they said let us go up to the house of the Lord, my feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem;" that thus we may realize with him, that "a day in thy courts is better than a thousand," "and I had rather be a door keeper in thy house than to dwell in the tents of wickedness."

A Letter.

Bro. Grant:—Once more I send you a brief epistle from the City of Brotherly Love. When I addressed you last, I was at Vienna, Warren Co., N. J., I think. I returned to Philadelphia shortly after, and found the city in a state of intense excitement. I need not describe it, as it is the same everywhere. O, how eager men are to rally in support of the star-spangled banner, and to shed their blood, if necessary, in its defense, while so few are willing to enlist under the banner of Prince Immanuel! Thousands of professed christians have taken the sword (to perish by it perhaps), and, with feelings of hatred to the "rebels," they rush madly into the conflict. It cannot be denied that there are many, very many in the Southern army who are as good christians as many in the Northern army, and it is painful to think of these men shedding each others' blood, when their Master has said, "it is better to save life than to destroy it." The christian who believes that the kingdoms of this world must become the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that they must crumble and fall to pieces, cannot consistently take part in this conflict; for if this country as well as all others must fall, it is useless to attempt to save it. But then the question arises, is this positively to be the case? May not this be only judgments on the people for their sins? and when sufficiently [illegible]

[illegible] unlikely necessary if it ever will. We are commanded to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. What are these events but the precursors of the "great day of God Almighty?" "Coming events cast their shadows before." The last page of this world's history is being written. Soon the Almighty pen will inscribe the "end"; and what then?

But I am occupying too much space. I did not intend to say anything on this subject. I wanted to say a few words about the "cause" here. Yesterday afternoon Bro. Stuart, from 9th and Spring Garden, spoke at our little place (1605 Thompson street) on the "Atonement." He gave a very instructive and edifying discourse to a good, attentive audience. He was led, in the course of his remarks, to speak on the sleep of the dead and absurdity of the dogma of Orthodoxy—that people are dead and alive at the same time—that people, instead of going into the grave, ascend up to heaven. He spoke of the high priest of the Jewish economy, in entering the Holy of Holies alone, as typical of Christ, who has entered alone into the presence of God to make a reconciliation for us. I wish more of our preaching brethren would visit that little band of christians. There are many who hear our views nowhere else, and perhaps if they were presented by strangers, they would be received more readily than they would be from Eld. Conrad or myself. We are sorry that we are unable to accommodate any of the brethren with a home, as there are but few of us, and all very poor. Will some Apollos come and water what has been planted, and we will do what we can. There are some half dozen places in the city where advent truths are taught. I do not think the cause is losing ground.

I would like to say a few words in behalf of Bro. Reimer and his "German" tract. Bro. R. is fully capable of writing a good tract, and he will produce a work which will do an immense amount of good. The necessity of a work of this kind cannot be denied by any one who is acquainted with the number and intelligence of the Germans in this country. They, as a general thing, reject the doctrine of eternal misery, and consequently fall into the other extreme of Universalism, or into infidelity. Now I think that no one can engage in a more laudable enterprise, and one that promises so much good fruit, as that of assisting Bro. Reimer in this good work. He needs assistance; brethren, help him. I suggest these thoughts without the knowledge of Bro. R. My address is, for the present, No. 31 South 18th Street, Philadelphia, care of Eld. John Conrad.

Yours in the faith,

Thos. W. Smith.

Prepare for a New Earth.

How few men really believe that they sojourn on a whirling globe, and that each day and year of life is measured by its revolutions, regulating the labor and repose of every race of beings. How few believe that the great luminary of the firmament, whose restless activity they daily witness, is an immovable star, controlling by its solid mass, the primary planets which compose our system, and forming the gnomon of the great dial which measures the thread of life, the tenure of empires, and the great cycles of the world's change. How few believe that each of the millions of stars—those atoms of light which the telescope can scarcely descry—are the centres of planetary systems that may equal, if not surpass our own. And how very few believe that the solid pavement of the globe, upon which they daily slumber, is an elastic crust, imprisoning fires and forces which have often burst forth in tremendous energy, and are at this instant struggling to escape—now finding their way in volcanic fires—now heaving and shaking the earth—now upraising islands and continents, and gathering strength for that final outburst which is to usher in the new heavens and the new earth, "wherein dwelleth righteousness." Were these great physical truths objects of faith as well as deductions of reason, we should lead a better life than we do, and make a quicker preparation for its close.—Eng. Quar. Rev.

Watch and Pray.

"In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee," (set my prayer in order for thee,) "and will look up." Psa. 5: 3. There is here a beautiful allusion to the Mosaic ritual, which is unavoidably lost in a translation. The Hebrew verb is the technical term used in the Old Testament to signify the act of arranging the wood upon the altar, Gen. 22: 9, Lev. 1: 7, and the showbread on the table. Exod. 40: 23; Lev. 24: 6, 8. It therefore necessarily suggests the idea of prayer as an oblation, here described as a morning sacrifice to God. And I will look out, or watch for an answer to my prayers. The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 5, 1861.

Misapprehension Corrected.

The Harbinger of May 29th contained the following editorial:—

"Unkind, Very.—The following editorial paragraph appeared in the Crisis, of last week:

☞ 'Our first editorial (written before our "Salutatory") consisted of three paragraphs, with the caption, "Where are we?" The Harbinger copies the last two paragraphs, under the heading, "Distress of Nations," and gives credit to the "London Review!" Try again, Bro. Newman—but do not tell us this was an oversight, for we perfectly understand that already.'

Does the above exhibit that 'brotherly-kindness' which should characterise all our intercourse with one another? Does it show 'meekness' to tauntingly say, 'Try again, Bro. Newman?' We think that if Bro. W. had reflected a little, he would not have used such language. If we did him or his editorial any injustice, would it not have shown the 'spirit of Christ' to write us privately, in accordance with the rule (Matt. 18: 15,) laid down by our Lord, and let us correct it? We certainly think he should have done so. We intended no injustice. But as we are told not to say it 'was an oversight,' we refer the reader to the whole article in question, found in another column of this paper, which shows Bro. Wendell's 'first editorial' unabridged. Was it a thing so wrong for us to copy that which he copied?"

To the foregoing, as soon as we had perused it, we replied as follows, by mail:—

"Boston, May 30, 1861.

Dear Bro. Newman:—The Harbinger of yesterday has just come to hand, and my heart is pained with your article headed, 'Unkind, Very.' You have misapprehended in toto the purpose and spirit of the paragraph which has elicited your remarks; and I pray you to give this note a place in your next issue, that I may not stand in a false light before your readers. Writing this in great haste, my explanation must be brief: my statements shall express the exact truth in the premises, and need only to be believed, to relieve me from the imputation of unbrotherly conduct.

1. I cared nothing about the 'oversight,' and did not dream of dignifying it with the name of 'injustice.' 2. The Lord is my witness that I had no more thought of wounding your feelings, or casting a reflection upon you, than I had of visiting Seneca Falls for the purpose of setting fire to your dwelling. 3. Had the matter to which I called attention caused the slightest feeling in my mind, I would have promptly informed you of it 'privately,' and said nothing about it in the paper. Permit me to add (not boastingly) that those who know me best, will bear witness that this is the inflexible rule of my life. 4. The paragraph which you characterize as 'unkind,' was designed simply to call your attention to a fact—not a grievance, and I supposed it was customary (innocently so, too) for christian brethren of the editorial fraternity to do such things in their papers. If I erred herein, my inexperience should shield me from censure. 5. My remark—'do not tell us this was an oversight, for we perfectly understand that already,' was written in perfect sincerity and good faith; it was intended, not only to prevent your taking the trouble to explain what needed no explanation, but to 'exhibit that "brotherly kindness" which should characterize all our intercourse with one another.' Yes, my brother, I meant it for an expression of affection and confidence, and have only to regret that it appeared to you in precisely the opposite light. 6. The expression, 'Try again, Bro. Newman,' was the offspring of the same kind feeling, and was a pleasant hint to a brother Typo (for you know I learned the Printer's trade in early life) to be a little more careful in 'giving credit.' 'To tauntingly say' this, would be a sin deserving rebuke; but I did not say it thus, and hence evinced no departure from 'the spirit of Christ.' 7. It was neither 'so wrong' nor 'wrong' at all for you 'to copy that which' I 'copied,' but it was a mistake (nothing more) for you 'to copy' as from the 'London Review' that which I did not 'copy' but wrote myself.

I feel myself drawn more closely to you in christian bonds by the circumstances that call forth this disclaimer. May God bless you, is my prayer; may his grace sustain you in your toilsome and self-sacrificing labors. Yours, in Hope of Eternal Life,

Rufus Wendell."

Our motive in giving the above a place in our paper is two-fold:—1. If the paragraph which caused grief to our brother of the Harbinger, was in like manner misconstrued by others who do not see that paper, we desire that the injurious impression may be removed from their minds. 2. We wish all whom we are endeavoring to serve in our new capacity to know how heartily we agree with our esteemed cotemporary touching the spirit of meekness and love "which should characterize all our intercourse with one another."

God helping us, our purpose is, never to write a single word for these columns that shall have even the appearance of having been prompted by a spirit of bitterness or unkindness; and we shall feel grateful to those who will point out any departure, on our part, from this principle. One who learned lessons of heavenly wisdom from the Master's own lips has left us these precious words of counsel—"be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing." 1 Pet. 3: 8, 9. May Divine favor prepare us all for the promised inheritance.

Our "New Employment."

Rufus Wendell, our old friend, has been called to the Editorial department of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass. Success to him in his new employment: he will find it laborious and difficult enough to exercise all his strength and grace; nevertheless, we hope he may not faint in the trial. We cannot judge of his ability, editorially, as only his first number has come to hand, but presume he will do as well as circumstances will permit.—Bible Examiner.

We thank our "old friend," the Editor of the Examiner, for his good wishes, and trust there is something prophetic in his "hope" that we "may not faint in the trial." We do "find" our "new employment laborious and difficult enough to exercise all" our "strength and grace," and our wish is to continue in it not a day longer than is pleasing to the Lord and for his glory. We know of nothing in the "circumstances" that surround us that should cripple the exercise of what little "ability" we possess. We had not the editorial chair offered us with a pair of shackles as an accompaniment: had the latter been tendered, the former would have been respectfully declined. As we understand it, we are here untrammeled, and are expected to do the best we can—not for any society, party, or clique, but for the cause of our Life-Giver and Lord, whom we hope ere long to be with "in his glory." There is an Editorial Committee to counsel and direct us when counsel and direction are needed. The existence of such a committee is not regarded by us as a burden but a help, and our relations to the brethren composing it have thus far been of the most pleasing character.

Bro. White, being a near neighbor, runs into our sanctum frequently. While we are writing this, however, he is, we presume, getting ready to go to Hartford to preach in our place to-morrow and the Sunday following. For the sake of those people to whom he goes, we are glad—for the sake of those whom he leaves we ought, perhaps, to be sorry, but we are not; for if they cannot comfortably put up with our talk for two Sundays, they may at least learn to sympathize with certain brethren and sisters in the valley of the Connecticut who have only occasionally had any thing better for the last six months or more. But to return: Bro. W., as we have said, drops in frequently, and we are generally glad to see him. When we are too busy to be glad, we pass into his hands some of our fresh exchanges, and thus make him the gainer by our inability to be sociable. He does not seem much inclined to offer us advice, but we find it quite convenient to solicit the suggestions of his mature judgment.

Bro. Berick we only see once when we would be glad to see him ten times. He feels a deep interest in the success and welfare of the Crisis, and freely as well as frank-ly communicates his opinions on matters relating to its management. He does not deem it a sufficient reason for rejecting an article written for these columns, that it contains some sentiment which neither he nor we can endorse; and we suspect that a very large per-centage of our readers think on that point just as Bro. B. does.

The junior member of the Committee (though we see his name stands first in our columns) is H. L. Hastings, the one-man "Tract Society" of Providence. Our readers have heard of him; those who have seen him will not be likely to forget him until long beards become much more common than they now are! Well, Horace comes to town often, we suppose, (was here two or three times in May); always comes to see us, and shows a friendly interest in our welfare. He has hitherto manifested his interest in the Crisis, by writing for its columns on a somewhat extensive scale; and we have no signs of a falling off in that direction. His articles are generally acceptable, we believe, and we trust a coming Day will show that they have been in no small degree instrumental for good. We think Bro. H. may have sacrificed some of his popularity by extreme views on the salt question,—but just as this is happening, out comes a new book from his prolific pen: we mean "Thessalonica," of course, and we find a score to praise that, where there is one to censure his advocacy of a diet that is wanting in one "good" element. His last article on "Ministerial Rascality," has secured us already two new subscribers in the room of one which he says we lost by his first article on that subject. But we have digressed wonderfully, and have made this article very much longer than we dreamed of doing when we began.

In conclusion, we like our "circumstances" and hope they will "permit" us to be useful. [illegible]

Light for the Germans.

We publish below a letter from Bro. Reimer which will explain itself. His forthcoming work will be in (to us) an "unknown tongue," and we shall be no better able to speak of its merits when it comes to hand than we now are. The title of the book—"Life only through Christ"—has "the ring of the true metal," and we are solicitous that the work may be widely scattered among those for whose enlightenment it is prepared. Here, brethren, is an opportunity to carry our enterprise into a new field! Who will engage in the blessed work? It requires no knowledge of the German tongue to hand a German a work from which he or she may learn what is man's condition in death, and what his hope of a future life. Let our brother Reimer have the co-operation of our friends in every direction. Send orders to him at "No. 537 North 10th St., Philadelphia, Pa.," or to this office. Orders sent here will be filled when we receive the books.

Bro. Reimer writes as follows:—

Dear Bro. Wendell:—Next week one part of my German book, "Life only through Christ," will come out of print. Will you therefore be kind enough to advertise it in your next number of the "Crisis," and continue such advertisement until they are given out or sold away. The money which will be sent to me I shall invest for the next number of the book. The tract in question is: "What does the word of God say about the life of the 'righteous' after death? 1. What about the state between death and resurrection? 2. What about the condition after the resurrection?"

It will contain about 17 or 18 pages, and I think I can send them to any one, prepaid, at the rate of fifteen for $1, or 8 cts. a single copy. At the same time, any brother who is not able to pay for them, may get them without money if he only sends the postage.

The next tract, I think, will be on the question: "What is man according to the Holy Scripture?" As soon as the first tract is finished, I shall send you a pack of them, and you may dispose of them as you see fit. Your brother in Christ,

Philadelphia, May 31st, 1861.

Errata.

In Bro. White's first letter to Eld. Knapp, published in the Crisis of last week, the phrase, "who will be raised," near the end of the 4th paragraph, should read, "who will be saved." In the 9th paragraph an interpolated "not" makes Bro. W. talk nonsense: the sentence to which we allude reads correctly as follows:—"God affirms that he made man out of the dust; and if, as you say, this was the body which he made, then the Bible tells us the body is the man, or was the man, when God made him." Our erring type made the sentence close in this contradictory way—"then the Bible tells us the body was not the man, or was the man, when God made him!"

The former of the above errors was in the copy,—the latter, in the proof-reading. We begin with the present number to read all our proof "by copy," and hope in this way to prevent mistakes that would otherwise be unavoidable. Let our correspondents make their manuscript as faultless as they can, and we shall spare no pains to let it appear in as good shape as possible before our readers.

"War: What is the Christian's Duty?"—This able article on our first page, copied from the Bible Examiner for the present month, is from the pen of George Storrs. It discusses a question which current events in our land have rendered a practical one. The question is, withal, almost new, as compared with many others that have received our attention, and we believe our readers have no desire to have the subject brought before them in a one-sided manner. Several of our brethren have already presented their views on the subject, and we doubt not but that the article from the Examiner will be perused with interest and profit. "Let us," as our brother says, "calmly rely on God in all things. So will it be well with us, come what may."

☞ A brother writes us—"Some three weeks since I saw a notice in the Crisis that all papers sent to individuals free of charge, would be stopped unless they became actual subscribers."

Our brother misunderstood our "special notice," which, by the way, was intended only for our "personal friends." It will suffice to state now that by "actual subscribers," in that notice, we meant those who were regularly receiving the paper, without regard to their being on the free list or not.

"Wayside Gleanings."—This work can be had at this office; of Eld. J. Parry, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; and of H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. The wholesale price will be 50 cents, and the retail 75 cents including postage.

☞ Read "The Years of Childhood," by Henry Ward Beecher, [illegible]

☞ An apology is due to our readers [illegible]

Eld. M. Grant, of Boston, being on his tour to fill his Western appointments, called on us on Wednesday, and in the evening spoke with power and efficiency, in our new Hall, on the "Duty of Christians at the Present Day—the War Spirit," etc. We were glad of the opportunity of exchanging thoughts with him on this important subject, and exceedingly pleased to find him warning the church of God to beware of the blinding influences of the spirit of the times. We hope he will not disappoint us about returning in season to attend the coming Conference.—Harbinger, May 29th.

For the Crisis.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church."

I am thankful to the kind friends who have spoken good words concerning this last book which I have issued, and also to those who have ordered it and sent the money to pay for it. It is, however, as yet rather a burden. The sales are small and the times are hard, and I shall not get nearly as much for this edition as it has cost me in money, besides time and labor. It is, I think, one of the neatest volumes issued among us, thanks to the publishers. The price fixed by them is 75 cts., post paid, which is as cheap as other copyright works in that style are usually sold by publishers. I hope those who are able will obtain a copy of this neat edition.

I am, however, aware that with some even 75 cents is a large sum to pay for a book in these war times. Some also wish to circulate many copies, and can hardly do it at that rate. I myself wish to give many away, and have done so, but I can ill afford it at this price. Now, to accommodate this need, I have thought of issuing a cheap edition, similar in style to "Reasons for my Hope" and other books that I have issued in enameled paper covers. But I am not able to do this and keep them on hand long. The first edition is not yet paid for, and I do not want more on my hands than I can sell, or afford to give away. Now I propose to issue an edition, provided five hundred copies are subscribed for first. It will be on good type and paper, and stiff paper covers, and I will send it as follows to any address desired:—

1 copy,	post paid,	for	40 cts.
8 copies,	"	for	$1 00.
20 copies,	"	by express	$4.00
50 copies	"	"	$11.00
100 copies,	"	"	$20.00

Cash should be sent with the order, by draft, or in bankable Eastern money. (Western bills are useless now; I just sold a $5 bill a brother sent me from Illinois for $2.) Persons who will send half the pay for fifty or one hundred copies, with the order, can have the books sent if they will pay the rest within one month or two from the time the books are received.

Who will take hold of the work? One young brother has scattered nearly 200 "Reasons for my Hope." I trust they will do good. Now let me hear at once from all who will take "Thessalonica." I will send them to you, or to your friends, to ministers, to the poor, or any one you can name. Be sure and give your P. O., town, county and State, and, if by express, tell what express, in whose care, on what R. R., at what Depot. Let me hear from you at once, that I may know whether to print any, and, if so, how many.

Direct orders, which will be filled as soon as possible, to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

June 1, 1861.

"The Coming Conflict: With the inquiry,—Ought Christians to bear Arms?" By P. B. Morgan. A good discourse, hitting the nail on the head. I hope the brethren will scatter them by ten thousands.

I wish you also to read Bro. H. F. Carpenter's article, "Why not Fight?" in the Crisis for May 29th. It is a closely written and compact argument. Some will recollect the able article from the same writer, "Shall we join Ahab?" which showed the inconsistency of christians voting. Bro. C. can write consistently on the point. I have heard of persons who counsel voting but not fighting. They forget that there is a connection between the ballot box and the cartridge box. Voting loads the gun—fighting fires it off. If you vote in a government, you are bound to sustain it, right or wrong. Keep clear of the whole. "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight."

The Conference at Seneca Falls.

The Annual Meeting of the Western N. Y. General Association commences its session at Seneca Falls on Thursday evening of this week. Our beloved brother, D. T. Taylor, writing from Dansville, N. Y., in the last Harbinger, expresses his feelings concerning the conference in the following stirring words:—

"Brethren of Western New York, the time of your general convention is at hand. We are truly living in a grand and awful time. I hold my breath and stand in awe when I think of the future. Your deeds and words at the conference will tell upon that future, and their fruit be seen in the great tremendous day. Come to the meeting, one and all. Come praying. [illegible] Leave care at home. Leave hate, bickering and discord. Be united. Forget the world. Forget self. Labor for Him who once died for you, and for the souls he hath bought with his precious blood, and who must be saved very soon, or else forever perish. Would that I could be with you. Bro. Himes expects to be. I know you will have an excellent meeting if you keep the heart right with the Master and each other. There is no time now for aught else but work and love. The crown is nigh ready. God's rich blessing be with you all. I send fraternal greeting. Peace be with all the lovers of our soon expected King. Pray for one and mine. Yours in indissoluble bonds, D. T. Taylor."

Correspondence.

From Bro. Hiram R. Twing.

Bro. Wendell:—I am thankful that God has spared my poor, unprofitable life to see this day. O, how little I thought of what I must pass through when you were last at our quiet little house! I have been obliged to give up my shop and working at my trade on account of sickness. I have had some twelve years experience in disease and sickness, but I have been able to work most of the time. But now I am learning new lessons of Jesus from his word. Our former dwelling has been exchanged for a small, quiet chamber in the house of a friend; instead of working on harnesses, in my shop, I am employed in my chamber in studying lessons from Jesus, and in writing words of encouragement to my dear brethren. I have no reason to complain at my lot. I am learning lessons, practically, that I could not learn under different circumstances. One thing I miss very much, that is, the weekly prayer meeting. We used to have the meeting at our humble dwelling. O, how many times God has met his dear children in our old kitchen. The children used to love to come there; sometimes the room was too small, and another room was nearly filled. Bro. Miles Grant (God bless him) met with some of the dear children, at our house, a few evenings ago, and administered the Lord's Supper. O what a season! As Bro. G. opened the will of the Testator and read the legacies therein contained, our hearts, though sorrowful, were made glad. Yes, O yes, the will is still valid, and all the legacies therein contained can be [illegible], by the heirs, on presenting their claim in Jesus' name! O, what a treasure we have left us in this will! "In this life, a hundred fold, with persecution, and in the world to come, life everlasting." O, what a gift is life, eternal life! No more pain, or sorrow, or sickness; no more parting with those we love; not a funeral procession or grave yard can be found on the new earth! There God's dear children will be again united. Many of them now are in the enemy's prison-house, but Jesus will set the captives free from death's cold embrace in a short time. I rejoice to know that Jesus has the keys of death and the grave. He knows what it is to die! Yes, he has been through the dark valley,—but the bands of death were burst asunder, and he arose, a conqueror of death and the grave! O, I am glad that Jesus is my best friend. He is worthy of my love, yes more, of my life. My all I will dedicate to him and his service. Jesus is now gathering subjects out of this present world to be joint heirs with him in glory! In this world they receive their schooling. Here the christian soldier is continually drilling and exercising with his spiritual weapons; every day some new battle with our enemies. Our adversary is not in ignorance of our weak points. O, how he loves to torment and worry the christian soldier! What great effort he makes to obtain the christian shield of faith. He knows, if he can destroy his shield, that he can soon conquer him with his fiery darts. O, don't give up your shield nor sword in this great warfare, brethren. Jesus has undertaken to supply us with all that we need; in this warfare he has told us that no good thing shall be withheld from us. Our Captain forbids all his soldiers having any dealings with their enemies, such as anger, covetousness, pride, evil-speaking, hatred, love of the world, conformity to the fashions of the world, etc. We are to cherish and cultivate the company of love, peace, joy, long-suffering, patience, godliness, and by so doing our peace will be like a river. Cheer up, pilgrim soldier! your warfare is almost at an end. The long dark night is almost past. Some of the rays of the morning light begin to break o'er the land; a little while, and the day will dawn, and Jesus will be here, our warfare ended, our sorrows in the past, and all glory in the future. Brethren, endure hardness like good soldiers unto the end, and then receive from the hand of Jesus eternal life.

Springfield, Mass., May 30.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Wendell:—While I see the war spirit abroad every where, and I see the mighty men are waked up, and I hear the weak saying I am strong, and while they are actually breaking their ploughshares into swords, I feel in sweet peace within. [illegible] dom of Jesus to be set up, will keep aloof from the spirit of war. It is very natural, right and proper that we should feel a degree of patriotism, or love of our country; but it is not needful or right that we should enter into the spirit of war.

It seems as though the day of desolation, of wasteness, of clouds and thick darkness, the day of trumpet and alarm, was upon us. And I wish to enquire, whether this day of the Lord, spoken of by Zephaniah, is not the same spoken of in 2 Pet. 3d chapter, which is said to be a thousand years; whether it is not the same mentioned in Rev. 20, when the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years were finished; whether we are not to understand this thousand years, or day of the Lord, as the space between the resurrection of the righteous and wicked; or whether we are to understand that there will be a general resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked at the same time.

I should be glad to see these questions answered in the Crisis. It does seem to me that the time is come when it is important that we should have the light on this important point. If there is to be a space between the resurrection of the righteous and wicked, then may there not be some prophecies to be fulfilled in that space. I think there is, and to understand this subject will very much help us to harmonize the prophecies. I think many of our brethren have labored under a mistake, in supposing some part of the prophecies to be conditional. I understand Prophecy to be a history of events, written out before the events take place; and consequently it cannot be conditional. Promises may be, and often are conditional, but prophecies never. I have long been looking at these ideas, and have wondered that something has not appeared in the Crisis on the subject, as the paper professes to be open to investigation. I have found, in my travels, that the brethren and sisters very generally are believing there will be a space between the first and second resurrections, and are desirous to understand the subject. The events transpiring show plainly we are very soon to enter a new dispensation, or the literal reign of Jesus Christ on the earth, with the resurrected saints, when the earth will be filled with his knowledge and glory, and he will conquer his foes, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and all nations serve him. And my prayer is, "even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Amen, even so let it be.

My health and spirits are first rate. I find brethren and sisters rising, and the cause of Bible truth advancing. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

New Boston, N. H., May 24.

From Eld. I. C. Wellcome.

Bro. Wendell:—We heartily welcome you to the Editorial chair, with all its pleasing and profitable acquaintances and lessons, its associations and blessings, its toils and trials, cares and duties. Although we were well served and much benefitted by the labors of Bro. Grant in that capacity, when he could attend to it, yet his services appear to be more needful in other departments of the field. May the all-abounding grace of God sustain and guide you in the arduous work. Yours in the blessed hope.

Richmond, Me.

From Eld. John G. Hook.

Bro. Wendell:—How do you do? Am glad to know that you are still journeying towards home. Thank God, we are almost there. Be faithful, my dear brother; work for God; be whole-hearted; fight the good fight of faith; and you shall soon be crowned with life and glory that shall never fade away. I am strong in the Lord. My soul is full of "the blessing of the gospel of peace." Praise the Lord.

Concord, N. H., May 27.

Obituary Notice.

Died, April 13th, 1861, in East Lee, at the residence of her father (Bro. Simon Bliss), of typhoid fever, Sister Florella E. Bliss.

It has never been my lot to inscribe a few words to the memory of a more sincere, faithful, humble follower of our beloved Lord Jesus, than was the subject of this brief sketch. Naturally of a modest, retiring disposition, and gifted with a mild, amiable temper, she grew up as it were removed from the gay throng of youth by whom she was surrounded. I was her intimate friend from childhood, and I never knew her when there was not a strong under-current of religious feeling shading all her manner, and imparting a peculiar loveliness to her character. She enjoyed that inestimable blessing, a pious mother, and her instructions, "line upon line and precept upon precept," sank deep in the soil of her young heart, and in after days brought forth fruit an hundred fold. Christian mothers, whose eyes shall follow this record, instruct and train your children in the ways of eternal life. "In the morning sow thy seed, and at evening withhold not thy hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

When Sister F. was about nine years old, there was a revival of religion among the Methodists in the district where she attended school, and she, among others, found grace and happiness in serving Christ. True, it was in a childish way, but her example of sincerity and purity of motive might cause to blush many older professors. She delighted greatly in learning and learning hymns, and labored much with her sister, less than two years older than herself, that she also might walk that narrow, shining path whose light cometh from the throne of God. This early consecration to Christ was never wholly forgotten; this early love to her Redeemer never wholly wore away. The winter that brought her nineteenth birthday was more given up to the pursuit of worldly happiness than any other period of her life; but there was a revival in the Baptist society in Lee, and God in his mercy brought notes of warning to her ear. She paused, and saw her danger, and inwardly resolved to repent and return to Christ. The question arose in her mind, how God would regard her, how sinful she was in his eyes; and pondering these things, she knelt in her room one night, and prayed God to show her her true position exactly as she stood in His sight, to let her know the full extent of her wanderings and her present perils. Heaven heard and answered; a moment and she fell to the floor, covering her face with her hands. Trembling in every limb, she fled from the room; she could not stand before the searching eyes of Almighty God. For three days she endured the most severe mental agony, and then Christ appeared above the mountain and clouds of the law; she saw that he bore her sins in his body on the tree; she came to him with the love and trust of a little child, and was received. As a little child rests on the bosom of its parent, so rested she on the strength of her Lord. She sat down at his feet, feeding upon the words of eternal life. Ah! she chose that good part which cannot now be taken away from her, for her life "is hid with Christ in God." She remembered Him in the days of her youth before the evil days come, and God in his mercy took her away that she never saw them. Oh! that every youth whose eye rests on this page would be wise for themselves, and not leave to an uncertain morrow the work that should be first in their thoughts and deeds to-day.

Soon after her conversion, the duty of baptism presented itself to her mind; she desired to be buried in baptism, as that seemed to her to be the mode presented by the Scriptures; but the representations and entreaties of her friends induced her to settle back on the sprinkling she received in infancy. She united with the First Congregational Church in Lee. She was a meek, sincere christian, and this event seemed to stregthen the bonds of affection between Florella and her mother four fold. Her deportment on all occasions was in accordance with her profession, for her religion was interwoven with every feeling of her heart, and she exercised its graces constantly in her daily life. In the winter of 1855, Eld. Miles Grant visited East Lee, and stopped at her father's and brother's; she attended the series of meetings which he held, listening with great interest to the true preaching of the word, and her christian heart responded to its voice. She then understood the looking for and loving the appearing of the Lord Jesus when he causes the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began; she believed it to be at hand, and desired to see it;—and though she now sleeps in death, yet her eyes shall see it, and not another, for Christ is "the resurrection and the life," and we have convincing evidence that the same spirit dwelt in her that raised up Christ from the dead, and that when he appears she will appear with him—"satisfied" because she will "awake in his likeness." Eld Grant was to her and her friends as Christ to the disciples who journeyed to Emmaus: he opened up the Scriptures to them; he stood in Christ's stead; as His servant they received him, and when he showed them the use and significance of baptism, Florella and her mother, each unknown to the other, signified to Bro. G. their desire and intention to perform all things whatsoever their Lord had commanded. They were baptized in the month of March, 1855. Some of their neighbors said, "Why did they not have Mr. Gale, their own minister, baptize them?" These did not seem to understand that he could not do it, believing it had been done before. Nor could the Baptist minister, unless they joined that church, and they could not willingly shut themselves away from the great table of the Lord, where all his believing disciples have room. So there was no other way, and they took the minister (or servant) that the Lord provided, and cheerfully obeyed his command, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater gain than denying their conscience for the opinion of men. And the tranquil peace and heavenly joy, that calm, still happiness that afterwards seemed to pervade their entire being, I can scarcely describe. It was what the world could not give or take away; they enjoyed a foretaste of that which St. Paul speaks of: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

Florella now began to feel as if she ought to bear witness to the truth, as the Spirit of Christ gave her opportunity, and she openly avowed the truths of the gospel, giving a reason for the hope in her soul, not in a dogmatical, overbearing manner, but with true humility and forbearance. And this was not enough: she did not like to be found tacitly supporting the doctrines of the church, when she did not believe Christ taught them. She addressed a letter to her pastor, stating her desire to withdraw from the church, and her reasons for it. He disregarded her communication entirely, and shortly after she left town to visit her sister in Middlefield, who had lately experienced religion, and while there she became acquainted with the course of the Congregational Church of that place towards her sister, whom they first invited to join them, and then refused, on her declaring her belief in the sleep of the dead, destruction of the wicked, and that the gift of Christ is eternal life. This did not dampen her wishes, but made her more cautious, and she ceased not to endeavor to separate herself from a church corrupt in doctrine, until her death.

But Florella is gone! With hearts full of grief for our loss, we performed the last sad rites of burial, mourning not as those without hope, but looking forward to the glorious first resurrection. She had lived twenty-nine years, and never felt the bitter trials of life. I have every reason to think if she had lived a few years longer, she would have been called to bear some of the greatest and most wearing trials, but God saved her from them. Seeing the end from the beginning, He took her from the sorrows and disappointments of life before she had known them. God deals with us in kindness, and doeth all things well. And to her bereaved mother, the Lord shall be her staff and her comforter, and she shall lean on the arm of the Mighty, and He shall support her, and she shall yet say, "Thy rod and thy staff comfort me," "thy will be done." Let her wait upon the will of the Lord. To the care of our Heavenly Father I commend her father and mother; may He lead them gently down the last hills of life, and gather them with His saints into the Paradise of God. Even so, come Lord Jesus. Amen.

Our sister is sleeping in earth's silent breast,
Her white wasted fingers are folded to rest;
How calmly she slumbers, unmindful our grief,
So deep that e'en tears scarce afford a relief.
Our loss, oh! not hers, we have faith in God's word,
With the pure one beside her, she shall come with our Lord;
Her mother no longer must bathe her poor head,
Nor in anguish of spirit bend over her bed,
Feel the wild, throbbing heart in her feverish breast,—
Oh! mother, thank God he hath given her rest.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Sabbath Observance in England.—The committee of the Lord's Day Society state that about 275,000 persons are employed in beer houses in England on the Sabbath, 100,000 on canals and navigable rivers, 70,000 on railways, 24,000 on London cabs and omnibuses, and 20,000 in the post-office department. They are calling the earnest attention of the public, particularly of Parliament and of the Directors of Public Works, to this great amount of Sabbath desecration. The Standing Committee of the British Museum recently rejected a motion to open that great institution on the Sabbath, by a majority of eleven to one.

Waste of Human Life.—Dr. Bridgman, missionary in China, says that Christendom is ringing with the horrors of the Syrian massacre; yet if every man, woman and child in Syria had been slain twice over, the number would not equal those slaughtered in China during the last seven years. Within the last six months, a population equal to that of all Syria has perished in the civil wars of one province only.

☞ Russia has granted several important reforms to Poland; the present regulations for public instruction are abolished, and a national establishment of a superior class for public instruction is established; a Council of State, composed of members of the clergy, high dignitaries, and most distinguished persons of Poland, is to be formed; the right of petition to the national government is granted; district councillors and municipal officers are to be elected by the inhabitants. These, however, have not satisfied the people, and further disturbances have taken place. The Russian force in Poland is to be raised to 100,000 men.

Light Spreading.—The influence of Romanism over the popular mind of Portugal has been weakening of late years. The doctrine of the immaculate conception, to which the Pope required assent, called forth protests sustained by extracts from the Bible and the fathers. Three years ago, an effort made to introduce the Sisters of Mercy and their Lazarist (Jesuit) confessors failed, and the dread of the Jesuits led to the formation of a society for spreading the Scriptures, which exhorts to a diligent use of them as the best means of averting the danger.

☞ During a debate in the Spanish legislature, M. Olozoga, a deputy, opposed the revolutionary policy of the old governments in Italy, declaring as his opinion that the temporal power of the papacy is doomed to fall, and maintaining that the Italians are right in seeking national unity, and that the Spanish government has no reasonable pretext for opposing them.

Austria is concentrating troops in Venetia, and holds the whole line of the Po with her troops. The Austrian government positively denies that it intends to grant an independent ministry to Hungary, and it still required Hungarians to send deputies to the council of the empire.

Garibaldi and Poland.—The following letter has been addressed by Garibaldi to the Polish General Mieroslawski:

"Genoa, May 4th.

My Dear Friend: The great struggle of the suppressed nationalities is at hand, but no man can precisely foretell the hour. We must be always ready! Therefore, say to your countrymen what I tell the Italians—'The money necessary for a million of muskets must be had.' The brave Poles, who at the time of the Warsaw massacres showed that they knew how to sacrifice their lives for their country, will not shrink from devoting a part of their incomes for the same cause. You, General, and your friends, are ready to give your lives for Italy—be assured that I and my friends will do as much for Poland." G. Garibaldi.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Chicago, June 3.—Senator Douglas died at ten minutes after nine o'clock this morning. Those in attendance at the time were Mrs. Douglas, Dr. Miller, Mrs. Cutts, J. Madison Cutts, Jr., of Washington, D. P. Rhoes of Cleaveland, J. McVicker, Spencer B. Benham, and Dr. Hay of Chicago. His remains will be taken from here on Wednesday to Washington.

Washington, June 3.—The 12th New York regiment were ordered to sleep on their arms to-night, and reports are prevalent that additional troops will soon be dispatched to Virginia.

The Secretary of War has issued a general order deploring the death of Senator Douglas, to be read to the whole army to-morrow, and has ordered regimental colors to be draped in mourning.

New York, June 3.—The Post's Washington dispatch says it is reported that Jeff. Davis has issued a proclamation, directing the Federal troops to withdraw from Virginia soil. Private advices say that Davis is really alarmed, and his anxiety is so great as to affect his health. The next attack on Aquia Creek batteries will be made by land forces.

The special Washington dispatch to the Express says by the end of the week the government expect to have 25,000 men in Virginia, near Alexandria, 20,000 at Grafton, 20,000 near Harper's Ferry, 15,000 at Fortress Monroe, and 10,000 around Baltimore, Annapolis and the Relay House.

Cincinnati, June 3. Two columns of troops from Gen. McClellan's command, one under Col. Kelley, composed of Virginia volunteers, and the other Col. Crittenden, composed of Indiana volunteers, left Grafton early last night, and after marching the entire night about twenty miles, through a drenching rain, surprised a camp of rebels of 200 strong, at Phillipps, and routed them, killing 15 and capturing a large amount of arms, horses, amunition, provisions and camp equipage. The surprise was complete, and at lastest advices the Federal troops were in hot pursuit of the rebels, and probably many prisoners would be taken. Col. Kelly was mortally wounded and has since died.

Aquia Creek.—Aquia Creek flows through Stafford county, Virginia, and empties into the Potomac, fifty-five miles below Washington, which point is the terminus of the Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad. This road communicates directly with Richmond, which is seventy-five miles distant from the Aquia Creek depot. The rebel batteries are on the South side of the creek, and are too far from the channel of the Potomac to interfere with the navigation of the river. It is the connection of these fortifications with Richmond that has called the attention of our men-of-war to them, and which insures their ultimate and probably speedy destruction.—Boston Journal.

Notice.

There will be a two days meeting in Bristol, Ct, at or near Bro. Asahel Mix's, to commence Friday evening, June 14th, and hold over Sunday. The brethren from abroad are invited to come. Let us live and pray for a powerful meeting. J. K. Bellows.

Tent Meeting.

In the name of the Lord, we shall commence a meeting on Thursday, June 13th, to hold over Sunday. Bro. Henry Pratt is expecting to be there to preach the word. Those coming on the cars should inquire for Marsh's Mills—two and a half miles from New Milford depot, on the road leading to Merryall. Provision made for man and beast. For the brethren, Edwin Sole. Mason I. Read, Committee.

Notice.

Persons owing me for books, will confer a favor by remitting a part or all of the amounts due as soon as possible. Drafts on New York, or Eastern bills or gold, are preferred. Postage stamps are always current.

H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Conference.

Providence permitting, there will be a Conference in West Poland, Me., to commence Thursday, June 13th, and continue over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters from abroad are invited to attend, with hearts to work for the salvation of men and the promotion of Christ's cause. Bro. J. Couch is expected to be present. W. H. Mitchell.

New Hampshire State Conference.

As the time draws near for our State Conference, (June 20th, Thursday, at 2 o'clock, P. M.,) it is desirable that the place for holding it be decided upon as soon as practicable. Will brethren who may desire the Conference holden with them, inform us, so that we may be able to give seasonable notice?

T. M. Preble, Clerk of Conference.

Concord, N. H., May 3, 1861.

Conference.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will commence on Thursday, 2 o'clock, P. M., June 13th, at Chandler's Mills, Belgrade, and continue over the following Lord's day. Call on Brethren Hiram Towle, Wm. Kelly, Noah Goodrich, and others. I. C. Wellcome, Clerk.

Richmond, Me., May 27, '61.

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting at Pine Swamp, Sharron, Ct., on the ground where our meeting was held last year, commencing June 19th, and continuing over Sunday. Provision will be made for taking care of horses. Those wishing to stay in the woods had better come prepared. We expect there will be one or more tents on the ground; those wishing to bring tents can do so. Some of the Lord's servants will be there to preach the word.

In behalf of the Church at Pine Swamp, S. B. Munn.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.24; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.62; postage 15 cts.

Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to. [illegible]

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting in Plainfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., on land we occupied last year for a meeting. The meeting will commence June 27th, at half past ten o'clock, A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Brethren are invited. For the church, Rufus Starks.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. Wendell, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

Edens.

We have trials severe as old earth wends dreary,
And we wander 'mid sorrows opprest,
But the Bridegroom in glory will shortly appear
And give to the weary ones rest.
The tempest portending Him blackens the skies,
And the dark looming storm-clouds in terror arise.

We shall soon meet our Lord with his glorious retinue,
Descending the portals of light;
And the bulwarks sublime of the city of God
Will heave in the distance in sight.
Its pathways of gold we shall wander along,
And join in the strain of the Conqueror's song.

All the pure and the meek, who for righteousness seek,
He will take to the fields of delight;
In the glorious new birth they'll inherit the earth,
And bathe in its sunbeams of light.
Then we'll humble ourselves 'neath his Almighty hand,
That we may be exalted to dwell in the land.

But sinners who've fought against what Christ has taught,
Will lament in that auspicious day,
When Satan's companions to judgment are brought
And banished in darkness away.
Then, brethren and sisters, we'll press on the fight,
For the kingdom in glory will soon heave in sight.

'Midst glories' full tide, by the fair river's side,
Radiant crowns shall the glorified wear,
The Bridegroom come forth and sit down with his bride,
And the nuptials of Paradise share.
Then we'll keep right along in the old beaten track,
And, for fear of the devil, we'll never look back.

Evening Shadows.—No. 10.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the harlot, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."

Dear Reader:—It is evident, by the reading of the first verse of this chapter, that one object at least of the revelator was to show the judgment of the harlot that was carried by the scarlet colored beast through the wilderness state, of which we have spoken in previous numbers,

First. There appears, by the reading of the 17th verse, a design of God that there should be an agreement with the beast and the kings until certain words of God even fulfilled. What distinctive words are implied we cannot say positively. "For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree and give their kingdom to the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." Please allow me to suggest what in all probability they may be. Turn and read Daniel 7: 25: if these are the words, then, as declared in the 26th verse, at the end of that period the judgment shall sit on this power and take away his dominion to consume and destroy it unto the end. Hence the judgment of Daniel 7: 26. Rev. 17: 1, has reference to the events that had their commencement with the French Revolution; and as the Hon. Gerald Noel says—"Can the overthrow of the monastic orders, plunder of the church property, the destruction of religion by legislative enactment, and the massacre of a hundred thousand of her clergy, be consistent with any reasonable estimate of domination and power! Under such a terrific judgment upon the persecutors, can we refuse to admit that the period of the 1260 years has terminated its course?" If the above is correct, then after the end of the above period, they, the ten kings, were to receive power as kings one hour, that is, at one time, with the beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit. (See article No. 8.) By a careful reading of that, we are prepared to examine, in the next place, the righteous judgment that God designs to inflict on the harlot power through their agency. They shall hate her, make her desolate and naked, eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

Second. I understand the Horn of Daniel 7th and the scarlet beast of Rev. to be synonymous. His dominion being taken away at the end of the 2060 years, and the ten kings, having given their power to the horn previous to the end of that period, now embrace the principles of the eighth head of the dragon, as set on foot at the reign of terror in France, and imbibe a hatred against the corruptions of Rome, and commence the execution of the judgments written, which we shall now classify as they are set forth in verse 17.

First. "These shall hate the Harlot."—The following is an extract of a letter from Rome, read at a meeting of the universal democracy in N. Y. city; it says:—"Nine tenths of the people, (in Rome,) including the female portion of the population, look on the Pope and his cardinals with contempt as spiritual imposters, and with the utmost horror and hatred as temporal oppressors."

Father Gavazzi, once a celebrated Roman priest and orator in the Eternal City, but who became a republican, and was for a time associated with Ugo Bassi, Garibaldi and others, in the revolution that caused the Pope to flee for his life to Gaëta in 1849, said, in his closing lecture in the city of Boston:—"It was true that his mission was a soldierly one, a rough one—a mission of destruction, of annihilation to Popery and Popes; for then, and not till then would Italy be free. Therefore he meant to go to Italy as soon as possible, not to preach the gospel of Christ, but first to destroy the enemies of the gospel, and then to build on the ruins of Popes and Popery the pure gospel of Christ. Between [illegible] and the Pope there is the sword, unless the sword forever." He remarked at [illegible]—"Luther was a reformer.—I am an exterminator." At a meeting of the Society of Universal Democratic Republicanism, in the city of Philadelphia, a communication respecting Italy from Guglielmo Gamni was read; the following is an extract:—"Both Italians and strangers agree that there can be no salvation for Italy without the destruction of the Papacy, through which monstrous and cruel power Italy has been brought to suffer all the tortures by which for ten centuries she has been lacerated." The above must suffice on this one point: though brief, it breathes vengeful hatred.

Second. "And make her desolate." The following extract is from a Florence correspondent of the N. Y. Evangelist, under date of Jan. 28th, 1849:—"The distress at Rome is awful. The Eternal City deserted of Pope, cardinals, nobility, ambassadors, foreign residents and visitors, is a ruinous possession. No Italian government could hold it six months as idle property. The present provisional government is already bankrupt. It has no means to enforce its authority, and without money it can realize none of the expectation of the people. Rome supplicates the return of the Pope. Yet in all this there is no change of popular feeling as to the civil power of the Papacy. Throughout the land there exists a deep conviction that this has been for ages the curse of the nations, and nothing is gained in all these revolutions if that be not utterly destroyed. There exists as widely, moreover, a conviction that it is destroyed; that in the fall of Pius IX. the papacy has yielded up forever the sceptre of civil authority, whether the Pope remain at Gaeta, go to France, establish himself at Covita Vecchia, or return to Rome. It is all the same to him in this respect; he is no longer acknowledged as a temporal prince by the Italians." Truly, there was desolation in the once great city, and the once terrific roar of the Pope's Bull of late in the case of Napoleon III. and Victor Emanuel has been as plaint as the blatant moan of a calf. Most emphatically, the great swelling words of the horn nor his harlot spouse inspire neither reverence nor dread; they are politically dead. Praise the Lord, O my soul! Amen.

Dear reader, if the above is not the literal fulfillment of the revelator's prediction, it seems that it has hit the facts in every particular thus far. For one, I can say, "this is that which was spoken by" the Revelator John. More on the judgment written, in the next number, as I design to have my articles as short as the nature of the subject will admit them to be.

Finally, we see the symbolic page is almost exhausted, and the shades of night are gathering fast. Dear saints, our night of affliction and poverty is almost ended; the morn of joy hastes with heaven-directed rapidity. Prepare! O, for the love of Christ's sake, get and keep ready. Thy brother, looking for the very speedy appearing of Jesus.

For the Crisis.

The Distinctive Time when the Saints shall take the Kingdom.

In the above,* we see that the glory of the saints is like that of Jesus—preeminent. It is over Israel—over the nations; and hence their calling and position are distinctive. God never confounds matters so distinguishable as kings, and their subjects and their sphere of dominion.

"The saints will judge (rule) the world"—with Christ, "the head of the body"-politic! As "co-heirs with Christ," who hath given to him "all power in heaven and earth," they will act as "princes of the royal blood"—with the dignity that becomes the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty"! Dan. 7: 18–27; Ps. 45: 16; Rev. 5: 10.

The time is distinctive. It is, in all its aspects, distinguishable from all other portions of duration—as given in Eph. 1: 10; Heb. 4: 1–9; Rev. 20: 5–7; 1 Cor. 15: 24–27; Acts 2: 20; 3: 20–21; 2 Pet. 3: 8.

"The dispensation of the fullness of times" is distinguished in the dispensational government of God, both from that of the law and the gospel. Note some of its distinctive aspects:

1st. The christian, like his Lord, during this present gospel age, "is not of the world; but chosen out of it." Satan and his dark host now rule—have the power to govern—while the saints are doomed to submit and suffer till its close. "We know that we are of God, and that the whole world (outside the called in Christ) lieth in the Wicked One," as the Prince of all present manifested dominion among the nations. 1 John 5: 19.

2d. "The dispensation of the fullness of times" will be characterized by the headship of Christ—the stronger than the strong man armed. He will bind him, and restore "all things that God hath spoken by all his prophets."

3d. During the gospel dispensation, "the cross" is the badge and condition of discipleship; but in this coming age "the crown" will adorn and distinguish them as the associated kings with their Lord—"the King of kings."

4th. This age will end in the full maturity of human apostasy—demanding its destruction; but this new dispensation will be marked by the organization and advance of Messiah's kingdom, "till all rule, all authority and power shall be put down"; and in its rejected, restored state, the kingdom will be given up to God—the "All in All." 1 Cor. 15: 27; Eph. 1: 10. God's purpose is "that in (not before) the dispensation of the fullness of times, He might gather together again under one head all things," etc. The crowning work is so assigned to the crowning and closing period that is to fill out all prophetic and typical times. The gospel age is distinguished by its government, its course and end, from this of "the fullness of times"—the seventh thousand years. The first Adam was placed with Eve in dominion to "subdue and replenish the earth"—who failed, as have all his posterity in each successive age. But the new man—the second Adam with his bride, the church, "will not fail nor be discouraged" till the consummation of "the times of refreshing—the times of restitution—the Re-generation," when God shall be recognized as "All in All."

5th. In this dispensation under the Wicked One, the earth is always placed in contrast with heaven; but in that which is to come, they are reconciled and joined "under one head."

These and other facts compel the spiritually minded to distinguish this "dispensation of the fullness of times" as the millennial age—"the great and notable day of the Lord." His saints will "reign with him a thousand years." Other and everlasting scenes cannot conflict with these, as "all is of God." The Divine plan is one and harmonious—extending through the great antitypical week—the seven thousand years. Amen. "The judgment day—the times of restitution"—will embrace the promised good and the predicted evil. Thus it has ever been in every era of judgment. "Thus it is written, and thus it must be"—in the judgment to come. He will avenge and vindicate—justify and glorify his saints; and so He will give them "the grace to be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus." "The Deliverer will come to Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob"—or Israel! "Thus it is written"; and who can object! "In Him (as the King and Deliverer of the poor, Ps. 72; Gen. 22: 14, 18; Rom. 15: 8–12; Rev. 20: 1–9) shall all nations be blessed"! He will judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon earth. Ps. 67: 4; Isa. 60; Zech. 14; Ps. 47th and 98th.

This is just enough for God to promise and to fulfill. Amen. It is the character of the spiritual mind to accept delightedly the Spirit's infallible revealings. Amen.

* Our correspondent refers, here to his article on "Faith's View of the Christian's Glory," which was published in the Crisis of May 22d, and the two articles, as we now discover, were designed to appear in the same paper. Had we observed this when the articles were received, they would not have been separated, and had we noticed it seasonably, this one would have appeared last week. Over this article was written, "to follow the above," but we supposed this merely indicated the writer's preference as to the order in which they should go to our readers. Bro. Cook will excuse the oversight.—Editor.

Trust in God.

Amid the perplexing scenes and trying circumstances incident to this life, there is but one shelter from the storms of passionate nature, and but one pavilion into which man can run and be safe from the wicked influences of wicked men. It is the faith of God and the religion of Jesus Christ, our Savior and Redeemer. We do not know how weak the arm of flesh is until we have leaned upon it and it has broken from beneath our support. We do not realize how foolish is all human wisdom until, by sad experience, we find it has led us from the paths of rectitude and truth. And we do not know how firm a foundation there is laid in Christ Jesus until we have stood upon it, with the tempest of earthly adversity and earthly influences blowing around us, and have seen all else of earthly friendships desert and human support fail and pass away; then we begin to learn how blessed a thing it is to trust in God.

1. Trust in God in prosperity. There have been as many ruined by prosperity as adversity. Human success leads to human pride. The person who, in his own strength, apparently succeeds once, leaves God out of his mind, and thinks he shall succeed in his own strength throughout all time. Deluded man! the justice and overruling power of Jehovah, wave after wave, will sink you beneath its surges to rise no more. You will rise in the day of judgment without credit and without hope, and you will then, if not before, realize how safe and how glorious indeed it would have been to have trusted in God.

2. Trust in God in adversity. When every earthly friend leaves your embraces, and every earthly joy seems to have been turned into sorrow, from Christ will burst forth a fountain of joy for the saddened, a balm for the broken heart, and an enduring source of consolation when every other spring becomes dry, and every field becomes a desert. Christ will receive the woe of the grief-broken heart and the trials of the humblest of his faithful followers. And when storms madly descend around us, experience will tell how blessed it is to find shelter beneath the wings of the Almighty.

3. Trust in God for success while at work in his vineyard. How many there are who go forth into the vineyard of the Lord trusting in their own strength and relying on their own talents. Vainly do they think that their own wisdom and "power of speech" will convert men from the ways of sin to the living God. They forget that Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but God only can give the increase. And that he that planteth is nothing, nor he that watereth, but to God who giveth the increase belongs all the glory. Men converted to theories alone, are little better than dross. Men converted to ministers are worse than if they had never been converted at all, for they keep a continual contention wherever they are. But men converted to God will be firm on His word and His truth, blow the wind from whatever direction it may. And they will stand among the saved ones when the consuming billows of fire from the Almighty shall wipe the last stain of sin from the universe. What God saves now will be saved then. What God disowns now will be disowned then.

4 Trust in God for the temporary things of this life. The prayer, "give us this day our daily bread," God will answer, or his promise fail. The temporal avocations in which we may be engaged have something to do with our glorifying God. True, the kingdom of God is neither meat nor drink; but the children of the kingdom, in doing whatever they may—whether in eating, or drinking, or working with hand or brain—do all for his glory. And, by mingling these works with living faith, God will bless us here and hereafter.

5. Trust in God for your reputation. Laying aside the works of the flesh and its glory, which is truly contemptible, trust God for your reputation. Work for him. Let men ridicule, and deride, and backbite, and cast out your name as evil for Christ's sake, if they choose to do so; do not trouble yourself about that. Work for the Lord here, and be satisfied with his pay here, and very sure am I that you will be satisfied with it in the kingdom. Trouble not yourselves for worldly honor, for it is like the sparkling of the morning dew. In Christ there is glory, and honor, and immortality far more desirable.

6. Trust in God for spiritual blessings. Without faith it is impossible to please God. By faith all things are possible, and by it we become heirs of all things in the future. By faith the Spirit which proceedeth forth from the Father, which is the Holy Ghost, is given unto us. Without that Spirit we are none of his. And as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. Let us faithfully perform God's requirements of us, and then trust him for his Spirit and its attending blessings.

7. Trust in God for all things and you will be safe. Trust him for true riches, and they will never fail. Trust him for living water, and you will never thirst. Trust him for life, and you will live with the angels in glory and God himself, to enjoy the untold beatitude of eternal day. Trust him for glory and renown, and you will sit on the flood-tide of glory, that rolls its pelucid tide o'er Beulah's peaceful landscapes; wear the crowns of glory, and be kings and priests of Christ; plant your immortal feet on the free soil of Paradise, and waken new-born melodies, such as earth has never known and angels cannot sing; and beneath the fair skies of immortal Eden enjoy the rich fruition of immortal blessedness,—a glorious compensation for trusting in God.

Self-Deception.

Self-deception is a snare in which we are too easily caught. One has said, "the heart is deceitful above all things," and it is no wonder if it should act the hypocrite with itself, and be detected as such only when too late to escape the fatal blow. It is the very nature of deceit to know no end in its work of seduction until it has proved the destruction of its object. Hence self-deception is followed by self-destruction. But the most difficult of all, is the detection of our own deception, for we cannot bear to live in suspicion of ourselves or to harbor a feeling of mistrust or doubt as to our integrity. Hence we seldom think it necessary to undergo a rigid self-examination, and if, accidentally, our eyes are turned within, nothing is seen in its true light. So completely are we under the power of deception that vice is made to appear as virtue.

Again, self-deception is always sure to make one feel safe and secure, though he be walking on the very verge of destruction, and so long as he continues thus to rest securely, there is nothing to prompt him to turn his eye inwardly; and so much better and safer is he than all others, that a word of warning has no effect! consequently a detection of his dangerous condition is hardly possible. Some men were born blind, and others deaf, but there is no blindness or deafness half so bad as that of self-deception. The blind can be led, but there is no such thing as leading the selfish, who grope their way in the darkness of deception. They must be the leaders; hence, says Jesus, "if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall in the ditch." "Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Let us, therefore, beware, lest we are caught in the snare of self-deception. Nothing would be so humiliating and mortifying to the human heart as a detection of its own deception when too late to escape the shameful consequences. Therefore, above all things, be not deceived.

For the Crisis.

The following, except the last four items, is taken from the Advent Herald.

Various Modes of Preaching.

Mr. Rowland Hill was a great observer of the different modes of preaching, and once drew up, in his peculiar style, a string of characteristics of the various kinds of pulpit orators. He thus describes them:—

Bold manner.—The man who preaches what he feels without fear or diffidence.

Self-confident.—A man who goes by nobody's judgment but his own.

Rash.—A preacher who says what comes uppermost, without any consideration.

Rambling.—A man that says all that pops in his mind without any connection.

Stiff.—One who pins himself down to think and speak without any deviation.

Powerful.—The man who preaches from the bottom of his heart the truth of the Gospel with energy, to the conscience of his people.

Finical.—Minces out fine words with nothing in them.

Sober.—The man who lulls you fast asleep.

Elegant.—The man who employs all his brains upon dressing words, without ever aiming at the heart.

Conceited.—Vainly aims at every thing, and says nothing.

Welsh manner.—A man that bawls out very good things till he can bawl no longer.

Dogmatic.—A man who goes by his own brains, right or wrong.

Peevish.—One who picks into everybody's thoughts, and thinks no one right but himself.

Fanciful.—One who, instead of being led by wisdom, runs after a thousand visionary whimsies and conceits.

Self-important.—Thinks nobody like himself.

Noisy.—A loud roar, and nothing in it.

Genteel.—The vain fool that is fond of dressing up words without meaning.

He once said of a man who knew the truth, and seemed afraid to preach it in its fullness, "He preaches the Gospel as the donkey mumbles the thistle—very cautiously." A very fine dissenter, with a Doctor's degree, fresh from the north, once paid him a visit: he fidgetted about all the time he was talking. When he left the room, Mr. Hill lifted up his eyes, and said, in his most comic tone of voice, "Only think that a D. D. degree should ever be converted into a pedestal for a puppy!"—Life of Rev. R. Hill.

I think the following characteristics may be added to the above:—

Conservative.—The man who tries to please every body, but often makes mistakes by not knowing what every body believes.

Ambiguous.—The man who so speaks on some doubtful questions, as that if he is called to explain, he can dodge either way.

Fermentative.—One who is so full of gas, that when he opens his mouth to give vent, nearly all he has within runs out. A short time after, you may not remember any thing that was said.

Meaningless.—A man who may say many good things, and be very plain and pointed, and even personal, but he says them in such a way that you get the impression he does not mean any thing. Such a man may be quite popular.

Selections.

Scripture God-breathed.

Truth has a wonderful freshness when it is drawn directly from the Word of God. "All Scripture is God-breathed;" such is the simple meaning of the one word which we expand into "given by inspiration of God." When we read the Word of God with faith, we feel that breath of God moving upon the soul. How refreshing, how restorative to the fainting spirit, how quickening to all the faculties, how powerful in sanctifying efficacy (John 17: 17) that breath of God which moves in and through the Scripture,—"all Scripture!"

Holy men of God spake as they were moved by this divine afflatus. All Scripture (all the writing) was thus breathed of God. It is this which makes these records "living oracles," and the Bible "the word of life." Jesus breathed on the disciples, and said unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Then followed the wonders of Pentecost. And Jesus still breathes on us in his word. The Bible is the word of Christ. "The words that I speak unto you," he says, "they are spirit,"—breath, the breath of God,—and consequently "they are life." In and from the Bible is the perpetual emphusesis (as Origin calls it, in imitation of the Greek word and John 22: 22,) the breathing of Christ on his disciples and the communication of the Holy Ghost. In intimate, believing contact with the word, read, heard, and meditated upon, the church and the individual soul feels the breath of Christ, receives the Spirit, and finds a perpetual renovation of life, power, and joy.—Tract Journal.

Precious Thoughts.

Among the "marvellous" works, the "fearful and wonderful" endowments of God, David enumerates precious thoughts. "How precious, also, are thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them!" (Psalm 139.) "Precious thoughts" have this especial value, that they may be enjoyed without the intermediation of books, companions, or ordinances. They are the direct gift of God to the soul, suggested by his word, excited by his Spirit.

One of the wise men of Greece, when he was driven into exile and utter poverty by the ruin of his country, said, "I carry all my possessions along with me, (omnia mecum porto,") With what sublime truth may this be claimed by him who is rich in "precious thoughts!" No change of place can separate him from his treasure.

The Duke of Brunswick is said to possess the richest collection of diamonds in the world. Millions have been lavished in the purchase of these inestimable gems. But what are precious stones compared to "precious thoughts!" At no point are they comparable in value, but most of all inferior in this, that they are so liable to be lost. This poor proprietor of priceless jewels is a slave to the preservation of his treasure. He has built a fire-proof and thief-proof house; his bed is placed against the door of the safe which contains his jewels, he sleeps with revolvers within reach, and can not leave the place of his residence.

Material treasures take away freedom and rest. The London beggar, who sewed up his guineas in his bed, said, "The more I sews it in, the wuss I sleeps." But the richer we are in "precious thoughts," the larger our liberty, the sweeter our rest. When we go they lead us, when we sleep they keep us, when we awake they talk with us. The fire can not burn, nor the flood submerge them, nor thieves break through and steal them, nor the fraud or failure of other men despoil us of them. They are inseparable from us as ourselves. * * * Every precious thought of God is an earnest of the heavenly glory and joy, a bud, which, beautiful as it is in itself, is to open into a flower of glorious and now inconceivable beauty, in the paradise of God.—Tract Journal.

Life Thoughts.

Prayer is the converse of the heart with God, or an appeal to him to bestow blessings or to avert evils. In the Lord's Prayer, we call on him, first, to confer some good, and, second, to turn away some evil.

The consideration of the prejudice we have done to the public interests by our sins, should engage us to do them all the service we can, particularly by our prayers.

The gain of sin is only apparent: it is never real. And the greater the apparent gain is, the greater is the actual loss.

Satan promises the best, but pays with the worst; he promises honor, and pays with disgrace; he promises pleasure, and pays with pain; he promises profit, and pays with loss; he promises life, and pays with death. But God pays as he promises; all his payments are made in pure gold.

☞ Prayer-meetings are good things, and so are preachings, sermons and religious services; but, my dear friends, they are not banquets at which you are to sit down to enjoy yourselves, and gratify your tastes, and indulge your spiritual appetite, and gratify your spiritual taste and palate, so to speak, like a man sitting down to a feast and getting well filled, and gratified and happy. This is not the use of them: it is the abuse of them.

Yonder do you see yon sun-burnt man sitting down in a cottage to a simple meal? He rises to spend the strength you meal has given him on the field. So with our sermons and Sabbaths and services—they are to strengthen us for work: otherwise, our religion is as selfish as the lives of those that indulge in sensuous pleasures. They are for work, to strengthen me for God's work in the world, and at however far a distance, to follow the steps of Him who is my pattern as well as propitiation—who went about doing good.—Dr. Guthrie.

Reading for Youth.

The Years of Childhood.

Who can analyze and separate the years of his childhood? From birth until one is four or five, the unripe brain receives few impressions that last. It is all blank. As in a printed book, at either end, are bound up many blank leaves, without printing or writing, so in human life, at either end, begun and ended with blank years, preserving no record—leaving no mark!

But, then come the youthful days—full of romp, of hunger, of childish exhileration! How do they seem to you now? Are they separable? Can you thread them, and paint them by memory? Only one or two things peculiarly significant remain. The days are huddled together. The very years are heaped in mass, and you think back upon twenty years as if they were but a hand-breath!

It is as with landscape to a traveller. Having journeyed all day, at evening reaching some high hill, he sits down to trace his path. The grass at his feet is plain enough, and the ants that run express up and down every stock have a brisk distinction. The near bushes and the trees are so plain that the boughs and separate leaves stand out in their individual forms. But as the view recedes, gradually he loses all these; and a little farther off, leaves lie upon leaves, grass is matted upon grass, and is no longer form, but only color. Yet farther, the trees begin to fade; tree stands upon tree, and at length whole forests are to the eye but faint clouds, with not one distinct line, and hills are rubbed out, and all the inequalities of the way, which the the complaining foot felt in travelling, the eye no longer discerns, and only here and there a single peak or mountain remains clear and individual against the all-abounding sky!

Thus it is in life. Our nearer hours report themselves; a little farther, and days only, not hours, are discerned; then days lapse, and weeks and months are like long aerial distance in one line, whose continuity is measured by no prominent object. At length, years only can be seen, and not even these finally. For, as sailors leaving the harbor, carry with them for a long time the sight of the shore, but sailing still, lose first the low water lines, but cling by the eye to the highest masses, which in time is ever sailing, fade and sink, leaving nothing but some height, lifted far up like Teneriffe, which after the night is passed, is all gone, hidden by the bend of the earth's surface! So even high-topped years at length are shut down from our memory by the bend of the vast cycles of time.

How wonderfully true it is that we spend our lives as a tale that is told! Come, go back with me.

Who are the members of your father's family? Besides your brothers and sisters, who dwelt there? Who visited? Who came and went? Who were the neighbors? These things were vivid realities to you when a child. What are they now? Mere marks. As the landscape artist paints in the fore-ground figures with limbs and features clear, but in the far-off distance, when he would paint a figure, takes his brush and spots down a mere dash—a formless color mark! But a million are forgotten where one remains.

Who went with you to the village school? Call the roll! Who were the successive teachers? Popes of the ferule!

Who were the girls? Who were the boys? Then, when the uproarious school broke forth its tumult at dismissal, if I had asked you, you could have given every name. Now, call them up! Who were in the first class? who in the second? These were important things then. Who was whipped? who was never struck? These, to you, were more important than the roar of European revolution, the burning of Moscow, the battle of Waterloo; but what do you remember of them? Some memories are more tenacious than others. A few will reproduce much; more, some; most, but little, if any.

How much can you recall from the church? Who went with you? Who sat about you? Who were the old men? Who were in their prime? And who, like yourself, were young? And if these living and throbbing realities are faded out, it will be useless for me to ask you after the sermons. They were gone before they were finished. They fell upon your dissolving ear as flakes of snow upon water, and were gone in the very act of touching.

How much do you recall from the green grave-yard? What memories come thence, from that populous city without a magistrate, without a law, where all who quarrelled on earth, are now peaceable dust, keeping excellent neighborhood!—H. W. Beecher.

"Was it Stealing."

"Oh, mother! see these beautiful flowers! Flora and I were out in the garden, and you know we haven't hardly any in bloom, and none so pretty as these. They were in Mrs. Blake's garden, close to the fence, and I thought we might have just these two or three, so I told Flora to reach through and get them, and she did. Are they not beautiful, mamma? And they are so sweet, too!"

Grace had talked so fast that she was quite out of breath, and the reason for it was, that she felt guilty on account of what had been done. Little Flora was only three years old, but Grace was nine, and she knew she had not leave to take flowers from Mrs. Blake's garden; she had vainly hoped to shift the responsibility of this act upon her sister, or at any rate, get rid of it herself, by asking the innocent little girl to thrust her chubby hand through the fence, and get the "pretty stars," as she called them.

But a monitor in Grace's heart, whose name is Conscience, had been saying, "Grace! you have done wrong; you have stolen the flowers." When she answered, "No, Flora got them," no notice seemed to be taken by Conscience of her excuse, but the charge was repeated over and over, "Grace, you have stolen," and now she sought to hush it by running to her mother. But the serious look on her mother's face only made her hear that monitor's voice more distinctly, and without waiting for her mother to speak she asked, "Was it stealing, mamma?"

"What is it to steal, my daughter?"

"You have told me, mamma, that it is to take what is not ours without leave," Grace replied, self-condemned.

"Then you do not need an answer from me to your question. A few flowers are not much, to be sure, but my dear little girl will remember that if it is a sin to take our neighbor's money, it is also a sin to take the least thing that is his. You had it in your heart to excuse yourself, because dear little Flora plucked these flowers. But she only acted for you, and I am glad to see now that you do not deny it."

I need not tell you all her mother said. Grace was not a willful child; she wanted to do right, but sometimes she forgot, as in this instance, and I think she has learned two lessons which will not be forgotten. One is,—that we can not do what seems to us only a little wrong, without sinning against God; and the other,—that we can not cause others to sin, without being guilty in the sight of God ourselves.

Perhaps if you learn these lessons, and ask Christ to fix them firmly in your heart, they will be the means of keeping you many times from sinning.—The Child at Home.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscription, should send as much, in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All persons desiring to receive the Crisis, or any of the Publications on sale at this office, should always state distinctly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed, and direct their communications and remittances to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-six numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The Gathering Storm.

Nations now are growing angry,
Hark! we hear the battle cry,—
Yes, the distant deaf'ning thunder
Of the war-cloud draweth nigh.
Not alone the eastern empires,
Distant o'er the foaming wave,
But our own once proud republic
Seems now tottering to her grave.

All are rushing to the onset,
Troubles thicken o'er the earth,
Darkly looms the threat'ning storm-cloud,
Soon its fury will burst forth.
Naught of earth can stay the tumult,
Wildly borne on every breeze
Comes the wail of kingdoms falling—
Blood now flows o'er earth and seas.

Deeper, darker grows the terror,
Danger is the watchword now,
Each man's hand against his brother—
Thrones to dire destruction bow.
Plainly now the christian readeth
God's great day is very near,
Soon his wrath will burst in fury—
Soon his glory will appear.

Christ will still the wild commotion,
He will claim the kingdoms all;
Every tongue will then confess him,
Every knee before him fall.
His will be a peaceful kingdom,
Naught of sin shall enter there;
Every eye with joy is beaming,
Every heart all free from care.

"Distress of Nations."

"We are so absorbed in the affairs of our own country that we have scarcely time to read the foreign news. But with famine in India, the threatening aspect of affairs in Syria and throughout Turkey, the foreshadowed alliance of France and Russia against England and Austria, revolution imminent in Hungary, Victor Emmanuel determined on possessing Rome, there is every indication that this will be a year of commotions in the earth and distress of nations, almost without parallel since the beginning of the Christian era.

"Without attempting to apply to passing events specific predictions in the word of God, we cannot fail to see in these events the hand of divine providence marshalling forces for the overthrow of despotism in religion, in society, in the state. The grand historico-prophetical symbols of the Old and New Testament are self-repeating, and we in our day are as much called upon to study the signs of the times, to watch for the coming of the Son of man, and to be ready for every sign of his appearing, as were the Christians of the first century, as will be those of the last day of earth and time. Let us work and pray, and pray and work, till Christ's kingdom shall fully come."

The foregoing we cut from The Independent of this city, of April 26. It is remarkable, considering the source from which it comes, and is one of "the signs of the times." For near twenty years some of us have been calling attention to the state of the world as indicating the near approach of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ: specially since the European revolution of 1848; and we have not ceased to show, that every year since that time has developed new evidence of the consummation at hand, when "the kingdoms of this world are" to "become the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ," who "shall reign forever and ever." The Editor of this magazine published early in 1859, his views of the then coming events, based on the prophecy of Revelation 17th and its connection. Among other things noticed at that time, the following remarks were made:

"The 'Battle of Armageddon' cannot be very far off. In that, 'the kings of the earth and of the whole world' are to have part. But whether this language includes all nations, or only all the old Roman 'earth,' remains to be seen. A fearful prophecy, in Jeremiah 25, may have something to do with these times, as well as Rev. 17. That prophecy indicates that the 'wine cup of fury,' which began on Jerusalem, is to be sent to all the nations; and that they shall be 'moved' and made 'mad' by the sword that God 'will send among them.' After enumerating numerous nations, of years gone by, who shall drink and be visited by that sword, it adds:—'And ALL THE KINGDOMS OF THE WORLD, which are upon the face of the earth.' * * * 'Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Drink ye, and be drunken, and spew, and FALL AND RISE NO MORE, because of the sword which I will send among you.' A fearful doom on the nations: a doom, which those who fear the coming 'conflagration,' may well seek to escape: but God caused the Prophet to add:—'It shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thy hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Ye shall certainly drink: for, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and shall ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth' * * * 'Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth: and the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground.'"

Thus we spoke, in view of the word of the Lord, more than two years ago; but the lulling of the storm, after the battle of Solferino, in 1859, caused many to think "the cup" of JEHOVAH's just indignation on "the nations," for their wickedness and oppressions, would pass away; and especially did this country expect to escape it. Exalted to heaven with privileges under the best government on earth, we had grown proud, forgotten our entire dependence on God for stability and strength, connived at wickedness in Church and State till our sins, like ancient Israel's, had towered high as heaven, and God might justly say, "Lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and shall ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth." That sword has come, and our country begins to feel its awful power. To what extent it will fall on us is known only to Him who wields it. "The watchmen wake in vain, unless the Lord keep the" nation from utter ruin. It becometh the nation to repent of all its sins and to turn from them, not with hypocritical fasts, but by keeping such a fast as God has "chosen." Fasting and praying while we cleave still to our sins will only increase our guilt and cause "the cup" to be held to our lips the longer, or prove our utter overthrow and ruin.

It truly seems as if this nation's "great day of judgment" had commenced. Whether that be the case, or whether it be only the first warning God is giving it in His mercy, remains to be seen. It is none the less among the "perplexity of nations" indicating the day is swift approaching when our Lord Jesus Christ shall return to reign on earth and over the nations, to the utter subversion and "overthrow of despotism in religion, in society, in the State." Yea, "the kingdoms of this world" shall "become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ." Then ends the rule of all tyrants, and JEHOVAH's true saints—all who have ever lived on earth—shall be made immortal, and "possess the kingdom under the whole heaven." See Dan. 7: 22, 27. "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth: serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling: kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when His wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him." See Psalm 2.—Bible Examiner.

For the Crisis.

"The Fullness of Wisdom"

In Jesus—contrasted with pride of knowledge from Adam in Eden to Anti-Christ, in his full manifestation, at the coming judgment.

Eph. 1: 7–10. "In whom we have redemption, through His blood—according to the riches of his grace; wherein He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence, having made known unto us the mystery of His will—that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together into one (headship) all things in Christ," etc.

He who saves us being the only wise God, He will make us wise as well as holy and happy. Pardon and peace are provided for us in Christ; but these do not exhaust the riches of Divine grace. His own all-comprehending wisdom, as unfolded through all time, and reaching on to the consummation of all things restored, is a part of the present portion of the called in Christ. It is ours to know "the length and breadth, and depth and height" of "the love of Christ, and be filled into all the fullness of God." Eph. 3: 15–19. This fullness embraces the fullness of wisdom. God orders "all things (dispensations) according to the counsel of his own will." Each successive dispensation is a development of the one great plan that embraces "the end from the beginning."

This all comprehending plan of Providence is to restrain and finally to destroy "death—the devil, and the works of the devil;" and at the same time to sustain, expand and ultimately to establish all goodness, loveliness and bliss! But in redemption we have "the manifold wisdom"—even "the fullness" of the wisdom of God. "Of His fullness have all" the saints received—making them "wise unto salvation"! Wise to "know the things that are freely given to us of God." 1 Cor. 2: 12. "As it is written, ye have an unction from the Holy One and know all things. 1 John 2: 20–27. Creation past, and the New Creation to come—the origin and end of evil—the character, course and consummation of all earthly dominion, as it will give place to "the kingdom of God" and the "restitution of all things spoken" by Jesus Christ our Lord! Thus angels and men and devils—heaven and earth and hell—satan and sin and salvation—are all embraced and embodied in "the wisdom of God," dispensed to "the just made perfect." They are to "grow in grace" and all this "knowledge." Wisdom is thus secured to all the heirs of salvation as really as pardon and joy. They will be educated to know in its fullness, and according to their measure, the wisdom of "the only wise God."

Contrasted with this, we find the primal passion for knowledge in Eden—the first evil desire excited in Adam or Eve was to "know—as the gods."

"Seeking to be gods the angels fell, Aspiring to be angels men rebel."

Pride in the creature culminates in "science falsely so called"—knowledge aside from God. The crowning evil that God foresees for our world—the full maturity of apostasy—will unfold to the final Anti-Christ. 2 Thess. 2: 1–9; Rev. 13: 15–18; 1 John 2: 22. The Anti-Christ—"will come in his own name." So that Adam only aspired to "equal" in "knowing;" this "man of sin" will claim to be—"a god."

Thus, while knowledge is needful to us all in this world, and that which is to come—while it is provided for us in its fullness, in our standing in Christ, the passion for perverted knowledge blights, withers and destroys. Its very nature tends to apostasy and perdition! Thus it was with the primal pair in Paradise. Thus it has ever been and will yet be with the last leader in human rebellion that shall collide with Christ our Lord to his everlasting overthrow. And in the perfected new heavens and new earth beyond "the great and terrible day of the Lord," knowledge will flow from one source—the all and only wise God. This knowledge will have one Divine character that will have brought and bound both heaven and earth in one unvarying, everlasting harmony!—except as the ceaseless cycles of the age of ages shall still unfold the ways and wonders of the boundless universe of the Almighty.

Note 1. The christian knows by believing the plain word—"by revelation." Eph. 3: 3–5. It is by revelation—not by interpretation! It is by accepting the word of God—not by striking out some sparks of his own brain. Thus, by taking the word of God as his light, he sees the source, history and destiny of all things—he sees the past as prophets saw them, "and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." All is reality. The wisdom of this world, in contrast, knows things in a mist, dreamily, and is left in utter bewilderment as to the origin or end of any thing—political or moral. The whole is a maze!

2. Let no one naming "the name of Jesus," shut off any portion of the word and wisdom of God, lest the truth he denies shall blight and "burn up" both him and his hope in the day of God!

3. The assumption of knowledge above God—the terrible presumption in adding to, or taking from the word, is seen in all apostasy—from Adam to Anti-Christ. It is "earthly, sensual and devilish," and damning always. So it was even in Eden, so it was in Israel, and so God has announced in the gospel. John 3: 19.

4. The principle applies to all truth—of course to the special doctrine of this Epistle. It makes "the church," as the bride of Christ, to occupy a peculiar position; (Eph. 5: 32) to share His glory, His inheritance, and be with Him, "the habitation of God."

We should, beloved, take warning; for in ignoring any part of the children's bread—the word of life—we prove ourselves not of "the family." Ch. 3: 15–18. "The obedience of faith" acquiesces heartily in all the will of God—as to "Jew, Gentile, or the Church." We must not confound what God has made distinct and separate—"the many sons," or "church of the first-born"—the Jewish nation, and the "all nations" of the Scriptures, are most plainly distinguished.

5. The sin of Israel, however great, can be but a part of "the sin of the world." Now if the Lamb of God take away the greater—shall it be incredible that he will "take away their sins"—the sins of Israel? Rom. 11: 25–29; John 1: 29. "This is my covenant unto them—saith the Lord—when I shall take away their sins." This is a part of the fullness of wisdom given to them that (do not explain away but) believe! Amen. J. B. C.

☞ This doctrine of the Lord has long since been so set home to my poor stricken spirit, that I fear and tremble before God! It is mine, I trust, for life. It is yours, brethren beloved!

For the Crisis.

Letter from S. S. Brewer.

DEAR BRO. WENDELL:—Through the mercy of God I am striving to gain the port of endless rest. Although the outer man is becoming somewhat enfeebled, to the praise of God, through our precious Redeemer, I am enabled to say the inner man is renewed day by day. I have suffered much with rheumatism for some weeks past. For a part of the time the pains have been very severe, rendering it impossible to help myself in or out of bed; but by the assistance of God's grace, and my dear Sarah to help me in and out of my carriage, I have been enabled to fill all my appointments, although at times this thorn in the flesh did buffet and torture exceedingly, and cause the clay to totter and tremble. An application of the prescription seen in vision by John on Patmos, Rev. 21: 4, has been my antidote and ever dear delight.

O! what a privilege—yea, what an honor—yea, more, what a distinguished position to occupy: a herald of the cross! proclaiming salvation through faith in the once crucified Lamb of God, and in addition breathing forth out of a good and honest heart a desire to roll a tide of salvation over this doomed earth,—the last solemn, grand and awful message, "Behold, he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him." Happy, thrice happy, if with my latest breath I may but gasp his name; and, if I must sleep, preach him to all, and cry in death, behold! behold! the Lamb. Hallelujah to the Lamb that has purchased our pardon!

I wish to say to my dear friends who have kindly invited me to visit and preach the w[illegible] I have not forgot those kind words of encouragement in your letters. If the Lord will, I shall try to learn and then do and suffer His will in all these particulars. Most of the past winter and last spring I have been in wayside places, and—to the Lord be all the praise and glory—have seen a goodly number plucked as brands from the coming fire.

We are undoubtedly living in a time unparalleled in the annals of history or the tales of our grandsires. All the nations of the universe, all the elements are speaking to us in the most thrilling, solemn and impressive tones. Our own once beloved and happy nation foams and boils like a cauldron. With few exceptions the heart of the entire nation pulsates with the most intense excitement. Excitement gives way to anxiety—anxiety to fear—and fear to dread; and soon, it seems to me, all must give away to despair, to those who are not prepared for the great day of his wrath,—for it is near, and comes with precise, steady and measured step.

The times are sad and gloomy. I find that the general stagnation of business is beginning to affect many of our dear brethren—some with large families dependent on their daily labor for support. Many begin to say, Alas, no man doth hire me. Dearly beloved, let us learn wisdom in these times. Consider well the exhortation of the prophet, Zeph. 2: 3—"The haughty people of the earth begin to sigh." Read what a wail is traced on the pages of a leading New York Journal of May 27th:—

"The fabric of New York's mercantile prosperity lies in ruins, beneath which ten thousand fortunes are buried. Many a merchant had toiled early and late, had planned and schemed when he should have slept, had denied himself needful relaxation and enjoyment, in order to 'make his pile,' which he had just about completed, and was preparing to retire and spend the decline of life in ease and comfort, when the crash came and swept everything before it. Last fall, he was a capitalist; to-day he is a bankrupt—bankrupt in energy, in hope, in resolution—and doomed to go down to his grave a dependent and a wreck."

To what extent our trials may be permitted to intensify, myself nor any one can inform you. God only doth know, and he has in great mercy provided a sovereign balm, a heavenly consolation, and an eternal escape from it and all the ills and suffering of this present evil world. It is laid up for the time of need in good old Daniel 12: 1. Let us all see well to it that our humble names are, by patient continuance, written there. Dearly beloved, we need a calm, sober settling down upon the precious promises of God's holy word. A day of awful retribution is just at hand. Soon the condition of all mankind will be eternally fixed.

This is the first day for over two weeks that I have been able to sit in a position to write. I praise the Lord for this privilege, although I suffer considerable pain at present. My constant prayer is for grace and patience that with resignation to the will of God I may glory in my infirmities. O, how often have I rejoiced, when suffering with billious fevers, head ache, tooth ache, heart ache, chills and fevers, and this last racking, torturing rheumatic pain, to know they will all end with this present state, and in the future be crowned with an exceeding and eternal weight of glory! There, there, through the death, resurrection, ascension, mediation and return of our glorious Redeemer to raise the dead and change the living, I place all my hope. O! glorious hope! O! come, dearest Savior! We mourn thy absence, and poor earth groans beneath the curse of the accumulated transgressions of the past and the present evil generation. O God! protect thy people now, is my daily prayer. Amen. S. S. BREWER.

For the Crisis.

The Word and the Spirit.

As there is evidently a want of a clear understanding, with some, as to the need of the Spirit, as well as of the Word, and as it is of vast importance to have it clearly comprehended, I send an extract on the subject, from Pastoral Addresses, by the eminent and godly John Angel James:

"The instrument employed by the Spirit in this great change (regeneration) is the Holy Scriptures, James 1: 18—'begat he us with the word of truth'; 1 Pet. 1: 22, 23—'Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren,' etc. There is much that is mysterious in this subject, as our Lord intimates to Nicodemus, John 3: 8; but amidst all this mystery we see much that is plain and intelligible. The truth reveals to the mind the objects to be loved and obeyed; the Spirit disposes the heart to embrace them. It is neither the Spirit without the truth, nor the truth without the Spirit—but the Spirit by the instrumentality of the truth, and the truth in the hands of the Spirit. It is not the Spirit in the word merely, but the Spirit with the word. Without the word there would be nothing to love—without the Spirit there would be no love. The word is the light which reveals the objects of spiritual affection; the Spirit gives the affection towards them. The Spirit's operating upon the heart, apart from the word, would be only to give an inclination, a disposition without an object as its end and purpose. This view of the subject clears it of all difficulty and objection, on the ground of irrationality and enthusiasm, as if it (the Spirit's work) meant the setting up of another rule, standard, and light within, and meant spontaneous, blind impulses, without any appropriate object to produce them, or any fixed rule to guide them. It treats us as rational creatures, and yet as sinful and wilfully blind ones; it does not extinguish our reason, but sanctifies and guides it; it calls us to exercise our faculties on their appropriate spiritual objects, as presented by revelation, and gives us Divine aid in so doing; it teaches us to unite diligence and dependence; it keeps us, too, from the pride of self-dependency on the one hand, and from the despondency of unaided helplessness on the other; it preserves us from wild enthusiasm, and equally so from dead formalism: in short, it directs to the rule we are to go by, and furnishes the strength we need to follow it."

The above is as good an explanation of the joint work and effects of the word and Spirit, and of the necessity of both, as I have ever seen in so few words. It gives the general views and belief of the christian world; and all who will ponder it well, can see that the subject is made plain, especially to those who know the Spirit's work by happy experience—it may not be thus plain to the "natural man," but may appear "foolishness unto him," 1 Cor. 2: 14. All, by carefully searching the Bible, can see it harmonizes with its teachings. In the research, they can find a good starting point in the case of Lydia, Acts 16: 14—Paul "spake the word" to her, and the Lord opened her heart to attend to it. We find another key in Eph. 6: 17—"take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." A sword never kills unless there is a hand hold of it. Lydia did not, and some, wherever the gospel is preached in its purity, as to its great "principles of the doctrine of Christ," do not resist the Spirit till it leaves them, while others do fail to "overcome." Acts 7: 51 says—"Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost." "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Eph. 4: 30. Query—can man grieve the Bible? This class of texts answers the oft repeated objection, that God is partial, if the Spirit as well as the word is needed. The doctrine, when rightly explained and understood, has no more to do with Calvinism than other points or truths which all admit—such as the fact that God has not sent the word to two-thirds of the world. And we are not told, and so know not, that the Spirit goes where the word does not. Well may we cry out with Paul, in Rom. 11: 33—"how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" I feel a greater interest in having the above extract published, from the fact that I find it in a paper published by a Disciple (Campbellite). The paper it seems has been started to reform the Disciples as to the work of the Spirit, and perhaps other points. I have seen but one number. J. BLAIN.

Was Moses Raised?

"And behold there appeared unto them," says Matthew, speaking of the transfiguration of Christ, "Moses and Elias talking with him." It appears that what was witnessed by the disciples on the mount of transfiguration, was a real scene, and not an appearance only. The very word, transfiguration, is a word which is applied to a change actually accomplished, and not to that which is only apparently so. Mark, in recording this wonderful scene, says, "And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses, and they were talking with Jesus." Mark 9: 4. Luke says, "And behold there talked with him two men which were Moses and Elias." Luke 9: 30. The word rendered appeared, in these instances, is applied by its definition to that which is really and literally seen, and is almost exclusively so used in the fifty-seven times of its occurrence in the New Testament. True, Christ told his disciples when coming down from the mount to tell the "vision" to no man; but the word here rendered vision is not limited to the sense in which that word is now used; for it also is applied to real and actual sights as well as to appearances, and is so applied in Acts 7: 31, being in that instance rendered "sight."

From this it appears that this was a [illegible] sequently Moses and Elias were [illegible] bodily present. It follows, therefore, that Moses had been raised, as the resurrection was the only avenue through which, in bodily form, he could have made his appearance on the mount.

Add to this the intimation we have in Jude of some important transaction in regard to the body of Moses, and our evidence is complete. We there learn that Michael, the archangel, disputed with the Devil about the body of Moses. Let it be noticed that this dispute was about the body of Moses. Michael (Christ) and the Devil, each claimed, it appears, the right to do something with his body. Some have endeavored to reconcile this with the non-resurrection of Moses by saying that the Devil wished to make known to the children of Israel the place of Moses' burial, in order to lead them into idolatry; and that the contention between him and Michael had reference to this; but such a conjecture (for it is nothing more,) seems to be wholly without foundation; as in this case the contention would have been about the grave of Moses rather than about his body. But since this dispute did have reference solely to the body of Moses, let us inquire further what the Devil has to do, or what he does do, with the bodies of men. He is said to have the power of death; hence he is the one who reduces them to a state of death and holds them there; while on the other hand Christ is the Life-giver whose prerogative it is to bring men out from under the power of death, clothing his own with immortality. The most natural conclusion therefore is that the dispute took place on this very question; that it had reference to the bringing back to life, to the resuscitation, of that dead body, which the Devil would naturally wish to keep, and claim the right to keep, in his own power. But Christ rebuked the adversary and rescued his victim from his grasp. This is the necessary inference from this passage, and as such it is entitled to its weight in this argument.

But the great objection to the resurrection of Moses, which underlies this whole question, and meets us in the beginning, middle and end of its investigation, is this: If Moses was raised so many years before the resurrection of Christ, how can Christ be called the first-fruits of them that slept, as in 1 Cor. 15: 20, 23? how can he be said to be the first that should rise from the dead, as in Acts 26: 23? or be called the first-begotten, and first-begotten of the dead, as in Heb. 1: 6, and Rev. 1: 5? or the first-born among many brethren, the first-born of every creature, and the first-born from the dead, as in Rom. 8: 29, and Col. 1: 15, 18? This lay for a long time as an objection in our own mind; it may be so still in the minds of some. Before such we will lay the evidence that has satisfied us, believing it to be sufficient to do as much for them.

First, then, we call attention to one fact: several individuals, of whom we have explicit account, were raised to life before the resurrection of Christ. We refer to the widow's son, 1 Kings 17, the son of the Shunammite, 2 Kings 4, the son of the widow of Nain, Luke 7: 14, the ruler's daughter, Luke 8: 40, 55, and the resurrection of Lazarus, John 11: 43, 44. We have been ready to dispose of these passages, by making a distinction between a resurrection to immortality and one to mortality. Our argument has been that the cases of these individuals, they not being raised to immortality, would not affect the declaration that Christ should be the first to rise from the dead, meaning, we have concluded, the first to rise to immortality. But is such a distinction as this admissible? Does the Bible make any such distinction, or give even an intimation, of anything of the kind? Christ, in sending word to John of the results of his work, told the disciples to tell him, among other things, that the dead were raised up. And when the wicked are restored to life, it is called a resurrection, no less so than the restoration of the righteous. See John 5: 29; Acts 24: 15; Rev. 20: 5. But the wicked are not raised to immortality; therefore in the matter of being raised from the dead, the Bible recognizes no distinction on account of the different conditions to which the different classes are raised. The cases above referred to, were therefore resurrections from the dead, just as really as though they had been raised to immortality; and the distinction we have heretofore made is thus shown to be wholly gratuitous, and is excluded from the controversy.

Having shown this, the objection assumes somewhat of a new phase; for it now lies just as much against the cases of those of whose resurrection we have the most explicit account, as against that of Moses. The question we now have to meet is this: Can the passages in the Bible which declare [illegible] have been raised, and those which speak of Christ as the first to be raised, be harmonized together? We think there is no difficulty here, as we shall now endeavor to show.

It will be noticed that the objection rests wholly upon the supposition that the words first-fruits, first-begotten, and first-born, have exclusive reference to priority in time. Hence its huge proportions instantly collapse when we find that these words are not confined to this meaning. Christ is called the first-fruits in 1 Cor. 15, solely in reference to his being the antitype of the wave-sheaf, and in contrast with the great harvest that will take place at his second coming. This word is used in different senses, as we may learn by referring to James 1: 18, and Rev. 14: 4, where it cannot have reference to antecedence in time. We may therefore pass this word, and proceed to a consideration of the others. These are protos and prototokos, which we will notice in order.

Protos, the word used in Acts 26: 23, is thus defined by Robinson: "1. First, the first, of place, order, time. 2. Of rank, dignity, first, chief." Greenfield's second definition is, "first in dignity and importance, that is, chief, principal, most important." A like definition, we are informed, is given by Liddell and Scott, and Schrevelius. It is twelve times used in the New Testament in this sense, as in Matt. 20: 27; Mark 6: 21, etc. This word, then, as applied to Christ in Acts 26: 23, may simply mean that in his resurrection, he occupies the first and pre-eminent rank; his resurrection is the all-important one, since it is by virtue of this that all resurrections, whether before or since were, or were to be, accomplished.

We come now to the second word, prototokos, rendered first-begotten and first-born. This word is defined by Robinson thus: "Properly the first-born of father or mother;" and as the first-born was entitled to certain prerogatives and privileges over the rest of the family, the word takes another meaning, namely, "first-born, the same as the first, the chief, one highly distinguished and pre-eminent; so of Christ, the beloved Son of God. Col. 1: 15." Greenfield's definition is similar. This word is used in this sense in the Septuagint. In Ex. 4: 22, Israel is called the first first-born; and in Jer. 31: 9, Ephraim is called the first-born; but in point of time Esau was before Israel, and Manasseh before Ephraim. Their being called the first-born must therefore be owing to the rank, dignity, and station to which they had attained.

We conclude then, and we think justly, that these words when applied to Christ [illegible] denote the pre-eminent rank and station which he holds in this great work, rather than the order of time in which his resurrection occurred, a point to which no importance whatever attaches. As all hinges upon Christ, and all is accomplished by his power, and by virtue of his resurrection, he stands out foremost and pre-eminent in all these displays whether they take place before or after his advent to this world.

Grant, then, a resurrection to Moses; let him appear on the mount of transfiguration, as the evangelists say he did; let the dispute between Michael and the Devil be concerning the only point about which it could have been; since there is now no objection to all this, while there is, as we have seen, proof in its favor both incidental and direct.—Advent Review.

The Syrian Complication.

By a recent letter from Rev. Dr. Thompson of Beyroot to a friend in this city, which has been placed at our disposal, we have advices of the prospective affairs of Syria as these appear to one of the most intelligent and experienced observers in that country. It is a picture of intrigue and duplicity that tallies well with the developments of treason in the South. Dr. Thompson writes: . . . "I cannot give you much insight into our probable future. Never since I have been in Syria were our prospects more uncertain, more discouraging, than they are at this hour. Not even during the war and massacres last summer did I feel more perplexed. The French are still in Lebanon, and I do not believe they intend to leave at all if they can help it. To enable them to say to the 'powers' that it would be ruin to leave according to promise, they are getting up projects which will most likely result in fresh outbreaks in the month of May. Already the Christians, through their instigation, have become very insolent. They beat the Druzes, rob them and kill them; they even beat the Turkish soldiers that are in Lebanon. The grand French-Maronite scheme now is to restore an Emeer of the Beit Shehaab, a grandson of the old Emeer Besheer, as Governor of all Lebanon and Hermon down to the Huleh. He is to be clothed with all the power of the old Emeer. This petition is signed openly all over Lebanon, and the French are determined that it shall be established. The Christians are encouraged to declare that they will not live under Turkish rulers, and they do declare this without reserve or fear. In the meanwhile the Turk is augmenting his army in this country. He is courting the Druzes, the Metawilehs, the Mohammedans, [illegible] doin[illegible] preparing for the struggle. England is also intensely interested in the game, and has a force collected not far off that can soon be precipitated on our coasts. It is a matter on which I never doubt for a moment, that England will go to war rather than allow France to consolidate her power at the head of this sea. The question of peace or war hangs on the decision of Napoleon. England will avoid war as long as she can with safety to her highways to India, and no longer. Napoleon, if he thinks he has any chance of making good the possession of Syria, will fight for it.

"This, in brief, is the state of painful uncertainty which hangs over us all. No merchant is embarking in any transaction that would require a mouth to wind up—all sales are for cash. We missionaries undertake nothing new. We will not even rent houses for the summer, since we do not feel sure we can occupy them. Now this all may pass away. The French may quietly withdraw; the Shehaab project be abandoned, and all things restored to the former regime. Shall we then have peace? Far from it. The European merchants will leave. The Christians of Lebanon will flee down to Beyroot, and all who can will escape to other lands. Moslem fanaticism will unite with Druse ferocity and Bedouin barbarism to render Syria utterly intolerable. It is no longer possible for the Christians to live under Druse rule. It is no longer possible for them to trust their Moslem neighbors. It is no longer possible for them to confide in Turkish soldiers. Syria and Lebanon, in particular, can never have peace for any length of time, so long as the Turk is supreme governor of the country. The Turkish government must be destroyed before we can ever have a steady and safe government. I cannot pretend to know how these coming events are to affect our mission. We may all be temporally driven from the country, or we may not. But I cannot doubt that if driven away for a time, it will only be to return under more favorable auspices. This land is yet to be evangelized. The Lord reigns over all, and it is his prerogative to bring order out of confusion, and life out of death. It is through death that life arises, both in the natural and spiritual world."

The old Emeer Besheer referred to above ruled in Lebanon from about 1815 to 1840. He was a Maronite under French protection; and it was under his despotic rule that Asaad Shidiak was persecuted even unto death for renouncing the Maronite Church for the simple faith of the gospel. It was under the same regime, a French-Maronite protectorate, that Dr. Van Dyke and Dr. Eli Smith were driven from Deir-el-Kamar, in 1840. The Druzes rebelled against this Maronite despotism, and under Druse authority and influence, our missionaries have been more safe and prosperous than ever before. So little ground is there for sympathy in this country for the nominal Christians of Mount Lebanon in opposition to the Druses. The Maronite ecclesiastics are agents of the Papal Church, and are upheld by France for its own ends in the East.

The Turkish Government at Constantinople is practically favorable to religious liberty. But in the provinces its rule is slack and often corrupt, and the fanaticism of the Moslems is sometimes incontrollable. Dr. Thomson's idea is that Syria should be constituted a Viceroyalty, like Egypt, and placed under the joint protection of the Great Powers. In these trying times, let the missionaries and their cause be earnestly remembered at the throne of grace.—Independent.

Request.

I am about preparing a work on modern Spiritualism, showing What it purports to be, What it is, Its character as developed in its own history, theologically, politically and morally, giving numerous quotations from their own works and sayings; also a record of names, and acts of many of the most prominent actors among them, whose infamy, and moral, intellectual, and physical ruin ought to be more fully known to the public, as a beacon light to warn the honest. I have been laying by material for this purpose several years, yet there is doubtless very much of importance, in this direction, which I have not. I therefore give this notice with request, to brethren and friends, that if they have important facts on the points above stated, I shall be much obliged if they will forward them to me by mail, from any part of the country, giving names, and places, and incidents, of what are known to be facts. If any one has a paper in which Dr. Randolph's confession and recantation is published, will they mail it to me. I had it, but gave it away. I do not ask for books;—I have most of those which have been published against Spiritualism. Give us facts within your circle of acquaintance, (not on the phenomena,) such as are not probably published, and such as should be published. We wish to show, also, that these developments should be headed by the ministry and church, as an important sign of the closing up of the gospel dispensation for the kingdom of God. Address

I. C. Wellcome, Richmond, Maine.

For the Crisis.

[illegible] ...not well illustrates [illegible] some persons have of throwing off all personal remarks, when they may apply to them, and to them only. They will hold up their head, stare you in the face, make a half laugh, and even say amen, when they know that what is being said will apply to themselves, and being true, they are as far from being what they profess, as Satan is from being a saint. This they will do, to show to those present that the remarks only apply to some others in the company. If such possessed a little knowledge of human nature, they would know that their bravado and amen, would prove to the congregation, tnat they were the ones to whom the remark would apply.

Anecdote of Father Moody.

"Father Moody was born at Newbury, in 1675, graduated at Harvard College in 1697, was settled at York, Me., in 1747. He refused to receive from his people a stipulated salary, and lived with them half a century, on their voluntary donations. The following anecdote is related of him in the Lowell Offering:

Colonel Ingraham, a wealthy parishioner, had retained his large stock of corn in time of great scarcity, in hope of raising the price. Father Moody heard of it, and resolved upon a public attack upon the transgressor. So he arose in the pulpit one Sabbath, and named as his text, Prov. 11: 27; 'He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him; but blessings shall be upon the head of him that selleth it.' Col. Ingraham could not but know to whom the reference was made; but he held up his head and faced his pastor with a look of stoic unconsciousness. Father M. went on with some very applicable remarks, but Col. Ingraham still pretended not to understand the allusion. Father Moody grew very warm, and still more direct in his remarks upon matters and things. But Col. Ingraham still held up his head as high, perhaps a little higher, than ever, and would not put on the coat prepared for him. Father Moody at length lost all patience. 'Col. Ingraham!' said he, 'you know that I mean you; why don't you hang down your head?'"

Timely Advice.—An Exchange says—"Read the Bible before you look into the morning papers. The soul can't live on dispatches; the bread of heaven is better for its health than telegrams. Of political talk and of crisis, you will have enough anywhere, and to surfeit. Seek the company of those who fear the Lord and think upon his name. Make the most of every religious conversation. Lose no opportunity of assembling with those whose conversation is in heaven; you need it just now. Use the means of grace diligently, or you will be swept away by the current that is bearing all things upon its bosom. Keep yourself in the love of God. Commune with your own heart in these noisy times. A great saint has said that he found the second Psalm an excellent meditation for a crisis."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 12, 1861.

Our Explanation Accepted.—The Harbinger publishes our letter of the 30th ult., accompanying it with the following perfectly satisfactory reply, which previously reached us by mail:—

Seneca Falls, June 1, 1861.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—It is with great pleasure that we give your Letter a place in the Harbinger.

Surrounded as we were with the unceasing care and perplexity of the office, and our spirits weighed down somewhat, the article appeared more unkind than perhaps it would to a casual reader. We were much pained by the thought of it; but now our rejoicing is the more full, to know that our friendship is strengthened instead of weakened. We love you the better now; and we hope this little circumstance has developed some of the christian graces more perfectly in us both.

Let us "pray for one another," that when our Lord shall appear, we, with all our readers, may be presented faultless before the throne of His "excellent glory," and "inherit the kingdom."

Yours, in pure love and friendship,

T. G. Newman.

"We trust," adds our brother to the foregoing, "that nothing will be allowed to mar the peace and harmony now existing between us and the other papers in our ranks. We ought to labor together, if we do not all see alike, to prepare a people for the Lord when he comes." To which we say—Amen.

"The Kingdom of God; or, The Reign of Christ on Earth, as Revealed in the Holy Scriptures. By H. V. Reed. To which is added 'What is Truth?' or Divine Instruction to the Inquirer after Truth, by Thomas G. Newman. Seneca Falls: Office of the Millenial Harbinger. 1861."

We have received from the publisher, Bro. T. G. Newman, a copy of the above work, (for which we return thanks,) but have not read it. It is a pamphlet of 96 pages, got up in good style: price, 15 cents.

Accident to Bro. Bishop.—We are pained to learn, by a brief note received from Bro. S. W. Bishop just as we are going to press, that he was hurt on the morning of the 8th inst. by the kick of a horse. In consequence of this, he requests us to publish no appointments for him this week. We are led to hope that his injuries are not serious. but he has given no particulars. Let us pray for him.

☞ Bro. Grant returned on Monday evening from his western tour, in good health and spirits. Bro. Carpenter will observe that Bro. G. is to be in Canada at the time of the Grove and Camp Meeting noticed by him in another column, and hence cannot attend that.

"Millennial Harbinger."—We welcome this paper in its "New Dress," and congratulate Bro. Newman on its improved appearance. It has our heartiest good wishes. Speaking of the improvements, the Editor says:—

"It contains much more reading matter than the smaller size of the last volume. The type is a size smaller, as well as the paper larger, all will, of course, be satisfied with the improvements. Be punctual in sending pay for this Volume, and we will be punctual in sending the weekly paper to you all. Trusting that it may feed the babes with 'the sincere milk of the Word;' furnish meat for the 'grown up;' and 'strong meat' for those who are experienced and old; be a source of comfort to the disconsolate; joy to the downcast and afflicted, bearing the good news of Life to the dying, the riches of the Kingdom to the poor saint—we send it forth attended with many prayers on its mission of mercy, peace and good will to men. Welcome it to your homes, and pray that it may be a blessing there."

The Pope's Perplexity.

In a late Pastoral—says The Catholic of June 1st—Cardinal Wiseman thus speaks of the peculiar circumstances of perplexity and affliction in which the Holy Father is placed:—

"For although there appear to be no ground for apprehension in consequence of his late momentary attack of illness, we all must be aware how wearing and trying must necessarily be that state of uncertainty regarding his future position which the complicated state of politics must produce. Miserable and humiliating it is to every Catholic heart to think that the tranquility and happiness of the Vicar of Jesus Christ should have to become the sport of those whose natural duty it was, at any sacrifice, to secure them. Shame that it should be a matter of daily and fluctuating rumor whether or no he is to be handed over from one calling himself his son to another boasting of the same title; and what is the price at which he is to be so transferred. Hateful it is to any loyal and affectionate son to see these conditions every day canvassed, and the familiar question reported as repeated with varying answer—'What will you give me and I will deliver him up to you?' The more gross injustices may have been accomplished; the more bitter sufferings may have been inflicted; the more personal insults may have been exhausted; the pangs of his crucifixion may have been finally felt; the act of spoliation, of the rending in pieces of all that gave him outward and worldly dignity may have been completed; he is now left hanging in what is intended to be ignominious suspense, while the dice are cast by political gamesters for his seamless robe of state, that capital of the Christian world, that seat of his eternal pontificate,—to see 'whose it shall be,' a secular possession of one or many declared foes, no longer the object of the world's veneration, admiration and love.

"It is that God will bring our Holy Father quickly out of this harrassing and humiliating condition that we wish you now more particularly to pray. It may be in the Divine counsels, unsearchable to human wisdom, that the last stage of tribulation may not have been yet reached by him, or by the Church. But every new form of suffering which afflicts him calls from us for a new expression of sympathy; as 'Cross springs from Cross' in his path, it is the duty of children to cast over it the flowers of their affectionateness, and thus make it look at least less rough and hurtful. Ready with our succor or our homage, according to each changeful need, the present is a state in which neither human wisdom nor any expression of even universal desire seems able to influence the counsels, whether selfish or ambitious, of those who are playing the game of which his temporal crown is the stake. That God alone, in whose hands are the hearts of kings, is our present resource. In His might is our only trust for counteracting the strength of our Pontiff's enemies,—in the abyss of His wisdom is our only confidence for the overthrow of the craftiness of the many Achitopels who have combined the wiles of their diplomacy to aid every form of rebellion against king and father."

Carpet-bag Reform.

Some of my friends have wished me to "report progress" in the business I have followed so much of my time for two or three years past. And I have promised to make occasional reports. But I shall not at any time go much into details, and the whole matter requires some general remark which I will offer now at the outset.

To sell one's own books from town to town, and from parsonage to parsonage, is no customary work or invidious task, and needs to some minds an apology. He who follows such a trade must show that he is not a common pedlar, but—if he can—that he is an uncommon pedlar. If I can put myself on a level with that "uncommon landlord" in Goldsmith's play, I shall do well. With no wish to boast, I will try.

I was first thrown into my special business by the [illegible] labor upon a book had ended in a debt of $8700 to stereotyper and printer. Publisher had failed; also a friend who had expected to bear a good share of the expenses. Repudiation was unfashionable at the North, to say nothing of its being unchristian. I was just then invited to be Professor, and hoped the pay, with demand for book, would cancel the debt; and that the place would save me from the need and the danger of habitual controversy. I longed for quiet and rest. But the pay was neither ample nor sure. And a very polite dun, inquiring if I had not studied "grace" long enough, and if I might not try "debt" for a while with better results, carried my growing uneasiness into decision, and I espoused the carpet bag. No bill of divorce has yet seemed to me valid.

Not because the business is so profitable that I have no heart to quit it. True, it brings in something so long as it is carried on—sometimes a good day's profits. But the books must be made as well as sold,—the subjects must be thought out, read up, and the matter written, stereotyped, printed, etc., etc.;—and all this costs not a little time and money. The speculation is more in the brain than in the purse.

And then the business is so like hunting and fishing! I must play the scout from early morning until late evening, and possibly earn then nothing more—be it better or worse—than my salt. If temporary success were made the test, I might sometimes endorse Franklin's definition of a fishing rod—an implement with a hook at one end and a fool at the other. I greatly envy those who can put their finger precisely on their day's work in the morning and follow it all day.

Withal, I am somewhat of a speckled bird, heterodox among the orthodox, and orthodox among the heterodox. Many would have me to be either flesh or fish. To such I must say that so long as I am true to my own settled convictions, and so long as I am actually convincing others that evil is not eternal, they must be content. If I honestly disclaim what is sometimes called materialism, and yet show to the entire satisfaction of some thinking and leading men,—ministers and doctors of divinity,—that the souls of the finally wicked will die, the great point is gained. Let my friends settle their own views on the state, or the existence, of the dead. But I trust they will not press any view as if it were essential to immortality through Christ alone. Above all, let this faith appear as a Christian life, and the argument will be found better than all logic, or even than all quoting of a "Thus saith the Lord."

I sell books, in short, because no other business offers, and because the public appetite for the view offered is not yet sharp enough to sell the books largely through the trade. I find I can scatter seed that might remain unsown, and that does seem to bear fruit. I find a frequent acceptance, and a growing tolerance of our view, among the ministers. Without caring whether it shall ever be popular or not, I believe it duty to work patiently and systematically to promote what I regard as important truth. When the carpet bag begins to drag, I doubt not I shall find some other line of labor, or of rest.

I said I should not report much of details. And, for several reasons. I do not argue much with ministers. An interview of five minutes commonly suffices for business. I answer all questions asked for information. But, if I should try argument, I should have to give away my books. Such is human nature that if you refute your brother, he wishes not at once to seem to confess it by purchasing your wares. If he refutes you, he has no reason for patronizing you. My only argument must be that of the honest merchant—that the buyer will get his money's worth.

Again, I shall avoid extensive detail because I dislike to tell tales out of school. Private conversation is generally more or less confidential. I shall give no names. And I shall tell few unpleasant things, partly because I meet them rarely, and partly because I sometimes fear that my friends are too eager to hear them. If I tell you that I have sold "Debt and Grace" to about thirty Catholic priests, and that some of these have bought other books when I have seen them a second time, you may guess that I am rarely repulsed by other ministers. I verily believe I meet with more of censorious remark and unkind speech among brethren of my own faith than among those who differ from me.

But I have already prattled at greater length than I intended. More anon.

For the Crisis.

The Need of Laborers.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."—Matt. 9: 37.

These are the words of our Savior to his disciples, and, when read, should be regarded as such. Then how important it is that all who profess to be his disciples should heed his words, and go forth into the field and labor—yes, work while the day lasts. We are taught by Jesus' example to work, for we learn that when he was on earth he was always at work—always engaged about his Father's business. It is true that we cannot do the same work that the Savior did. We have not the power that he had to restore the blind to sight, to heal the sick, or raise the dead, or, like Jesus, be always able to help those who need our help; yet we can, like him, be always ready and willing to help. We read that Jesus prayed to his Father;—we can go and do likewise. Yes, let us all imitate the Savior's example, and come boldly to the throne of grace, and pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth more laborers,—for the summer will soon be past and the harvest ended! O, let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober. Then if we are faithful to our mission in the service of our Lord, a crown of glory will be our reward at last.

Castleton, Vt. Carrie.

Correspondence.

From Sr. N. M. Henry.

Dear Readers of the Crisis:—Once more I address you from "free-soil," thanking God that there is such soil yet in our country. Thus far the Lord has protected us from all extreme of harm, although we have been threatened with summary punishments, and husband with death in different ways, such as shooting, stoning, etc. But he escaped their hands with only a severe bruising, from which he has scarcely recovered, although it is several weeks since it occurred. After we had started for freedom, we were overtaken by Secessionists, our money demanded, which had to be given up. I had a few dollars which they did not get, which enabled us to get to friends. There were several Union families who fled the place before we left, but as we were so long on the road, detained by high water, and young stock, which latter had to be driven slowly, they had come to the conclusion we were all murdered. They hailed us gladly, safe "over Jordan," (as we used to say in Missouri, in speaking of the Mississippi river.) Families that remained in the state because they had such large quantities of grain in the ground, fared much worse than we did, although no worse than we should had we persisted in remaining, for the next night after we fled, there were two hundred armed ruffians on our track. So we learned from others that fled after we left. Our only sin was loving the old "stars and stripes." One Mr. McDaniel, who had over one hundred acres of wheat, oats, and corn in the ground, was ordered to leave. He only had time to put his family in the wagon, and what he could hurry into it of things that they needed most. Before he was out of sight of his buildings, they were in flames, with all their contents. Sixteen Union men were murdered who attempted to stay by their homes. Oh! how good it seemed to be once more free and safe, and among friends. Another gentleman has just called who has fled from Missouri; they come every day.

When we got to Grafton, the first place in Ill. that we landed at, husband at my suggestion went to the post office and inquired if any in that place took the "Crisis." They told us, "yes, a Mr. Hiram Brown, in such a place in the village, took it." We called on them; found a lovely old couple, whose kind words and kind faces we shall ever remember with pleasure. We stayed in "the cottage under the hill," which Bro. Walter Pratt remembers, and has preached in. Dear brother Walter! how I thought of you while sitting there and hearing that aged couple talk of you, "hoping to see your face once more." They treasure up all your letters as precious things. They have never heard a preacher but him, and when I told them of the rest of our "band of brothers," of the campmeetings and conferences, I shall never forget the look of Bro. Brown, as he "wished he could be with them." Bro. Walter, are you never coming again? You promised in Boston you'd "find us." Where are the rest of that army of preachers east? Bro. Grant, you are comparatively free now; do come into this lovely western world and bring the bread of life. We have a home for the present—a "pilgrim's home," of course, in one of the loveliest villages on the "Terre Haut, Alton and St. Louis R. R.," a day's drive from Grafton only. Come, Bro. Grant and Walter. It is a time when people will hear now. Come and tell the people "what these things mean." Last winter times were so prosperous with us that husband often said, "if this was a free state I would pay the fare of a good preacher to come to us," (we don't mean by that you are not any of you good, but one that is fitted for new fields, armed at all points, wise as serpents and harmless as doves. There are a great many good housekeepers that can't build a house,) but as we are now situated we could not offer that much, but will do all we can. Any brother that comes this way will be sure of a welcome. We hope Bro. Chandler will come this far south. Brethren in Illinois, when you write for the Crisis, give the County always. Remember our P. O. address is—F. W. and N. M. Henry, Bunker Hill, Macoupin Co., Ill.

Yours in love, N. M. H.

May 29, 1861.

From Bro. F. Douglas.

Bro. Wendell:—I returned from Syracuse yesterday, whither I went last Wednesday, to be an attendant at Bro. Grant's published meetings. Word had been sent me of their postponement, but I did not get it. On arriving at Bro. Turner's, I was much disappointed to find the meetings were put over to the future. I immediately wrote to Oswego to inform some brethren who contemplated aiding by their presence in making the meetings interesting and profitable. Bro. Lillis (not getting the word) came on the next day, with a warm heart and strong expectations of getting an extra good meal. Several others came from other places, all quite disappointed. Bro. Lillis, after seeking in vain for the place of meeting, sought a boarding place. He there found a poor penitent seeking for mercy. Bro. L. was made an instrument, in the hands of the Lord, of bringing that soul out of nature's darkness into the light of God's truth. His disappointment was the means of much joy. I visited an aged aunt who has a hope akin to Paul's, and the brightness of the coming morn lights up the lamp of faith, and plucks the thorns of care from life's pathway.

In these troublous times, many are saying, "I believe we are living in the last days." Many more begin to see a harmony between prophecy and truth. The believer's heart becomes increasingly joyful, as the time draws near for the grand Union Meeting in the mansions of infinite love. The Lord of glory will be present and preside, and the holy of all ages will then behold Him, whom having not seen yet they loved. On Sunday, I met with the brethren for worship in their new Hall. Bro. Turner gave three excellent discourses. I was invited to dispense the word of life, but my bodily health is not at present sufficiently strong to warrant any extended speaking. Excessive care and hard labor have unfitted the physical to sustain the mental in the desired work of proclaiming the truth, so plainly revealed in God's word, but to the mass of mankind enshrouded in Theological mysteries. The brethren in Syracuse have a very pleasant Hall in which to worship the God of their fathers, and I hope that the travelling preachers will give them a call, and if possible make previous arrangements, that timely notice may be given the public.

Trumpeters of Truth! blow on! until your notes of invitation and warning shall be lost in the blast of the archangel, summoning the world to judgment.

F. Douglas.

Oswego, N. Y., May 30.

P. S.—Permit me, dear brother, to annex my heartfelt wishes that your editorship may be blessed of God to the advancement of the cause of truth and the eventual salvation of many in His Kingdom. F. D.

From Bro. Joseph H. Rice.

Bro. Grant:—I send enclosed one dollar, wishing the Crisis. I would send more, were I able, as there are some here who are anxious to hear the truth. I am doing what I can, in my weak way, to enlighten those around me in the blessed truth of immortality through Christ, etc. I am poor as regards this world's goods, but sometimes feel quite rich, and heir to still greater riches. If you could send some tracts, they would be very acceptable, as I wish to spread as fast as possible their teachings or explanations. I am the only Adventist in this vicinity, and have hard rowing sometimes. Yours in love.

Hillsburgh, Nova Scotia.

From Bro. A. J. Cottrell.

Bro. Wendell:—I have been receiving the Crisis free for over a year. I am not able to pay for it, owing to hard times in the west, and to my own ill health. I am endeavoring to publish the gospel to the people of the west, but get nothing for that, only what I receive from on high. Now if you are able to send the Crisis to me free, I would be very glad to receive it,—if not, you will have to stop it. I can only pray for your success, which I shall do whether I get the paper or not. Yours, looking for the soon coming of Jesus.

Rock Grove City, Iowa, May 24.

From Eld. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Wendell:—There are a few saints in this western field, who are looking for the King of glory; and the number is increasing in spite of all the opposition to the truth. I have already engaged to hold six or seven grove meetings this summer. I have many more calls than I can comply with. Our prayer is, "Lord, send forth more laborers into this western vineyard." We want men of God.

Hope the Crisis may be as beneficial to the church in your hands, as it has been in the hands of our beloved Bro. Grant.

Springville, Wis., June 2d, 1861.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

Bro. Wendell:—After three days' sail we have safely arrived in Nova Scotia. We* were greeted very cordially by the brethren and sisters here. The minds of the people seem to be already stirred; the little chapel is filled every evening with attentive listeners, and we can but hope some of them, at least, will believe and obey the truth, and be ready for the coming kingdom.

Hillsburgh, N. S., May 29, 1861.

* Sr. M. accompanied Bro. Ingham and his family.—Ed.

From Bro. F. J. Hess.

Bro. Wendell:—We have been cleansing our Chapel to-day. We expect Bro. C. B. Turner from Syracuse next week to preach to us. I wish you were here with him. God speed the right. Yours in hope of eternal life.

West Martinsburgh, N. Y., May 31.

From Bro. Avery Hotchkiss.

Bro. Grant:—You will think strange, perhaps, that a blind man should want your paper, but I have the faculty of hearing, yet, and I have children that love to read as well as I love to hear. Therefore, I want you to send me your excellent paper, the Crisis. From your pilgrim brother, looking for Immortality when the Life-Giver comes.

INTELLIGENCE.

Russia.—The day fixed upon by Alexander II. for the initiative removal of the system of serfdom, was March 27, 1861; and two years are allowed for the completion of the necessary arrangements for securing to the 22,000,000 serfs each a hand-el homestead, they paying the proprietors for it, and for the services relinquished. During these two years the serfs will remain tributary to their landlords. A writer who has much acquaintance with Russia says, "So this great work, projected many years ago, and agitated more or less by almost every monarch since Peter's time, has now been completed by Alexander II. under circumstances which will rank his name with the masterspirits of the age. The nobles were opposed to the measure almost without an exception, and it was really such a Herculean task, and involved such a degree of experiment, risk, and positive expense, that the czar might well have held himself excused from meddling with a system which was interpenetrated with the very foundations of the empire. In a nation, too, whose history afforded the barons so many precedents for making way with a monarch who opposed their interests, the courage of Alexander II. is as creditable to him as the breadth and statesmanship of his views."

England's National Debt.—The foundation of the immense debt of England was laid in the reign of Charles II., two hundred years ago. In 1763, it had risen to £139,000,000. At the close of the French Revolution in 1802, it was £571,000,000. In the twelve years of the wars of Napoleon, it increased to £865,000,000, which was its maximum. From this point it rapidly decreased for thirty years, having been reduced in 1845 to £768,789,241. At the close of the Russian war in 1856, it had increased to £800,000,000; and in consequence of the Indian mutiny, the Chinese war, and the distrust of France, can hardly have diminished since. The interest on the present debt at the rate of 3 1-2 per cent. is $134,400,000 per year, or $368,000 a day, $15,333 an hour, $255 a minute, or $4,24 a second.

THE SYRIAN MASSACRE.—According to information supplied by the Turks themselves, sixteen thousand Christians, including women and children, lost their lives in the massacres committed by the Druses in Syria; three thousand women and young girls were carried off and sold to the Turks; seventy thousand Christians of all sects were reduced to ruin; and one hundred and fifty towns and villages, with their churches, schools, and monasteries, not including the houses destroyed at Damascus, were pillaged, burnt or destroyed. An American missionary in the midst of these horrors gratefully acknowledges that God fulfilled his promise to be with them in trouble, to deliver and honor them. He says, not a Protestant home on Lebanon was robbed during this fearful war, and, with a single exception, the whole Protestant community kept aloof from those scenes of violence. The Druse governors treated them and all in their employ with kindness and consideration, even in the days of highest excitement and terror, sending to them by night and by day, assuring them that no harm should come nigh them.

ROMANISM IN GREAT BRITAIN.—In 1829, the year in which Roman Catholic emancipation was conceded, there were 447 priests and 449 chapels; now there are 1,342 priests and 993 chapels. There are now 47 monasteries, and 155 convents for females. In 1847, the government first appointed Roman Catholic chaplains for soldiers; now there are 145. Besides many thousands of pounds voted annually for the support of schools, there has been £21,462 voted for the building of school-houses between 1839 and 1859. There are 414 in England, with 378 male and 743 female teachers, and having 19,838 male scholars and 26,522 female. In 1859, nearly 480,000 Roman Catholic children attended the national schools in Ireland, at a cost to the country of about £205,000. Nearly £30,000 is annually paid for the support of Maynooth college which is devoted entirely to the training of priests. About £10,000 is appropriated to the Romish reformatory schools in England, under the care of the Jesuits, and about the same amount is paid to chaplains of prisons and poor-houses in Ireland. The British Parliament annually votes over £332,000 for the propagation of Roman Catholic doctrines, and for the education of those who teach them.

PROGRESS OF THE TRUTH.—Although the priests and local magistrates in France oppose the progress of evangelical truth, there is a steady advance. The opposition of the government has been relaxing, and there is a prospect that the departments will soon enjoy the same liberty which exists in Paris. In many places the pastor or evangelist goes from house to house, and prays with the people, and is allowed to read the word of God, on condition that there is no large meeting. In 1830, there were six Protestant churches in Paris; now there are forty-three. Protestant schools have a high reputation, and are largely attended by Roman-Catholic children. The bigotry and superstition of the priests are denounced in some of the secular papers. The chief editors of the three most important journals of Paris, the Journal des Debats, the Presse, and the Siecle, are Protestants.

NO SUNDAY IN WAR.—The truth of this popular maxim seems to be confirmed by history, which records many eventful battles fought on that day. In the Peninsular war, there were many instances of Sunday fighting. The second battle in Portugal was fought on Sunday, August 31, 1803. The battle of Fuentes d'Onor was gained on Sunday, May 5, 1811; that of Ciudad Rodrigo was fought on Sunday, January 16, 1812; that of Orthes, on Sunday, February 27, 1814; and that of Toulouse, the last general act of the Peninsular war, on Easter Sunday, April 10, 1814. The battle of Waterloo was decided on Sunday, June 18, 1815. The victory of Inkerman was gained Sunday, November 5, 1854. The terrible Indian mutiny broke out at Meerut, Sunday, May 10, 1857.

ANOTHER WORLD'S FAIR.—There is to be another World's Fair in London in 1862, and a palace is to be built for the exhibition of articles exceeding in grandeur and beauty the Crystal Palace of 1851, or any other modern structure. It is to be located at South Kensington, about five miles from the centre of London. The main hall is to be 550 feet long, 250 wide, and the unparallelled height of 220 feet. The nave and transepts are to be 2,200 feet long, 80 feet wide, and 100 high; the picture galleries will be 2,300 feet long, 60 to 70 high, and from 85 to 55 wide. It is to be finished by February 12, 1862.

SCIENCE RELIABLE.—The practical usefulness of scientific observations was recently shown by a prediction of Admiral Fitzroy of the English navy, who, three days before a gale, telegraphed its approach to the ports on the northern coasts of England. A newspaper in one of these ports ridiculed his warning. Three hours before the gale came on, a number of vessels put out to sea from that port, but were driven back and wrecked on the shore.

RESULT OF PRACTICE.—It is said that the children who are taught to punch the eye-holes of needles by hand, acquire such dexterity as to be able to punch a human hair, and thread it with another.

☞ A Roman Catholic periodical of Paris, the Revue des Deux Mondes, declares, "Much may be said on Protestant diversities and sects, but one fact remains certain: it is, that nations where the Bible circulates and is read, have preserved a strong, deep, and enduring religious faith; while in the countries where it is not known, one is obliged to deplore a moral superficiality and want of principles, for which a splendid uniformity of rites cannot compensate. What are learned mummeries, compared to the healthful and pure atmosphere which the Bible spreads wherever it is read, whether in low or elevated classes?"

THE MIGHTY FALLEN.—A remarkable instance of the mutations of earthly affairs is found in the present condition of the Bourbons, once one of the proudest and most powerful families in Europe. Now, since the recent defeat of the King of Naples, there are in exile fifty-five of the seventy-four members of the Bourbon family, who are the direct or collateral descendants of Louis XIV. The Empress of Brazil, the royal family of Spain, and the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg Gotha are still in power.

ROMANISM WANING IN IRELAND.—The Irish Times estimates the present population of Ireland at 5,950,000 souls, and says that on the fairest calculation not more than 3,450,000 are Roman Catholics, the remaining 2,500,000 being Protestants. From various causes, the emigration has been chiefly from the Roman Catholic portion, and the number of those professing that creed has annually diminished.

SAILORS.—It is estimated that more than two millions of men are engaged in a seafaring life. There are 300,000 men in English vessels; 150,000 American seamen are engaged in foreign commerce, and nearly the same number on our inland waters. In the whale-fishery there are 20,000, and from 7,000 to 8,000 in the navy. Nearly half of the whole number are accessible to truth in the English language.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOODS.—There has been a frightful inundation in Holland, by which nearly forty thousand acres of cultivated land were submerged. Forty-three villages were totally destroyed, and sixty thousand happy, wealthy and industrious men were reduced to beggary. Several thousand cattle were drowned or killed, and the loss of human life was fearful.

POSTAGE STAMPS.—An engraving company in Philadelphia manufacture the postage stamps for all the post-offices in the United States. Last year they furnished 223,867,270; value, $6,218,310. The greatest vigilance is exercised at every step of the process, to prevent counterfeiting or imposition.

From the South.

Several of the graduates of Antioch College who have been teaching in the South have been obliged to leave. Two returned from Mississippi and Tennessee last week. They say that the secession sentiment is now almost universal. Those who struggled for remaining in the union have yielded to the action of their states, and now go in for defending the steps which have been taken. They are slaveholders, and see that, the South having taken the steps they have, the ruin of their cause is the ruin of the system of slavery, and hence, principally, their own ruin. Our "property," say the slaveholders, will be worthless if the South is whipt; and we may as well stake it all in the fight. Hence they are desperate.

Everybody is armed. The unmarried, from boys just big enough to shoot a squirrel, upward, are obliged to enlist. The married men, and those whose business necessitates their remaining at home, also have to join the home guards. They are not allowed to live there on any other conditions. One of our students, who is in New Orleans, only escaped being pressed into the Southern army on the ground that he was a British subject.

How different is this from the condition of things North, where men have to be pressed back, instead of forward into the army. How different the resources for a second campaign when the South will have none to fall back on, and the North will have five to one who has gone.

These men say that that the candid men of the South acknowledge that the North can beat them in the end. Their superiority in numbers and resources renders that unquestionable. But the South have provisions and resources for a year, and they mean to fight so desperately that the North will be glad by that time to make some compromise and let them go. They hope for sudden and desperate action. The policy of the North is caution and thoroughness.

FOREIGN NEWS.

PER STEAMSHIP ARABIA.

Halifax, June 10. The Royal Mail Steamship Arabia, from Liverpool at 12 30 P. M. of the 1st, and Queenstown evening of the 2d inst., arrived at 2 o'clock this afternoon, and would sail for Boston at about 4. She has 130 passengers.

Steamer North American put into Queenstown on the 31st with her screw damaged.

The Africa arrived out on the 2d, and the Hammonia on the 30th, both from New York.

The Arabia brings £82,500 in specie.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons on the 30th, Lord John Russell intimated that an Englishman had been forced into the militia at New Orleans, but the British Consul there obtained his release. Other similar instances of impressment had occurred in the Southern States, but they appear to have been unauthorized, and assurances had been received from the Montgomery Government that they would not sanction such acts.

In a speech on the paper duty, Lord John Russell strongly deprecated the exultation with which Sir John Ramsden had alluded to the bursting of the bubble of democracy in America. In common with the great bulk of his countrymen, he (Lord John Russell) was pained at the civil war which had arisen from the accursed poison of slavery left there by England, and which had clung around them like a poisoned garment from the first hour of their independence.

The London Times, in an article on the American blockade and England's position on the question, urges that now, while it is yet time, European governments should come to a general understanding on the subject and adopt a public law.

FRANCE.

The American citizens in Paris favorable to the Union breakfasted together in the Hotel du Louvre on the 29th. About one hundren and fifty attended, of whom one-third were ladies, including the wife of Gen. Scott. Mr. Cowdin presided. Resolutions were adopted, pledging the meeting to maintain the Union under any circumstances.

Mr. Dayton, the United States Minister, said that since his arrival in France, he could detect no unfriendly feeling on the part of France to the United States, and certainly no French citizen would be found among the privateersmen. He expressed his conviction that the rebellion would be put down.

Cassius M. Clay spoke at length, and was emphatic in his comments on the conduct of England in recognizing Southern belligerent rights. He declared that if ever the flag of England was associated with the black flag of the South, the Star Spangled Banner of the United States and the tri color of France would be seen together against her, for France had not forgotten St. Helena.

Hon. Anson Burlingame spoke on the same topic.

Col. Fremont was next called upon, and was received with enthusiasm. He made a quiet and moderate speech. He regretted the fanatical war, and felt confident it would end in the triumph of truth and justice. He had been called back to America, and would lose no time in responding. He was ready to give his best services to the country.

Rev. Dr. McClintock followed. He said he did not attach any importance to the mutterings of the English press. The people of England had not yet spoken; and when they did speak, their voices would not be found on the side of piracy and slavery.

Capt. Simons, of the U. S. Army, said he was on his way home in obedience to the summons of Gen. Scott.

Mr. Haldermann, Minister to Vienna, and Rev. Mr. Tnayer also spoke. All the speakers evinced not the slightest doubt of the final triumph of the North.

The treaty of commerce between France and Belgium has been officially promulgated.

A decree has been issued opening all the French seaports for the importation of cotton yarn of certain numbers.

The Bourse on the 31st closed heavy; rentes 69f. 40 c.

Prince Gortschakoff, Governor of Poland, died at Warsaw on the 30th.

Count Cavour's health has improved.

Dates of April 25 have been received from Cape of Good Hope. News unimportant.

The steamships America and Prince Albert have arrived with intelligence from Europe to the 21st ult. On the 16th ult. an interesting debate had taken place in the House of Peers as to what constituted a "lawful blockade," and as to whether privateering was piracy. Touching the blockade, Earl Granville was of opinion that to be lawful it must be effective, but he did not deem it essential to its legality that all ingress and egress should be rendered impossible—only extremely difficult. Lord Derby, on the other hand, maintained that as the United States Government had not a sufficient force to blockade the "whole Southern coast," it could only establish a partial blockade—ergo, it would be allowable, according to his lordship's logic, to carry on a clandestine trade with the South wherever the blockade was not actually enforced! Concerning privateering, Lord Brougham declared that, by the law of nations, it was not piracy, but the ex-Chancellor forgot that the parties to the Paris Conference in 1856 had modified the law of nations in this respect, and that England, as one of the subscribing powers, was bound to observe the new ordinance. The Queen had held court at Buckingham Palace on the 16th, when Mr. Dallas delivered his letter of recall, and presented Mr. Adams to Victoria. Cassius M. Clay, our Minister to Russia, had addressed the London Times on the American struggle in brief and decisive terms. He asks the Thunderer whether England can afford to offend the United States?—whether she is so secure in the future against home revolution and foreign ambition, as to venture to sow, in the American bosom, the seeds of revenge? During a debate in the French Senate on the occupation of Syria, M. Belant stated that France would evacuate Syria at the time appointed, and, if evil result ensued, the responsibility would rest on those who demand her withdrawl. After the evacuation, a combined squadron of French, Russian and British ships will cruise off the Syrian coast. The Belgian Chamber of Deputies had vetoed unanimously the new Treaty of Commerce with France. Negotiations were still pending between Denmark and the Confederation respecting the Schleswig-Holstein dispute, and hopes of a peaceful arrangement were entertained. The decree for the annexation of San Domingo to Spain had been signed by Queen Isabella. The Oriental mail had been received. India was quiet. There was much activity in the cotton interest, with advancing prices, but the import market was dull, and freights less firm.

CENSUS OF GREAT BRITAIN.—Partial returns of the new census of Great Britain are given in the English papers. The population of Liverpool proper is 263,000; including the suburbs, 450,000. The number of sailors is 14,000, which is only 1000 more than there were ten years ago. The increase in the entire population of the city and suburbs has been a little more than twenty per cent. in the same time. Manchester has decreased in population, but the surrounding country has gained largely. The present population of the city and its suburbs is 357,000, a gain of forty thousand in ten years. The diminished population of the city is owing to the conversion of dwelling houses into places of business, and the reconstruction of narrow streets, crowding out the poor. The returns from the rural districts of England show a diminution in the agricultural population. This is noticeable in Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex counties, where the population has barely held its ground as compared with 1851, while in Yorkshire the decline has in many places been extraordinary. Glasgow has a population of 403,142, exclusive of the suburbs, which increase the number to 446,395, an increase of 86,257 in ten years. The district known as the Staffordshire Potteries has a population of 120,000 and upward.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The Position.

We are plainly drawing toward important events. Every day is bringing the hostile lines nearer together, and massing up the hostile forces, which cannot, in the nature of things, remain long face to face without a collision. From a rapid glance at the position of our forces it will at once be seen in what direction is the drift of military events at present. Gen. Butler, at Fortress Monroe, remains comparatively quiescent, and it is as difficult to detect his plans from the management of his forces as it is ordinarily to read his thoughts in his face. Nothing significant, either, is to be gathered from the movements of Gen. McDowell on the south side of the Potomac. He is strengthening his position, and that is about all. But when we look toward Harper's Ferry, we perceive a different state of things—not by itself considered, but, according to the country gentleman's description of his residence, as "the centre of a very large circumference."

Washington itself must be considered for the time being one of the spokes leading to that "hub," as we have accounts of eight regiments and some odd companies marching and under orders to march from the Capitol in the direction of Harper's Ferry. From Baltimore and the Relay House four thousand troops have already been thrown forward to Frederick Junction, about twenty-five miles from the Ferry. At Chambersburg the gathering still goes on, consisting of a complete army in itself, volunteers, regulars, infantry, cavalry and artillery. The indications are that the nearly 14,000 troops from this point will advance southward by different routes, the movement having commenced under Gen. Thomas. Seven thousand of the number are reported at Greencastle, and it is conjectured that a large part of these will advance to Williamsport, up the river, where they will join with a detachment of Gen. McClellan's forces, and penetrate to Winchester, Va., to cut off the rebel retreat. It will thus be seen that from Cumberland, round eastward in a semi-circle to Washington, there is a combined movement upon Harper's Ferry of between 30,000 and 40,000 Federal troops. Unless, therefore, Gen. Johnston has prompt and liberal reinforcements from the rebel headquarters, he must retreat or be routed.

We know not what the rebel strength at Harper's Ferry is, and the condition of the men has been the subject of irreconcilable contradictions. But we assume that there are 10,000 fair fighting men there. They must retreat. The only saving clause in their case is the supposition that they form but a single feature in some comprehensive rebel plan for distracting our forces in the nick of time, which shall save them from attack or make a contest feasible. Is there any such plan? Two or three have been suggested, involving a rapid crossing of the Potomac at different points, and a rising at Baltimore. We confess there are bad signs in the latter neighborhood. But the transfer of Cadwallader to another field, and the appointment of Gen. Banks at Baltimore, with an adequate force, shows that the government is on the alert to make all snug and tight in that quarter. As to rapid advance movements, of any extent, on the part of the rebels, they are simply out of the question. The government has the inside track, by virtue of locality and well-distributed forces, and can defeat any scheme of that nature.

The only policy apparently left the rebels is to concentrate, fall back, take a good position and await the result. Rumor avers that Beauregard has fixed on Manassas Gap for that purpose, where he proposes to intrench all his available forces, withstand the Federal troops until their constitutional impatience has demoralized them, when he will "overwhelm and destroy them." But this ingenious programme will require such a long time for its development, that we shall have leisure to consider it sufficiently hereafter. At present the question of interest relates to Harper's Ferry, and it is apparent that a few days will disclose its solution.—Boston Journal, June 11.

Obituary Notice.

Died, at Burrville, Ct., April 15th, of scarlet fever, KATE JANE, daughter of Harvey B. and Jane Martin, aged five years, one month and seven days.

Another bud is fallen. Every day swells the number that is soon to come forth all blooming from their dusty beds and rise to meet Jesus, our Elder Brother, and forever bask in the sunbeams of his glory. And while you, Bro. and Sr. Martin, are left to mourn, let me remind you that God hath said he would bring them (precious jewels) again from the land of the enemy. O, then let your hearts be fixed; let your whole soul be stayed on God, and while you mourn, be careful not to mourn as those that have no hope; "for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Are we ready, waiting, looking, longing, sighing for home? Let us be real good. May God bless you. Amen.

J. K. BELLOWS.

Burrville, May 31st.

Died, in Pawling, N. Y., April 12th, Bro. JOHN B. DODDS, of consumption, aged forty-two years.

Notices, &c.

Eld. M. Grant in Canada East.

On the 27th of June Eld. M. Grant will commence a series of meetings at Danville, C. E., and continue as long as may be thought advisable. By the earnest request of the Church, J. PORTER.

Danville, C. E., June 1, '61.

Grove Meeting.

ELD. MILES GRANT will attend a meeting of days with the church in North Stanbridge, C. E., to be held in a pleasant grove, on the land of Bro. H. N. Currie, in the Stone Settlement, to commence July 11th, at 10 A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. A general attendance is solicited. Brethren, let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that it may prove to be for the glory of God and our good. C. P. DOW.

Notice.

The next R. I. Quarterly Conference will be held at Foster, R. I., commencing June 26th, at precisely 2 o'clock, P. M. At the request of the church, the religious exercises will be protracted over the following Sabbath. Those from abroad will come on the Providence and Danielsonville stage and stop at Hopkins Mills. Let us again come together prayerfully and in the spirit of our Master.

M. R. PHETTEPLACE, Clerk.

Grove Meeting.

By divine permission, a Grove Meeting will be held in the township of Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis., on the road leading from Baraboo to Merrimac, near the Saw Mill, commencing on the 21st of June, and holding over Lord's day. W. SHELDON.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The next session of this Conference will be holden at Lake Village, commencing Thursday, June 20th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. Brethren will bear in mind that according to a resolution passed at the last session, the Conference on Thursday will "commence with a social meeting; and following this, a session of the Minister's Conference." Also remember, that according to another resolution, "The ministers are expected to report themselves personally or by letter; and the churches by delegates or by letter." Will brethren be punctual in this matter?

T. M. PREBLE, Clerk of Conference.

Concord, N. H., June 7, '61.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be holden at West Wareham, Mass., near the Tremont Depot, upon the Fair Haven Branch R. R., to commence July 4th and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to make this a meeting of great interest. The field is comparatively a new one, but there are some warm hearts here who love the "faith of Jesus" and desire to have it published abroad. There seems to be a laudable desire to hear the "word of the Lord," and now is our time to work. We know not why it may not by the blessing of God be a large meeting. Wareham is twelve miles from Plymouth, six miles from Carver, ten from Middleboro, twelve from Mattapoisett and eighteen from New Bedford—the three last mentioned places being connected by Railroad; and we earnestly hope for a large representation, from each of these towns, of brethren and sisters who have a "mind to work" and hearts to get good. Eld. J. S. White, Eld. E. Bellows, and possibly M. Grant, are expected to preach the "word of life" at this meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all preachers and laymen who have a heart to forward the work of God to aid us in this attempt. Come one, come all—come in good cheer—come in the might of God—come early; let us celebrate the "Fourth" in Divine worship. Come to stay all the week. Provision made for man and beast. In behalf of the brethren,

H. F. CARPENTER.

Steamboat Notice.

Steamboats run from New London to Sag Harbor on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. The Steamboat Mary Benton leaves Hartford Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday in the morning, and stops at New London at three o'clock in the afternoon. JAMES LEE

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting at Pine Swamp, Sharron, Ct., on the ground where our meeting was held last year, commencing June 19th, and continuing over Sunday. Provision will be made for taking care of horses. Those wishing to stay in the woods had better come prepared. We expect there will be one or more tents on the ground; those wishing to bring tents can do so. Some of the Lord's servants will be there to preach the word.

In behalf of the Church at Pine Swamp,

S. B. MUNN.

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting in Plainfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., on land we occupied last year for a meeting. The meeting will commence June 27th, at half past ten o'clock, A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Brethren are invited. For the church, RUFUS STARKS.

Grove Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be held in Dane, Dane Co., Wis., (near Bro. A. Darling's,) commencing on the 5th of July, and holding over the following Lord's day.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. WENDELL, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

"Comfort Ye My People, Saith your God."

Child of God! rejoice, rejoice!
For the Day of days is near;
He whom thou hast made thy choice,
King of kings, will soon appear!
[illegible] hosts will round him bend,
[illegible] blessed footsteps tend
[illegible] earth he shall descend,
Robed in glory.

[illegible] this vale of woe,
[illegible] while" 'tis o'er—
[illegible] we know,
[illegible] death will reign no more.
Christ himself will take the throne,
And His mighty name be known
Through all climes and every zone—
King of glory.

"Nations shall learn war no more,"
And the clang of arms shall cease
When alone this wide earth o'er
Jesus reigns, the Prince of peace!
"Every knee to Him shall bow,
Every tongue confess" him now,
And his sovereign right avow—
Lord of glory.

Child of God! rejoice, rejoice!
For the slumbering righteous dead
Shall awake at His blest voice,
And come forth in life to tread
On the ashes of the slain,
Never more to die again,
But with Zion's King to reign
In His glory.

And our earth shall bloom once more
Like the garden of the Lord;
All that's lost will Christ restore,
Saith the sure unfailing word.
Pure and lovely then 't will be.
While afar "from sea to sea,"
Will resound earth's jubilee—
Glory! Glory!

A. C. Judson.

For the Crisis.

A "General Epistle."

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—The inquiry comes ever and anon to me, in friendly epistles, why I do not write more frequently for the Crisis, and soliciting a continuation of my communications. A good sister, weeks since, sent some post-stamps, and requested in return "a good article for the Crisis." I have not written her an expression of thanks for her timely gift, nor furnished the desired article, and the reason is this: a more than ordinary pressure of care has rested upon me during the past few weeks, and I have not had the opportunity to prepare, nor even to finish articles already commenced. For this reason, also, letters from friends have remained unanswered.

Every wife and mother who has the entire labor of the household devolving on her,—the cooking, washing, ironing, cutting out and making of garments, with the other et ceteras which go to make up the burden of domestic cares, and only one pair of hands, not over and above strong, with which to perform it all,—knows well enough that there is but little time left for mental occupation. Believing it duty to perform domestic labors with faithfulness, it has only been by dint of early rising and incessant application that I have been enabled to find time, now and then, to furnish articles for the several periodicals for which I contribute, and answer the welcome epistles of my loved correspondents. It would afford me much pleasure, were it in my power, to answer all of the transient epistles received from aching hearts; but they must accept the will for the deed in most instances. I hope they will not refrain from writing me because of this necessity, for it is not a trouble nor a burden imposed, as some fear it may be. I will occasionally write you a "general epistle," that may perhaps have a few words of counsel or encouragement adapted to your case.

It is a source of grief to me that I am unable to assist, as much as I am disposed to, in bearing the burdens of others. For years I have felt it a duty and a privilege, wherever I have lived, to seek out the abodes of poverty, and afford relief and sympathy as far as was practicable. It has brought much joy to my own heart to be thus engaged. And while I know that all around me there are families suffering from this dreadful disease, diphtheria, and deaths are frequently occurring, I feel almost impatient of the bonds which restrain me, and long for time and strength to devote to the alleviation of the sufferers and the comfort of the bereaved. I feel as though I wanted a dozen bodies to devote to the work so abundant. The work for my own family must needs be done; "charity begins at home," but I do not believe it ought always to stay at home.

The precious truths of the Bible—truths specifically adapted to our day—burn and glow in my heart, and I would fain give utterance more frequent, as I see the "famine" so extensive; and the suffering, neglected poor and down-trodden move my sympathies, and I wish I could devote a few hours a day to them, and in view of the abundant labor so important, and the laborers so few, I cry out, "Lord, who is sufficient for these things?" And then the great fact standing out before our vision, that "the night is far spent and the day is at hand,"—the night of weeping, sorrow and death to the righteous is almost gone, and the perfect day of unclouded glory, and undiminished joy, and eternal life is at hand, when the soldier can doff his armor and put on the crown;—this fact, I say, having connected therewith such awful responsibilities, when we consider that the sinner's probation then terminates, awaken an intense desire to be diligent in the work of the Lord.

Who can, in view of these considerations, spend the precious hours in unnecessary sleep, or profitless labor? Our golden moments ought to be devoted in that way most advantageous to others. I say others, for self ought to engross the smallest portion. Our own individual ease and gratification must not assume the largest claim, but it should be a question of interest, how much can I deny self, and sacrifice personal comfort, in order to give pleasure and comfort and real good unto others? I pity those who live for self! They do not know what real happiness is. One hour devoted to the alleviation of physical or mental suffering among the poor, brings to the individual more true enjoyment, a higher joy, than a life time of selfish pleasures. It is duty to do all in our power towards lightening the heavy burden of care and sorrow that is pressing down the hearts of those around us, and unless I am conscious of faithfulness in this respect, I feel condemned before God. From the abundant wardrobe and well-filled pantry a portion should go forth to those scantily furnished; and where the means are not abundant, the will is to give according to the ability, and if too poor to impart, then let the heart offering of love and sympathy be given. All can contribute something towards alleviating the burden of sorrow, and filling up the cup of joy. I was on the point of saying: sisters, instead of boarding up in your wardrobes the cast-off clothing, send it to the "Mission School," and instead of spending precious hours in ornamental work, prepare garments for the poor; but on a second thought I concluded that no Advent sister, at least, has any such hoards, nor does she spend her time in such profitless employment.

I thought not of writing such a long letter, nor on such a subject, but I have penned my thoughts as they came, and hope my apology will be accepted, and the hints thrown out improved. Yours in love,

Mary D. Wellcome.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Canada West.

Dear Brethren:—It is something over four years since I was constrained, by the word of God's grace, and the aid of his holy Spirit, to accept of his Son Jesus Christ as "the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely." After being made free from sin and become the servant of God, I immediately saw that God repuired fruit unto holiness, and that the reward for the same would be everlasting life in [illegible] world to come. I began then to study my Bible. I had read it before as too many do who are no better off at the close of life than if they had never seen a Bible; but now I began to study it, to find out what was the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning me. I soon discovered that the word of God enjoined certain duties upon every professed follower of Jesus Christ. I became desirous of obeying that form of doctrine which was delivered me. Accordingly, I was planted together in the likeness of Christ's death on the third Sabbath in 1857, as an expression of my faith in the cheering promise that I should be in the likeness of his resurrection, and became identified with the regular Baptist church at Forestville.

They soon discovered in me what they considered to be the gift of preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and gave me license to improve the same. I became a man of one book, took the Bible as my only guide, and began to preach Jesus and the resurrection. By the aid of God's Spirit and his word, I did not shun to declare what I believed to be the counsels of God. To all appearance everything seemed to bid fair for a prosperous journey through life. But this state of things did not long continue. Grievous charges were soon brought against me for preaching against the popular doctrines which are found what Luther called "the Roman dunghill of decretal." "A certain Demetrius," who had "brought no small gain unto the craftsmen, called together the men of like occupation," in council, and declared that I had "turned away much people, so that not only this (their) craft (was) in danger," but that our doctrine would "be dispersed, and her magnificence destroyed whom all Asia and the world worshippeth." But he did not succeed in his intentions at that time, to cast me out of the Synagogue. Not satisfied with this, he made the second attempt, in which he succeeded, and had the audacity to say that if I would hold my peace, and keep those great cardinal truths as private property, the church would allow me to remain a member; but if I still persisted in preaching that man's existence was contingent and not absolute, he would use all his influence against me. But by God's grace assisting me, I continued to declare unto the people that none other thing should come than that which was spoken by the prophets; how that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead and show light unto the Gentiles.

The following is a summary of the doctrines which I preached to the people, which caused the uproar: 1. That man, in his primitive state, before the fall, was conditionally immortal, but by voluntary transgression forfeited his right to the tree of life and thereby brought death (or mortality) upon the whole human family. 2. That death was the extinction of all consciousness in man until the resurrection of the dead; that God was not the God of the dead, but of the living; and to this end he sent his Son into the world to die and rise again, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living. 3. That there should be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust, and that a final judgment should take place on the day when God should judge the secrets of men's hearts by Jesus Christ according to the gospel. 4. That God would create new heavens and a new earth; that the new earth would be the final abode of the saints, and they should reign forever and ever; but they who are "contentious and obey not the truth" he would punish with everlasting destruction in the lake of fire, which is the second death. 5. That the time of restitution is at hand, when Christ shall appear in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, and fulfill all that God had spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began.

The above sentiments have caused me to be excluded from the fellowship of those whom I love in the Lord; to be a lone pilgrim in this vale of mortality, yearning for unending existence—for the day when I shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Yet I cannot say that I am entirely alone, for there are a few around me of like precious faith. God grant that there soon may be more. Pray, brethren, to the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth more laborers into the harvest, for the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few, and time is short, so what is done must be done quickly.

Eld. Jacob Blain of Buffalo was through this way last fall, and lectured a few times upon the life and death question—principally upon the death question. I would be glad if more of the advent brethren would come this way, whose steps are directed by the Lord and whose conversation is in heaven.

A word or two about the Crisis, and I close. It has been a welcome messenger to our house ever since I have taken it. I was reading one of its articles on "The Importance of Prophecy" the other day to a distinguished Baptist deacon, and he got rather annoyed, and exclaimed, "I cannot see any more signs of his coming then than there was years ago:" thus fulfilling 2 Pet. 3: 4. I wish you a hearty success in your late undertaking, and back it up by sending you the six months' subscription for the Crisis. May the Lord direct your steps. God grant that the contributors to the columns of the Crisis may be of one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel; that they may avoid doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings and evil surmisings. I remain your brother and companion in tribulation and in the kingdom of patience, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life.

"The Battle Field of the West:" Bro. Doyo's Labors.

Bro. Wendell:—I sent a communication the last of February of my labors of last winter, and for some reason it has been overlooked. I will send you a condensed report of the main result of the work on the battle field of the west. I arrived at Floyd, a pleasant little town on the Cedar river, Dec. 26th, 1860. I commenced a meeting with many impediments in my way, which measurably broke away, and the work began with a firm, steady move, until there were twelve who wished to be organized into a church, which was done; and about the middle of January I baptized ten, and the number that composed the body was twenty-two. I then left the place to go and attend a quarterly meeting at Marble Rock. The storm of snow nearly broke up our meeting, but I baptized one more in that place. I then went to Rock Grove, to attend a Debate between myself and a [We omit here a word which we cannot decipher with certainty in the MS.—Ed.] preacher, which resulted in good to the cause of truth. The Lord be praised. I then returned to Floyd, the 4th of Feb., and remained for some time, as I was blockaded in with snow and the river. The work went on finely between Feb. 10th and 24th. I baptized thirty-five in the Cedar river, making in all forty-five converts, and the number of the church was about sixty. I delivered forty discourses in that place; met with cruel persecution and opposition; protracted meetings were kept up, either in the form of prayer or preaching meetings, to keep their flock from hearing the truth,—but, thank the Lord, the good seed sown in tears brought forth fruit to the glory of God. May He have all the praise.

Report of the Shell Rock Christian Quarterly Conference.—I left home May 14th for the above meeting. I found on my arrival some anxious to see me again, and truly I was glad to see them. I found them doing well, considering their circumstances, as they had none to preach to them from the time I left until I returned, except what they got from other preachers of other societies—some of whom consider them worse than infidels, and who, when giving the invitation to partake at the Lord's table, said they wanted all to come that believed in the immortality of the soul, which of course excluded the brethren. They had some trials to pass through, which, being young in the rules and regulations of church order, made it quite a task, but they keep up weekly conference and prayer meetings. The meetings were well attended, notwithstanding the short nights, and a number of brethren from abroad were present. The preachers in attendance were C. Churchill, H. Janes, L. G. Hiscox, Peter Mitson, and Bro. Durand. Not much business was done, except hearing reports from churches, which were encouraging. All in peace and growing order. Two young gifts were received into the Conference to improve—Bro. W. H. Beramen and Windfield S. Rider, of Floyd church. The latter was one of the number that I baptized last winter, who is now teaching school, and probably will not do much in the cause until winter.

I visited the brethren at Rock Grove. They seem to be built on the Rock, and are firm. I remained at Floyd, preached through the week, and baptized three more, which makes in all forty-eight in that place. I then left the brethren and went to Howard, where I gave one discourse and had the pleasure, between sundown and dark, of baptizing one more, this being the fruit of the seed that was sown one year ago last November. There are hardly any who sympathize with us at this place, and many who oppose. There are few men who will take a start as early as this Bro. did, and no better prospects around him. But the hope of endless life is cheering. I left him and his companion to go on their way rejoicing, wishing them success. I arrived home; found them well, but myself somewhat worn out. I preached thirteen times; was gone two weeks; travelled about two hundred miles; baptized four.

I feel as though the field is large here. We need more help. Hope the Lord will send more laborers to help, for the harvest is great and the laborers are few. I hope the brethren will remember me at the throne of grace, that my strength may not entirely fail. Farewell.

For the Crisis.

What is Present Duty?

In view of the calamitous events now occurring in this hitherto highly favored land, it becomes a matter of deep interest to the child of God to understand his relation to these events, and also his duty, which can be settled only by a reference to God's unerring word. That Word should now be to us what the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night were to Israel, when God interposed for their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. Therefore, beloved of the Lord, let us carefully examine that word, and walk at all times in its light, and soon, very soon, Christ, who is our life and our hope, will appear for the deliverance of all whose names are written in the book.

That the evils under which this nation is now groaning have been brought upon it by the iniquitous system of slavery, is apparent to all; and it is also apparent that the southern oppressors are the aggressors, and in the wrong, and deserve the chastisement that the national government is preparing to visit upon them. Now, whilst the whole land is stirred up by the thrilling news of the day, and all are rushing with frenzied zeal to the field of battle, for the purpose of correcting these evils, and staying the progress of the scourge, it is hardly possible to avoid our feelings and sympathies to run out in the same channel; and, before we are aware of it, a spirit of war is kindled in our breasts, and we can hardly desist joining with our neighbors and friends in avenging for all these evils. But what saith "the word?" Rom. 12: 17–19.—"Recompense to no man evil for evil"—"if it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." That these and similar passages are of universal application, I cannot doubt. But what is the work now in progress in our land and in the earth? When and how will it end? As a people, we believe and have for many years taught others to believe, from evidence derived from the Bible, that the day of vengeance of our God and year of his redeemed was about to dawn (see Isa. 63: 4 and context); that God had a controversy with the nations; that he was about to plead with all flesh; that the wicked were to be given to the sword, according to his word (Jer. 25: 31 and context); that He was about to speak to the nations in His wrath and vex them in his sore displeasure (Psa. 2d); that the nations were to be made angry; that his wrath was about to come, the dead to be judged, and the wicked destroyed out of the earth, etc. (see Rev. 11: 18), and Christ's glorious, everlasting kingdom set up in their place, etc. Now if our teachings upon these subjects have been correct, as I verily believe they have in the main, then we are not at a loss to understand what will be the end of these things, neither need we be at a loss to understand our respective duties in the matter. If God's work, his strange work, has commenced, as I believe it has, it will progress to the consummation, and will only end in the overthrow and utter destruction of all his enemies. Hence for us to attempt to interpose, by stepping out into this rushing current of events, with the hope of staying its wild and turbid course, will only be to oppose God's own appointed purposes of judgment upon his enemies, and expose us to the danger of being destroyed as opposers.

But what shall we do? Trust in God. He is our hope and our shield. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but will soon prove mighty through God to the pulling down the strong holds of Satan. Therefore, let us see to it that we have on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand in this evil day, and, having done all, to stand. The Word is a strong tower into which the righteous may run and be safe. O, how thankful I feel that God has promised a refuge from the coming storm. Let us make sure work for ourselves, and then we shall be able to aid others who are anxious to escape, to flee to this city of refuge as the only place of safety in all the universe of God. In the present rush, are we not witnessing the waking up of the mighty men of war, according to the prophet Joel? If so, can the true children of God assemble themselves together with those whom God calls heathen? There is but one class in that assemblage. Are not the churches throughout the land identifying themselves as parts and parcels of that band? Have they not decided to take sword, against the express commands of Christ? If so, must they not perish with the sword? O, how fearfully blind have they become! Truly we are in that place spoken of in Isa. 60: 1, 2. Truly, "darkness covers the land and gross darkness the people," which darkness is of itself strong evidence that God is about to arise and have mercy upon Zion. Let all act as they shall answer in the final day.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

Eating Between Meals.

Whether we eat once or twice or ten times a day, we should stop with our regular meals. Nothing containing nutriment, whether in a solid state, or liquid condition, should go down our throats between our meals, except water. To this rule, so far as the healthy are concerned, I know of no exception.

May we not eat an apple, it will be asked, or a little fruit, of such kinds as we happen to meet with, or a few nuts? Must we go without all these things which the kind hand of our Creator has scattered all along our path, probably not in vain? No doubt that these things, for the most, are made to be eaten, either by us, or the other animals, or both. Both, perhaps, were ordained recipients of these blessings; but they should be brought to our tables, and, without exception, made a regular part of our meals.

It may perhaps be said that our ancestors, puritanical though they were, accustomed themselves not only to lunches in the forenoon and afternoon, but to nuts and cider, or apples and cider in the evening, and yet were a healthier people, by far, than their more squeamish ancestors or descendants; and there will be no want of thought to secure truth as the basis of this remark. But, remember, our fathers and grandfathers set out with better constitutions than we, so that, whatever may have been the cause of their better or our inferior stamina, they could most certainly bear up longer under violations of physical law than we, their descendants. It does not then follow, as a necessary inference, that we may eat lunches because they did.

It is no uncommon thing to hear farmers telling how glad they are to be through with their haying and harvesting. But it is they who use lunches, or take other means beyond their regular meals for restoring themselves temporarily at the expense of the future, who complain most. He who eats of plain food twice a day, and drinks nothing but water, endures best the heat and fatigue, and suffers least from gnawing and faintness.

Two meals a day, especially during the short days of winter, not only give the digestive powers—their stomachs in particular—more time for rest, but actually enjoy more, and find themselves in better general health. Of this habit we have many living examples. And there are men to be found who take but one meal a day, and yet remain quite healthy. The elder Fowler, the phrenologist, is one of them. Such, too, in past years, were Tallyrand of France, and Mr. Taliaferro of Virginia. Some of the old Romans ate but one meal a day. Seneca, though worth an estate of $15,000,000, taught the doctrine and practiced it. Most persons, however, eat so often that they never know what a good appetite is. They remind me of a half idiot, whom I met in early life, who was always pressing the question, "Don't you wish to know the art of never getting dry?" that is, thirsty. "Always mind to drink before you are dry," he added, "and you will never be dry." We always eat before we are hungry, and hence we are never hungry.

Coarse food should be ever made the adjusting element of the appetite. The inhabitants of Ticin, according to the testimony of travellers, live almost wholly on food from Indian corn, and yet are among the robust of our race. Their laborers in that region are even preferred, on public roads and elsewhere, to the athletic Swiss, their neighbors. Nor do the armies of South America, when, during a forced march of six hundred miles, they have lived exclusively on parched corn, suffer any inconvenience. And those who are familiar with the early history of New England, know very well what large use the savages of the country made of what they called their nokake. The wild men of Borneo, as they are called,—who have been travelling in this country by way of public exhibition,—never, till within a year or two, have used any food except fruits and farinaceous substances. Though weighing less than fifty pounds each, their strength greatly exceeds that of any grown man found among us.

Perhaps the worst violation of law which forbids eating between meals, is found in the wretched habit of the young, of eating what are called oyster suppers, at late hours, and at improper places. Our cities and large towns abound with places of resort for those who will not deny their appetites; and it is not surprising that they so often prove, not only a pathway to the grave, but, as Solomon says, to hell.

[The foregoing article was sent us by Bro. C. G. Carre, in his own hand-writing. Over it was written "For the Crisis"—following it were, first, the initials "C. G. Proper Names in the N. Testament.

"Who was Eliseus?" asked an inquisitive pupil in one of our Sunday schools the other day. The teacher to whom the question was put, was not able to give a ready answer. The name was not familiar, and there was little in its form to connect it with any person in the Old Testament history.

But we have worse instances than this. In Heb. 4: 8, we read,—"For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not have spoken of another day." What does this mean? Who was this Jesus that failed to give his people rest?

It is difficult to conceive why our translators should have introduced such confusion into their version of the New Testament, and still more difficult to understand why our Bible Society should perpetuate such blunders and their necessary consequences. The origin of this evil is easily explained, and is as follows:

There is a very marked difference in the phonetic character of the Hebrew and Greek languages. When, therefore, the Old Testament was translated into Greek, great changes were made in both the form and sound of many proper names, in order to accommodate them as far as possible to the Grecian ear and tongue. To the Greek the Hebrew language seemed harsh and barbarous. Hebrew names were therefore modified and softened down in accordance with the genius of the Greek language, wherever such modification was allowable. Thus Joshua was changed into Jesus, Isaiah Esaias, Elijah Elias, and Elisha Eliseus.

As the apostles were more familiar with the Septuagint, so called, i. e., the Greek translation of the Old Testament, of which I am here speaking, than they were with the original Hebrew, and as they themselves were writing their gospels and Epistles in the Greek language, it was natural for them to take the proper names as they found them, and hence it happens that we have them in the New Testament as they appear in the Septuagint.

When, however, the Bible came to be translated into English, the Old Testament was translated from Hebrew and the New Testament from Greek. The translators desired to be literal, and hence it happens, to the annoyance of the great mass of readers, that we have the same names under two different forms, and sometimes so unlike as to confuse every one not especially informed upon the subject.

"It is immaterial," says Archbishop Newcome, "that the names of the same persons should be written in the New Testament as they occur in the Old." This removes all ambiguity and brings our familiar friends of the Old Testament before us in the New, in their well-known dress and personality.

I will here give a list of the principal names occurring in the New Testament which require the alteration now suggested.

Charran should be written Haran; Elias, Elijah; Eliseus, Elisha; Esaias, Isaiah; Jeremias, Jeremiah; Jesus, in Acts 7: 45, Heb. 4: 8, Joshua; Jonas, Jonah; Judas, Matt. 1: 2, Judah; Messias, Messiah; Noe, Noah; Ozias, Uzziah; Osee, Hosea; Phares, Pharez; Rebecca, Rebekah; Sara, Sarah; Sion, Zion; Siloam, Siloah; Urias, Uriah; Zecharias, Zechariah.

There are a few other names that fall under the same class, and should be carefully corrected. May we not indulge the reasonable hope that publishers issuing editions of the New Testament, and especially our great American Bible Society, will so far venture upon innovation as to correct this glaring fault—a fault that never should have been allowed to mar the English Bible, and which has lost nothing of its mischievous character by the lapse of time.

A Rusty Saw.

"I hope you will excuse me this morning," said a rusty saw, as the carpenter took it down from a peg where it had hung inactive for a month, "I feel very unfit for labor. Indeed, I am quite rusty. That board, too, looks hard, and it will require an effort to go through it such as I am altogether unprepared to make. Besides, there are several of my companions both bright and willing; I commend you to them;" and the saw yawned till every tooth was visible, as if this short speech had quite exhausted its small stock of energy.

"True as steel is a good motto," replied the carpenter, "and I trust you have not been so oxydized by the general corruption of the times as to forget your share in it. You ask to be excused, because you do not feel inclined to labor. I may not be able to appreciate the feelings of a rusty saw, but I must say that feeling is not to be consulted in cases of duty. You plead your rustiness. If this is to be admitted, I might as well hang you up and expect no further service, for your rustiness will not leave you as long as you do nothing. Oil and exercise will alone remove it. As to the difficulty of the work, I am not aware that an instrument has any right to choose what work it will do, or will not do. And your last plea, that I have other saws in better condition, only proves the folly of the first three, for if I had pursued with others the course which you desire me to adopt in your case, they would be in no no better condition than yourself." Hereupon the workman, having overruled all excuses, applied a few drops of oil, and introduced the reluctant saw to a board of seasoned oak, and repeated the operation, till after a few days, it became as bright and agile a saw as any one could wish.

We sometimes find a rusty saw at the prayer meeting. Ask him to lead in prayer and he shakes his head. Perhaps he utters a half-dozen words of prayer, not to the Master, but to the servant, "I pray thee have me excused," and short as it is, it is as long as several acceptable prayers recorded in the Bible, and if it were in the language of the publican, or the penitent thief, or Peter sinking amidst the waves of Gennesaret, or the Syro-Phoenician woman, and directed to heaven in the right spirit, it would find acceptance. But what reasons has the man for not praying? The reasons of the rusty saw. He does not feel like it. He has not prayed for a long time, and is quite rusty. There are others bright with communion with God who can do better. The workman feels tempted to hang him up, and thus spare himself the mortification, on the one hand, of being refused when he asks him to pray, and, on the other, the pain of listening to his first weak and awkward attempts to plead at the mercy-seat. But this will not be best for the subject himself. A few drops of oil, such as the beloved disciple recommends, 1 John 2: 20–27, and exercise may make his face to shine.

I sat down by the fireside of a kind-hearted man, the other day, who seemed to be in this rusty-saw condition. He is a professed christian, and his wife also. His children have been presented to God in baptism, and yet he has never established the worship of God in his house. He knows it to be his duty. He is troubled, perhaps, at times, but he is reluctant to begin. He never feels just like it. Poor man, he is to be pitied, and his children. What refuge has such a family in the day of affliction? Alas, how many families of this kind there are, and how would the power of religion be multiplied if every professedly christian family would maintain the daily worship of God!

The Importance of Regularity.

There is a great temptation at such a time of great excitement, to abate the ordinary diligence of the business man, the housekeeper, the student, and the christian; wholesome and wise arrangements looking to the regular discharge of duty from hour to hour, habits of study and prayer, and the like, are in danger of falling into disuse. The following timely remarks on this subject, introducing the memorable experience of Dr. Kane in the Arctic expedition, are quoted from the New York Methodist.—Amer. Pres.

"Nothing so supports our nature in making extraordinary efforts, or in enduring sacrifices, as a high tone of moral feeling. When Dr. Kane was locked up among the icebergs of the Arctic Circle, with the prospect of close imprisonment for months, with his men enfeebled by disease and privations, and when all but eight of his company had left him to search for a way of escape, he sustained the drooping spirits of the handful who clung to him, and kept up their energies by systematic performance of duty and moral discipline. 'It is,' he observes, 'the experience of every man who has either combated difficulties himself, or attempted to guide others through them, that the controlling law shall be systematic action. Nothing depresses and demoralizes so much as a surrender of the approved and habitual forms of life. I resolved that every thing should go on as it had done. The arrangement of hours, the distribution and details of duty, the religious exercises, the ceremonials of the table, the fires, the lights, the watch, the labors of the observatory, and the notation of the tides and the sky—nothing should be intermitted that had contributed to make up the day.'"

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Wait a Little Longer.

Friends on life's tempestuous sea,
When the storm-clouds threaten thee,
Wait a little longer,
Jesus, in the ship asleep,
Will his own in safety keep.

When temptation's waves roll high,
And you fain would from them fly,
Wait a little longer;
Jesus, tempted like as we,
Able is to succor thee.

You who form the christian band,
Eager for the promised land,
Wait a little longer;
Jesus, standing at the helm,
Safe shall guide you to his realm.

Though the voyage of life be long,
You can cheer it with your song,
Wait a little longer;
Safe into the port you'll glide,
Anchor on the other side.

Thoughts for the Times. 1861.

I. It has been often said that "Honesty is the best policy," though it may at first appear to be the reverse. It is equally true that the "Knowledge of God is the source of GREATNESS," though to the world at large it may appear to be despicable. The more you live in the "great world" the less you become; the more you live in the ways of God the greater you become. The ways of the world are bordered by weeds or flowers—sometimes useful, sometimes beautiful, but at all times trifling. The ways of God are bordered by the oak of the forest, and by the cedar of Lebanon. We have many CLEVER statesmen, but have not one GREAT one;—many clever writers for the public press, but not one is great. Because they have renounced the knowledge of God, therefore what wisdom is in them? We had once a GREAT minister—Mr. PITT—not, indeed, a godly man, but one who was compelled by the temper of his age to act upon the mighty principle that Truth must not be subjected to Falsehood. He upheld the great principle of Protestant supremacy, and by the greatness of the principle he became great himself. To him we owe that final coalition of Europe against the First Napoleon which culminated at Waterloo, and gave peace to mankind for half an age. The Liberals came into power,—admirable in their liberality,—for ever to be applauded for that hatred of human blood which so happily succeeded to the blood-stained tyranny of the TORIES. Let every man have the praise that is his due. But those blood-stained Tories, and their unfortunate monarch, had still a PRINCIPLE. They stood firmly by the side of Protestant Truth. The Liberals, unhappily, had no principle. Their principle, in fact, was the abnegation of all principle. A man without a principle is like a body without a bone. It may be beautiful to look at, but it will stand no wear and tear. So it is with the man! The principle is the bone, the external actions are the flesh. Through the absence of the invisible sustaining power, all the public measures of our statesmen have collapsed. Bold words have been followed by feeble acts. Mr. Pitt formed that coalition which overthrew the First Napoleon—not, indeed, in the name of the Lord, but through the supporting influence of the Lord, whom he honored in public principle, though not in heart. Our present statesmen have no principle whatsoever: they live from hand to mouth on the expediency of the moment, and, therefore, God has left them to collapse like a bodily frame without bone. It was in the year of 1858, or at latest before the war of 1859, that a coalition should have been formed against the Third Napoleon, after the model of the coalition devised by Mr. Pitt, and matured by his successors from 1806 to 1815. Such a Coalition would have checked Napoleon at the outset, and might have arrested his career for ever; but now it is too late. TOO LATE is stamped upon every device of our statesmen, and upon every preparation for our defence. The avalanche which may be stopped by a pebble, or set in motion by a breath, having once begun its course, what power can arrest it? We might have shared with him in the liberation of Italy, and have shared with him equally in its alliance. With the most odious selfishness we kept talking, and writing, and lecturing, on the miseries of Italy, but reserved all our forces and our treasures for slaughtering the Hindoos and poisoning the Chinese. Is it not just in God to make our own selfishness the instrument of retribution? We have lost the support of Italy for ever, and have thrown the twenty-two millions of Italians into the arms of Napoleon. By that invisible cord which binds oppressed nations together, the same skillful hand which drew in Italy has drawn in, at the same time, the whole Democracy of Europe. The German people fix their eyes upon Napoleon. Poland looks to him. The Ionian Islands evidently correspond with him. Ireland invites his favorite marshal to "Tara of the Kings;" and the harp of Tara is taken down from the silent walls, and strung anew to welcome him. The Irish pilgrim, half fanatic, half poet, dreams of France and Catholic magnificence, as he wanders on amidst the haunted ruins of Clonmacnoise. Shall these things bear no fruit? A few months more will tell.

II. ITALY.—Italy is again in motion, or on the eve of moving; but the Italian army is far inferior to the Austrian, and has already become in some measure disorganised by favoritism and corruption. Should the Italians be defeated before the Quadrilateral, the aid of France will be more than ever required, as well that of England. We shall continue, as before, to talk and boast—and do nothing, while France will interfere with her legions, and complete her ascendancy over Italy. The Emperor knows this; and his object seems to be to wait until his presence shall become indispensable, and then to appear with an overwhelming force to reduce Austrians and Italians, equally, to a state of serfdom. A man must be completly ignorant of public affairs to believe the ridiculous assertion that England has done more than France for Italian liberty. The falsity of such a boast is evident at once. Where would ITALIAN LIBERTY be now had the Emperor Napoleon never crossed the Alps? Of course, NOWHERE. The Italians know quite well that England betrayed them in 1848—that Lord Palmerston first led them on to revolution, and then shamefully betrayed them; and that had not France shed her blood at Solferino, Italy would have been as enslaved as ever. How much liberty would Italy now possess had she depended upon English sympathy instead of the French bayonets at Solferino? None whatever—as every one must confess. Then how is it possible that Italy should owe to our empty talk more than she owes to the generosity and valor of France? Shame upon those who can re-echo so preposterous a falsehood! But let us not be misunderstood. We do not speak of the Emperor, but of France. The Emperor has selfish views, but France has none. The French people rejoiced in the glorious war of 1859 long before they had the slightest suspicion that SAVOY was to be annexed to France, or that France was to gain one particle of remuneration, except the consciousness of a gallant deed. Speak no more of English sympathy, which costs nothing, and which the Italians put down at its real value—speak of the gallant achievements and the generosity of France—in Italy, in Greece, in America during the war of Independence; and then go and look to the bloodshed and horrors of British sympathy in the East—a sympathy which has reduced 180,000,000 of mankind beneath a foreign yoke, and has blotted out the nationality of half a continent. France (not the Emperor) CREATES nationalities: in Greece, in Italy, in America; England in every case destroys them. So much for English sympathy. The Italians fully comprehend this. They thank us for our fine words, as far as those words deserve their thanks; but far more do they thank the French for generous and gallant deeds.

III. It may be said that if war is unlawful in the East it is equally unlawful in the West, and that the writer contradicts himself. Never was any charge more conspicuously unfounded. We write for God's Truth, not for man's hypocrisy. The British nation is the most pacific in the world. It abjures war upon Christian principle, and for that reason it will not go to war even for Italian liberty. Admirable resolution! But why, then, go to war to seize half the Birman empire? Why provoke that dreadful Indian revolt by the annexation of Oude? Above all, why engage in three campaigns to force opium poison on the Chinese? If war be unlawful, why, then, engage in so many wars which are doubly unlawful—first, unlawful in themselves, and next, unlawful in their object and their origin. If war be unlawful, you are condemned beyond reprieve by your Eastern aggressions; but if war be lawful, you are equally condemned by your selfishness towards Italy. When oppressed nations are in question the cry is, "Wait patiently; time will set all things right!" and with these empty words the whole public press of England has been sympathising with Italy for the last twenty years. When oppressed nations are in their agony, war is a crime, and we are the most pacific of mankind. When money is to be made—when spoil is to be won—when actual poison is at a premium—then "sink, burn and destroy," is the inhuman watchword. When we have to deal with warlike nations, "peace is the choicest blessing;" when we have to deal with the unwarlike, "war to the knife." And it is absolutely certain that had not Almighty God given us, in mercy, a speedy victory, we were fully resolved to carry on that war in China until we had destroyed one million of human lives, and all for the sake of a poisonous but profitable drug. We play fast and loose with every principle of Christianity, and make our own avarice and interest the exponents of our faith. Then we are but Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, in spite of all our pretensions; and are equally branded as pretenders in our warlike and in our pacific policy. We are just as much to be reproached for not going to war for Italy, as for going to war with China or the Birman empire. Such has been the writer's meaning in everything that has been said on this subject in the former numbers, and show us, if you can, the slightest inconsistency in such reasoning?

IV. THE ROMAN QUESTION.—Rome, Italy, and the Pope, seem to be the absorbing questions of the day, and one might almost think that those questions had been raised for the purpose of diverting our attention from far more serious embarrassments. The public press has the happy art of taking everything by the wrong handle so long as it can find more handles than one. The real danger is everywhere but in Italy. It is on the Rhine, the Hellespont, or the banks of the Jordan. But it does not suit the convenience of certain personages that such dangers should be suspected. Italy has now entered the second phase of its destiny. We are perpetually boasting that English influence has given freedom to Italy. How pleasant it is to sit at home by the fireside, or to stand, like the king in the parlor, counting out our money, while others are enduring all the calamities of war. How pleasant to come in when all the danger is over, and to snatch the laurels for ourselves. Italy liberated by England! Italy is not yet liberated at all. She has glided now into the second crisis of her fate. We know not in what form she shall emerge from behind the cloud, whether with peaceful beams or with a blood-red glare. We may be assured that Napoleon the Third has not closed his account with Italy. Rome is not yet evacuated—will it ever be? Naples is only half-united to North Italy—will it ever be wholly united? The French garrison at Rome has been doubled. MURAT has come forward upon the scene. The French will be again called for in the Venetian war. Can we, with such complications before our eyes, presume to boast that we have given liberty to a nation that is still in the very agonies of its fate? Can we tell what to-morrow may bring forth, or what may be the ultimate designs of the ruling spirit of the age? Of two things we may be fully assured: that the English statesmen dare not lift one finger against the will of the French Emperor. They have tamely yielded to him in Syria; they will tamely yield to him in Italy. That the Emperor Napoleon intends Naples for Murat, ROME for HIMSELF, and all Italy for some faithful vassal; and that the approaching war will decide the failure or success of those long-concerted schemes. We shall then be able to determine how much liberty or bondage we have secured for Italy by sitting at the fire-side when miserable nations were concerned, and compassing sea and land when our own interest and aggrandizement were at stake. The tameness of our policy on the Syrian question is an exact exponent of our political vigor. From first to last we shall witness nothing in our present Government but imbecility; and at the very moment when all our energies will be called for, we shall find ourselves helpless and betrayed. The downfall of the Pope and Popery is now looked for day by day; and Protestants exult in the hope of Protestant ascendancy over the world. What a strange delusion, yet how natural in those who have so long rejected nine-tenths of the Word of God, and have spiritualized the remaining tenth into almost nothing. The fall of Romanism will be the rise of Antichrist, and the destruction of Protestantism. When the Scarlet Woman falls, her daughters will stumble over her prostrate body, and fall along with her. Had Protestants looked for a moment at the 17th of Revelation, they would have learned that the same power which destroys the "Woman" establishes the "Beast." The same power that destroys Romanism establishes the Antichrist (see verse 17.) What, then, will be gained by the overthrow of Romanism? Nothing whatsoever, except what Christendom so much dreads—the nearer approach of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of the Sun of Righteousness. The world, freed from Romanism, will grow in wickedness and in ignorance of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and under the name of Liberty will set up the Last Apostasy and the Universal Despotism. Romanism, corrupt as it is, sets SOME restraint upon the conscience—maintains SOME reverence for sacred things—acknowledges SOME God—believes in SOME Atonement—and supports even faithfully the two grand doctrines of the Divinity of Christ, and the Trinity in Unity. But when Romanism shall be overthrown, ALL TRUTH will be swept away. One flood of universal infidelity will pervade the earth, and settle down into stagnation to poison the whole atmosphere of life. Romanism excludes the Bible; Antichristianism admits the Bible; and you think this an improvement! Antichristianism admits EVERYTHING. The Bible, and Voltaire, and Don Juan, and Thomas Paine, are mixed up together in one horrible medley, invited guests to the same banquet of death, as if Christ, and Belial, and Moloch, and the men of Sodom, were placed side by side at some public feast. The last Apostasy is the apostasy of Equality. All are equal, whether men, or angels, or devils. Distinctions are high treason against the majesty of "the people;" and every man who conscientiously believes in Don Juan or Voltaire will be as sure of heaven as he who worships the Redeemer. Such is the New Religion which is rising into light, sending out its first rays in the "Essays and Reviews," and about to shine in its full strength when the star of Popery has set. Woe to the inhabiters of the earth when the dargon shall come down, having great wrath. Yet in these terrible prospects the world rejoices, and blindly gropes its way from the twilight of murky Protestantism to the ghastly glare of Satanic illumination. It boasts of Italian revolution, and calls it liberty. It points to the circulation of the Scriptures, and overlooks the thousand volumes of iniquity shaken up together with the one volume of God's Word, and dreams of a PURE religion established by the "sympathy" of the opium-poison nation. Can Protestants who live by homicide and opium-poison imagine that from such impure hands any pure religion can proceed?

WAS THE 19TH OF MAY, 1780, the date of the darkening of the Sun of Scripture?

In presenting my views on this subject, I am well aware that I shall be charged by some with taking away a landmark, or lighthouse, of our faith; but you, Bro. W., know me well enough to understand that I have long been a firm advocate of the doctrine of the Advent near, and that I am still of that faith. If we have occupied a wrong position, truth and justice require an acknowledgment of it when we see it. I have endeavored thoroughly to examine the subject to the extent of my ability, with what means of information I have at command, and, after mature consideration, have reached the conclusion herein presented. If any brother with better means of information can demonstrate me wrong, I would receive it kindly.

William Miller, in his exposition of 24th chapter of Matthew, edition 1841, page 24, makes the darkening of the sun to consist in the obscuration of "the moral sun—the gospel—which is the means of light to the church," and dates it between the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and A. D. 312, when Constantine put a stop to persecutions. The "Midnight Cry" of Aug., 1843, says: "In 1780 the sun was supernaturally darkened on the 19th of May. There have been several other days of the kind since. One in France, in 1788; one in England, in 1806." The Hon. Wheeler Martin, of Providence, says: "On 19th May, 1780, where I then resided, the darkness was so great that at 11 o'clock a candle was lighted and placed upon the table; the fowls went to roost; the sheep huddled around in a circle, with their heads inward; the grass, to look at it through the window, seemed of a yellow green, the same as to look through smoked glass upon green grass." President Dwight, in Connecticut Historical Collection, says, in addition: "The birds were silent and disappeared. It was the general opinion that the day of judgment was at hand. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session at Hartford, but being unable to transact business, adjourned." Mr. Gage, in his history of Rowley, Mass., says additional: "The sun rose clear, and shone for several hours; at length the sky became overcast with clouds, and by ten o'clock, A. M., the darkness was such as to occasion the farmers to leave their work in the fields and retire to their dwellings." Mr. Stone, in his history of Beverly, says: "The darkness increased till about one o'clock, when it began to decrease." Noah Webster says: "The heavens were covered with a dense cloud for three or four hours. During this time, the clouds were tinged with a yellowish or faint red, for which no satisfactory cause has been assigned. I stood and viewed the phenomenon, but had not any fear that the world was coming to an end." We have also confirmatory reports from Providence, R. I., Conway, Mass., Fishkill, N. Y., Danvers, Mass., Boston, Mass., Troy, N. Y., Exeter, N. H., etc. We refrain from more full extracts from reports of the occurrence, as we think it is abundantly demonstrated that it was a very dark day in some localities.

Having thus admitted the darkness of the day, we come to notice the use that has been made of it. A strong point has been made by many writers on the fact that this generation (the generation seeing the sign) shall not pass till all these things (including the coming of Christ) be fulfilled. We do not now stop to notice the various meanings attached to the Greek (e genea aute); it is sufficient to say that the one generally adopted supposes the generation limited within seventy years. If the views commonly held had been true, I can see no reason why Christ should not have come in 1850 at the farthest.

Mr. Miller supposes the darkening was of the moral sun. Dr. Clark says in one place that it was the Jewish sun, and in another that it was the Pagan sun. These, with modifications, are the views of expositors generally. By reference to Buck's, as also Watson's, Theological Dictionaries, we find that they claim the darkening of sun to be great political calamities, involving the overthrow of kings, princes and nobles, represented by the luminaries of heaven. We need not examine these views, as they have been long since rejected by us, and I think justly. That there have been many periods of darkness like that of 1780 cannot be doubted. We have already alluded to one in 1788 and one in 1806. We have record also of one in Egypt, Exodus 10: 21.

We now quote from Noah Webster's Elements of Useful Knowledge, 6th edition, published in Hartford in 1815, page 188. He says: "Historians have mentioned many instances of extreme darkness in the day time, and in some cases this obscurity has lasted several days. Instances happened in Europe, in the years 252, 746 and 775. The first instance mentioned in our annals was on the 21st of October, 1716; the second on the 9th of August, 1732. A similar obscurity happened in Canada and on the Lakes on the 19th of October, 1762, and on three different days in October, 1785. On the 19th of May, 1780, a memorable darkness was spread over all the northern States. The obscurity was occasioned by a thick vapor or cloud, tinged with a yellow color or faint red, and a thin coat of dust was deposited on whole substances. In these instances, the obscurity was so great as to render candles or lamps necessary at noon day. The darkness in Canada was followed by squalls of wind, severe thunder, and in one instance by a meteor or fire ball. So ignorant were most people of this phenomenon, that many were excessively frightened, although it had occurred three times at least within the period of sixty-five years."

You will notice that all instances to which I have referred are local, not excepting Egypt. The darkness at the crucifixion is said by Matthew and Mark to be over the whole land, but John says over the whole earth. I freely admit John's account and believe it correct. You will perceive that Webster assigns a cause for the darkness in 1780, inasmuch as the air was charged with dust.

I cannot understand why the day in 1780 should have been selected as the dark day, unless it was supposed to come within a period otherwise determined; but I would ask, if that is the day for the sections where it appeared, is not some other date the day for the locality where it was then dark, or must we deny that the advent of Christ will be universal? Has God darkened a portion of the northern hemisphere and left the rest of the world without a sign—the prophecy of said sign being given in a land where its fulfillment was not to be witnessed.

We will now look at the Scriptures on the subject. Isa. 13: 9–10 makes the darkening of the sun in the day of the Lord, after the desolation of the land and the destruction of sinners. Chap. 24: 23, he makes it when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mt. Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously. Joel 2: 30 says, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come; but there shall be deliverance in Mt. Zion and Jerusalem, consequently the deliverer must have come to have established Mt. Zion and Jerusalem. Joel 3: 15 makes it at the time when the Lord shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem. Joel 2: 10, in the day of the Lord when he shall have gathered his great army. Matt. 24: 29, Christ declares it in connection with the sign of the Son of man, terror of the nations, and coming of the Son of man. In Mark 13: 24 it is made to precede the coming of the Son of man, but in connection with it. Luke 21: 25 records signs in the sun, not a cloud on earth. Acts 2: 30. Peter endorses Joel, calling it a notable instead of a terrible day. Rev. 6: 12 locates it in the day of his wrath, when men call on rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, not shall sit.

The periods of darkening in the past may be signs and types, the great antitype being yet future. We conclude, then, that as God has said he will turn the world upside down and make it clean empty, that he designs to reduce it to chaos; and as we learn from Genesis that original chaos was complete darkness, so in the future it will be again, and that God will therefrom bring a new earth, perfect in light and beauty. May we all be found in that new earth. H. H. D.

Bearing Arms.

I am aware that in a paper devoted to a restricted range of discussion, too many questions may be raised, of which very few can be satisfactorily settled. I think the Non-resistance question is such an one for the Crisis. And I offer a few words, not to settle the question, but to give my statement of it, and because I fear some of the friends may not duly regard certain facts, and thus may harshly judge those professed Christians who are resisting the pro-slavery rebellion.

With those who regard war as do the Quakers or Friends—as ever needless, and as a worse evil than any sought to be prevented by it—I do not now dispute. But the objection now made by many seems to me of another sort. It is that war, or the use of carnal weapons, pertains to earthly governments only; whereas Christ's kingdom is not of this world. It is supposed that because Christians have a special and peculiar citizenship, they should discard all protection from the earthly government, and owe it no allegiance as such—or they owe it no duty but the general duty of an honest and peaceable behavior. In other words, Christians are not to be regarded as citizens of any earthly country, but only of the heavenly country and kingdom for which they wait. Consistently with this view many Advent people habitually abstain from voting. But this view seems to me not to agree with the language of Paul in the fourteenth chapter of Romans,—"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God." Can Christians be lawful subjects, and yet claim no rights and owe no duties as citizens? The case seems to me too clear for argument. And if one has any scruples about obeying any particular law, it should be, not because the human government is not of God, but because it has erred in the enactment of a particular law. I refuse to obey the Fugitive Slave Bill, not because the United States government and all human law is of the devil, but because this so-called law is unjust and wrong. Some one will ask, How can I be a citizen of Christ's kingdom and of an earthly government at the same time? I answer, just as easily as you can be a subject of Christ's law and of human law too. The twofold subjection is every man's duty. The twofold citizenship and allegiance is also every man's duty and privilege.

So much for allegiance in general to the country that protects our lives and property. And now, shall we bear arms when war is made upon our country? I do not wish to decide this question for another, only to state it. And I will only say that a negative answer must rest upon the proof of two or three things.

1. That there was no danger of Slavery being extended over the North, or of the city of Washington being taken or destroyed, unless the rebellion were put down. Or,

2. If either of these dangers were imminent, they should be averted by non-Christian citizens, without the help of Christian citizens. Or,

3. These dangers, however threatening, would be less serious than armed resistance. Or,

4. Christ is to come so soon that neither the threatened evils should be much feared, nor any remedy be much desired. But then,

5. If Christ's speedy return is the appointed remedy for any of these evils, those who are not sure of this, must settle the question on the grounds above named.

And, in any case, Christian citizens should feel the evils which their country suffers, and should pray and labor to remove them, or that they may be as light as possible. No Christian should allow any lack of sympathy with the sufferings of his country, or any contempt or misanthropy toward those who are engaged in the present struggle. Whether the revolution shall end with the coming of Christ's kingdom or not, it occurs as an incident of the best form of earthly government. And all legitimate earthly governments are ordained of God. If we would not despise God's ordinance, we must at least respect the effort to put down rebellion, whether we share in the effort or not.

And those who think that the rebellion should not be put down by force, should offer their views as to the result if the rebellion were let alone. C. F. H.

Life and Death

BY THE REV. NEHEMIAH ADAMS, D. D.

In a publication from the pen of this gentleman on "The Reasonableness of Future Endless Punishment," we have the following, which we take as an interesting specimen of theological somersault which some learned (and no doubt) "good" divines, are capable of making without doing the least violence to their conscience or ministerial standing. But the statement is valuable to us on account of the admissions the Doctor is willing to make relative to the meaning of the terms life and death.

"'The wages of sin is death.' Some say the wages of sin is conscience, some the wages of sin is discipline, some, the wages of sin is imprisonment for a great, indefinite period, for the purpose of punishment and restoration. Let us adhere to the Bible. 'The wages of sin is death.' If you call it figurative, the laws of rhetoric teach us that a meaning totally opposite to the nature of a figure cannot be true. The ruling idea conveyed by the word death is termination. If you search the Bible for instances in which death means a limited infliction, and so reduce one side of the equation in the passage from which the text is taken, you must by necessity reduce the other side; and thus, so much as you diminish death, you must diminish life; for if death be not death, neither is life eternal life."

On the following page he adds:—

"Need I remind you that this is a subject which, for each of us, is of unparalleled interest? Each of us may, without presumption, say with his Master, 'I live forever.' If God says, 'Of my years there is no end,' the words may be responded to by us: 'Of my years there is no end.'"

The Command.

"Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing."—2 Cor. 6: 17.

The Lord requires his people to be separate from the world, to withdraw from all intimate fellowship with the wicked; they are not of the world even as Christ was not of the world. Jesus gave himself for them that he might deliver them from this present evil world. We may be in the world as the physician is in the hospital, endeavoring to comfort those about us. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Our affections are to be set, not on earthly but on heavenly things. "They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." If we enjoy worldly society, if we prize worldly pleasure, if we set our hearts on worldly prosperity, we are not walking worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called; we are not making Jesus our example; we are not obeying the command of our heavenly Father. The world is our Lord's enemy; it lieth in the wicked one; it is under the influence of "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." May the Lord sanctify our hearts, that we may have no relish for the vanities of time, but manifest that we are dead to the world, and alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. O for that fellowship with our risen Lord that will raise us above the world, and keep us separate from it until the Lord comes. Christian Association.

What a blessed thought, what a heavenly desire, what a noble position it is to be surrounded with a good, lively, whole-souled, stable-minded, thorough-going, truth-seeking and truth-serving body of Christians,—especially in these times of moral darkness and corruption, when the political and religious atmosphere that surrounds us seems to be impregnated with deadly influences, calculated in their onward progress to chill the very life of a zealous-minded christian out of him! And what imminent peril that dear brother or sister is in who has no religious association, but has to stand by faith in God's word and confront face to face all the dark and damning waves of error, pollution and sin which threaten every moment to dash their vessel to pieces amid the breakers of life's dark sea! Thank God, Christ is at the helm.

"Oh for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by many a foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of poverty or woe."

Such isolated brethren need to watch with precision and pray without ceasing.

My mind is often called to reflect upon the benefits derived from christian association. Two or three times a week the members of the body of Christ can come together and mingle and commingle their songs, prayers, and exhortations together. A holy and heavenly influence is shed upon them from the holy of holies, in which our great high priest is officiating, and every heart feels the sacred impress of the life-giving Spirit, and every one goes home mutually benefitted, comforted, and encouraged to prosecute the warfare of life, in order to wear the crown of glory in the kingdom of God. It is my most ardent desire and prayer, that my destiny may ever be cast among a people who consider it their chief object to be free, and to prove all things, believe and confess the whole truth, irrespective of party interest, of whatever mould it may be. I believe it to be the duty of God's children to acknowledge the Scriptures as their only infallible guide in these days as much as in the times of the apostles; and not only this, but every brother and sister hoping for salvation in the kingdom of God, is under a very great obligation not only to believe but confess the whole truth, when he knows what it is. His or her light must shine, or the Spirit of God is quenched, and the approbation of God is withholden or lost upon the professing believer.

Now, then, the principle of searching for the truth as for hid treasure, and proclaiming it, when found, to the extent of our ability, will in the sequel exclude us from all sectarian creeds [illegible] and parties in Christendom. And no christian in the world, whose object is to believe and practice the truth, in my judgment, can remain in such precincts long without being seriously crippled in his faith and enjoyment. I can with my present faith identify myself with any denomination in the land, on condition that I will withhold my faith from the people, and sustain whatever creed I should subscribe to. But, as soon as I speak the truth in soberness, as revealed in the book of God, and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, which is like fire shut up in my bones, they will drop me as soon as a child would a hot potatoe, although he may be suffering greatly for food to satisfy the demands of nature. Well, this is when God wants all his people disentangled from the rubbish of sectarianism forever. This brings warm, loving hearts into a community by themselves, where they can watch over each other in the midst of life's tempestuous seas; where they can preach to, pray with, and "exhort one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching;" where also they can sympathize with and help bear each other's burdens during their pilgrimage towards the long sought for rest.

Can there be, my dear brethren and sisters, any satisfaction to that tender father and affectionate mother who have reared a large family of sons and daughters—who have ever paid them due respect, and fondly cherished them in their affectionate hearts—in the consideration of having their children put out into various families, whose influences are diametrically opposed to that of their own, which has been sanctified by the word of God? Nay, is the ready response of you all. Then why will any who value their christian reputation, and also the blessed hope of seeing Him who is invisible, but soon to be made visible by his personal appearance, remain in those unauthorized fraternities whose influences are ever at war with the letter and spirit of the gospel, and whose energies are constantly employed in blasting your fond hopes, and drying up those springs of pleasure created by the introduction and reception of the onward progress of gospel truth? Do they not, as a general remark, spurn the doctrine of Christ's second coming and its kindred truths (which was the theme of angels and of both prophets and apostles) from their houses, pulpits, presses and congregations? Most assuredly. Then why support a christianity by your money and influence so unworthy of the name? Why not come out with becoming meekness and independence, and elevate your glorious standard of truth before their eyes, and, with the Spirit's power, compel them to feel the force of facts, and tremble at His word? You will do more in this way to win them over to truth, than you will to try to nurse them with sweetened milk, and they you with that which is of much less value.

In conclusion, I would say, if any are Mormons, and determined to be such, then go with the Mormons. If any are Universalists, and determined to be such, then go with the Universalists. If any are Spiritualists, or sectarians of any stamp, and determined to be such, then go along with them, and enjoy the happiness or unhappiness of moral darkness. But if you are a whole-souled christian, inside and out, of the independent and primitive mould, like the noble Bereans full of the "matter," and dare risk your cause in a skillful chieftain's hand, even King Immanuel,—then come along at once and show your colors, and identify yourselves with that noble and honorable body called CHRISTIANS.

For the Crisis.

If we will Work, God will give us the requisite Strength.

There is a continual demand upon every one of upright principles, and especially every professed christian, to reform the wrong, to protect the right, to relieve the distressed, and proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to the sinful. The cause of Christ demands this. Groaning and suffering humanity demands it. God Almighty demands it, and will take care of the issue. It is not a time for dreamy moralizing. The times demand action. The gospel seed must be strown with an earnest hand, and given to the God of the whirlwind and the tempest. The arm that sows it may be weak, but the God who "gives the increase" is powerful and eternal. Our words of consolation may be short and weakly spoken, but the joy it may carry to a sorrow-stricken heart may be immeasurable. Our exhortations to repentance may be spoken with trembling voice and tearful eyes, but God may direct it with saving effect to the heart of the impenitent. The pen that writes of the salvation of God may falter in its course, but away on the highlands of the east, or the green rolling prairie of the west, it may preach to some heart with "melting eloquence." Our every day walk of holiness preaches powerfully to those with whom we associate. Our words of rebuke to the sinful, and refusing to join in the hilarities of the thoughtless, the irreverent and the gay, may, through the blessings of God, carry conviction to some hard and sinful heart.

In these th[illegible] things we must be actors. God will not do the whole of the work. Some persons suppose he will, judging from their inactivity. Man must do what he can. What he cannot do, God will. God requires him to do all within his power. Do it earnestly. Do it confidingly in God. Do it with the fire of holy zeal burning in the heart. Do it actuated by the Spirit of Christ. Do it trusting in Him who takes care of the humble and protects the upright; who gives to us grace according to our day; who controls the power of earth's rulers, and directs the destiny of earth's empires; whose pavillion round about him are dark waters and clouds of the sky; who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; who maketh the clouds his chariot, and walketh upon the wings of the wind. And whose power is only equalled by his mercy and grace In such a God as this we can confide in safety. We can lay upon him the burden of our hearts, and receive strength to fulfill our mission. When the tempest beats hard, he will shelter from the storm. When the ocean lashes into surging waves, he will speak —"peace, be still." When weakened with toil and conflict with sin, he will give the "bread of eternal life" and the waters of salvation to satisfy the soul. And when the future looks darkly ominous of evil, he will send a ray of hope through the gathering darkness and dispel the surrounding gloom. Then let us work while the day shall last. The night will come soon. Woe, then, to those who are asleep, and who are fighting against the purposes of the eternal God. The waves of judgment will bury them from the presence of that immortal company, while the righteous will receive the glorious and eternal reward of their labors. M. R. PHETTEPLACE.

Hold your Tongue.—When?

1. When you have nothing to say.
2. When you are angry and excited.
3. When you don't know what to say.
4. When everybody else is talking.
5. When people will not hear you.
6. When persons will not be reasonable.
7. When your speech will do no good.
8. When you may slander some one.
9. When you may separate friends.
10. When you can say no good.
11. When you cannot honor Christ.
12. When you cannot glorify God.

Then hold your tongue!

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 19, 1861.

To All our Patrons.

We shall begin next week to use a Mailing Machine in mailing the Crisis. For some time past we have been perfecting the arrangements for this change, and we doubt not it will insure greater accuracy in our mailing department than is possible where the name and address of every subscriber have to be written every week. The principle upon which the machine works seems admirably adapted to prevent mistakes, but we have not time now to describe its operation. If Bro. Cotton, who has charge of the business, chooses, when the reform has been fairly inaugurated, to tell our readers how the thing is done, we doubt not they will be interested. What we wish specially to say now is this: the change from our old mailing book to a new one, and the use of the machine proposed, may possibly at the first be attended with errors or omissions in the transfer of names. These—should there be any—we wish to correct as soon as possible. We therefore request any who may fail to receive their paper next week, or who, receiving it, discover any material error in the address, to inform us at once, so that we may rectify any thing that is wrong at this office. Our patrons will oblige us by bearing in mind this request.

We need hardly remind our friends that the utmost caution and accuracy on our part can be no guarantee against mistakes on the part of those to whose charge our weekly editions are committed when they leave our hands. We sometimes are informed of failures to get the Crisis when we know positively that it has been properly mailed by us. Postmasters and mail agents are of course at fault in such cases.

The New Tract.

We are gratified with the announcement Bro. C. F. Hudson makes of a new tract which he is ready to put to press as soon as $25 is subscribed upon the terms he names. Read his "Proposal" in another column. We shall be glad to see it promptly responded to by the friends of truth, and any subscriptions sent us will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Should the amount subscribed be insufficient to warrant the publication, those who may remit to us shall have their money returned to them. We read with much satisfaction the articles on "Umbrella Punishment" and "Unconscious Punishment" when they appeared in this paper, we deemed them unanswerable, and are now of opinion that they alone would make a tract amply worth the price that will be charged for the proposed publication of 24 pages. Who of us that hold the doctrine of conditional immortality has not been again and again, when contending for the literal interpretation of the revealed death penalty, met with the plea—"that's no punishment"? This pretence of the advocates of eternal misery will be thoroughly exploded by the proposed tract. Let the means be forthcoming at once so that Bro. H. can set the printer to work. Brethren and sisters, send on your subscriptions, and the whole sum required may be raised within two weeks.

THE CAMP BED—noticed by Bro. D. N. Smith—is a very useful invention. Having seen and tried it, we know whereof we affirm. We think our camp meeting goers would be much pleased with it, and expect to see it gain favor among the pilgrims who shall assemble at Wilbraham. A good night's rest helps to fit one for a hard day's work,' and we hope those who are waiting for the King will go to the Grove and Camp Meetings this season to work for the Lord. Weariness is incident to mortality; —when the Life Giver comes and introduces us to "the sweet fields of Eden," our incorruptible natures shall be forever exempt from the necessities which the camp bed is designed to meet. Let us labor that we may not fail of that eternal rest.

ELD. JOHN HOWELL.—This esteemed brother, we learn from the last Harbinger, is obliged to relinquish his pastoral labors with the church in Poultney, Vt., because that place is unhealthy. His intimation of a purpose to remove into Western New York, was received with pleasure by the recent Conference at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and the brethren pledged him their sympathy and prayers, with such other aid as may be placed at their command.

☞ Letters for C. F. HUDSON may be directed to him in care of Rudd & Carleton, 130 Grand Street, New York.

Fourth of July.

At our excellent meeting last Fourth of July, in "Union Grove," in Palmer, on Bro. A. M. Higgins' land, it was proposed to meet there again next 4th of July, 1861; but it seems to be duty for me to be in Canada East at that time; hence I cannot meet the saints to celebrate our independence in Christ, as I had fondly hoped. If it were the Lord's will, I should be very thankful for the privilege of another meeting in "Union Grove;" but soon we may expect to meet in the bowers of an eternal paradise, where peace forever reigns and sorrow is never known. M. GRANT.

A Proposal.

I have for some time desired to publish a tract, of about twenty-four pages, with the following title: "Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment." One of the commonest objections made to our view is that extinction is not eternal punishment, and even that it is no punishment at all. To this I have replied in various ways, in different places in "Debt and Grace" and "Christ our Life." But it will be convenient for myself, and it may be convenient for others, that the whole matter,—the argument from the Scriptures, from common sense, and from numerous orthodox concessions,—should be put into a tract. In my business I cannot stop to argue the point with an objector, but would rather silence him at his leisure, and without the heat of controversy, by giving him something to read and calling on the next man.

If I prepare such a tract, I shall incorporate the substance of articles on "Umbrella Punishment" and "Unconscious Punishment," which will be recollected by some readers of the Crisis.

The expense will be about $20 for stereotyping, and then $11 each thousand copies. I would incur the expense at once if my circumstances allowed. But I owe $600, and must pay it out of my carpet bag. Preaching or lecturing, I find, does not materially contribute to the desired result. Some creditors are also dunning. I must therefore observe the most rigid economy, and avoid all new expenses. And my "proposal" is this: I will send the tract to the printer as soon as $25 is subscribed, to be paid in copies of the tract, at $2 per hundred. Those who wish to help in the matter can tell the editor of the Crisis how many copies they will pay for as soon as issued. They will then be sent to order.

Evening Shadows.—No. 11.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"These shall hate the harlot, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire."

DEAR READER:—Having in a previous number treated on the first and second of these judgments, we shall proceed to notice the next in order.

Third. They shall make her naked. I understand this to imply an exposure of her secret deeds of darkness to her blind, infatuated devotees, and also to the gaze of the world. 'Tis yet fresh in my mind, the astonishment manifested in this part of the world at the statements made by Dr. G. Achilli, at one time high in authority in the city of Rome, as he made a naked exposure of what he beheld in the dark, gloomy, damp cells—of the inquisition in that city, and for which he was persecuted and belied, after his arrival, by priests in this country. They were tales of cruelty and blood. From a very interesting article in an Oct. number of the Crisis, by Bro. D. T. Taylor, I make the following extract:—

"But, as though it were not enough to unveil from obscurity the vile and cruel modes of torture, God has in wrath against her put the records of those tortures of human flesh into possession of the Protestant world. In the plunder of Rome, in 1848, the books of the inquisition were carried off and sold in the streets, and after passing through several hands are now safely deposited in the College Library at Dublin. Here, in the manuscript room, in some sixty huge quarto volumes bound in red (fit color for the sanguinary tale they tell) are the real minute books of the dreaded Romish inquisition, extending over a period of one hundred years. They contain the actual proceedings of the 'Holy Office,' in the handwriting of the inquisitors and their clerks."

Thus God in his judgment on the whore of Babylon is, through human instrumentality, making an expose of her consummate wickedness. They are making her naked.

Fourth. And they shall eat her flesh. This I understand to mean a taking away of her revenues, riches and monastic institutions, of which a vast amount of the former and an immense number of the latter have been confiscated of late. I have before me an article taken from the Journal l' Italie, of Turin; a brief extract will illustrate this matter. It reads thus:—"By a decree of the present government of Naples, all persons of whatever creed are declared equal before the law, and ecclesiastics have no longer any peculiar exemption. All monastic orders for either sex cease to be recognized by the government. The same fate has fallen on benefices of all kinds without cure of souls, and on all chapters of collegiate churches. The property of these religious houses is taken into the benefit of the government. . . . One million three hundred and forty thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven ducats" [equal to one dollar] "and seventy-nine grani is the capital which is in possession of the conference missions, and which by the recent decree has been cast into the ecclesiastical fund at the disposal of the government. This vast sum has been amassed in the interval between 1818 and and 1856, and extorted by priestly arts from the weak in mind and body, the sick and the dying, for the support of the home missions. In the continental provinces of this country alone there were from eight hundred to nine hundred monasteries."

The new government of Garibaldi, who detests the Pope and has recently called him anti-christ, has eaten this great amount of flesh from the old carcass. Permit me to give you some idea of these Neapolitan missions:—"Periodically, every village in the kingdom was visited by a mission, who had two objects in view—to frighten the people into a most degraded spiritual subjection, and to ascertain the public sentiment on all political matters. The mission over, the report was sent to the conference of missions in the archbishop's palace in Naples." Says the writer:—"I have been [illegible] at many of these missions, and have [illegible] with horror at the means which I have seen adopted to 'spiritualize' the multitude. Priests throwing skeletons over the pulpit and rattling them against the wood work, to show the certainty of death; holding lighted torches under the wrist to illustrate the nature of hell fire and the future fate of the sinner; lashing themselves with iron chains to urge the necessity of penance; while a thousand victims of superstitition were on their knees scourging their backs with whips brought to church by order;—all this mountebank performance accompanied by shrieking, yelling, fainting, and followed in some cases by premature births and untimely deaths. This is merely a glimpse at the spiritual phase of the home missionary labors." All this in the country where the Madias were sent to the galleys a few years since for reading the Scriptures; where his devout Catholic majesty turned the brazen throated cannon and shot down his subjects, for which he has been known ever since as King Bomba. Thanks be to the Lord, those days of Papal ignorance, power and cruelty are forever past, and the once fat, bloated, overgrown harlot is losing her flesh, and there remains only a mere relic of this woman drunken with the blood of saints and the martyrs of Jesus.

We shall reserve the last of the judgments specified for another article. You perceive, dear brother or sister in Christ, the solemn yet glorious fact that one and only one more judgment awaits this Babylonic harlot. Then comes the martyr's jubilee. Then comes our Redeemer to make inquisition for the blood of his saints. Truly, the shadows of the evening are stretched around us. O Lord, prepare us for the time of trouble that hasteth greatly. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts on the Coming of Christ.

"And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—ACTS 1: 9–11

I often, in imagination, witness that solemn and impressive scene where Christ takes his final leave of the eleven. I see him as he stands in their midst, bestowing upon them his blessing, and speaking, as was his wont, in words of holy wisdom, when lo! a voice from the "excellent glory" calls, "Son, come home!" and quickly obeying the heavenly mandate, I behold him silently rising from among those chosen ones. No words are spoken, but with grief too deep for utterance their eyes follow the fast receding form of the Son of God. Higher and yet higher he soars through the vast fields of space, until at length, while they are straining their vision to the utmost to catch a last glimpse of their loved Master, a cloud passes over him and he is obscured from their sight forever. But still they stand transfixed, those sorrowing ones, with eyes yet upward gazing, while their bosoms heave with grief unspeakable. No wonder that their hearts are sad and desolate, for He whom they loved has suddenly, by an unseen power, been caught away. Yes, their Guide and Counsellor, for whom they had forsaken all else to follow, has gone. From city to city they had journeyed with him; down by the sea shore and upon the mountain's side, in the temple and in private dwellings, they had hung upon his lips as he "spake as never man spake." Through evil report as well as good they had clung to him. When hungry, he had fed them with his own hand; in the hour of peril had quelled their fears and stilled the tempest's roar, healed their sick, and breathed life again into their dead. Well might they mourn when their hearts are entwined around him by such tender ties and fond recollections.

God, methinks, as he looks down from his throne above upon these disconsolate mourners, is moved with pity and compassion, and summoning around him the shining host, selects two of the fairest of the angelic throng, and commissions them to earth with a "peace branch" for those aching hearts. Then newly dipping their cherubic wings in glory bright, those swift-winged messengers in haste descend, bearing words of peace and comfort to that pilgrim band. They speak; and slowly withdrawing their tearful eyes from the sacred spot where Jesus disappeared, the disciples look to see who have thus unceremoniously intruded upon their silent grief—when lo! two forms of unearthly mould and beauty stand before them. How cheering is their address. "Ye men of Galilee," say they, "why stand ye gazing up into heaven? Have ye forgotten, in this hour of sudden bereavement, the glorious promise which he left you? Said he not, 'let not your hearts be troubled? If I go away, I will come again and receive you unto myself.' Sent by our God, we come to refresh your memories and corroborate this truth. Then cheer up, beloved of the Lord, and 'be not faithless but believing,' for 'this same Jesus which was taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.' Not as an unapproachable something, without form or parts—not as a 'disembodied spirit,' but in like manner as he went away—a real, tangible substance. You shall again grasp the hand you have so often pressed in welcome greeting; again look into those calm, pure eyes, which ever beamed with holy love and tenderness; again recline your weary heads upon the dear Redeemer's breast, and listen to his ever gentle voice." The angel's mission ended, methinks I see them unfurl their snowy pinions and soar back to heaven. And the disciples, cheered and comforted with the glorious prospect of a re-union with their Savior, dry up their tears, and go forth inspired with new zeal and undaunted courage to labor in his cause, and patiently await his promised return.

Christian friends, how is it with us today? Are we thus zealously performing the great and important work assigned us? are we "also ready," watching and waiting for the glorious appearing of the Son of God. Time on its untiring wing is bearing us swiftly, and almost imperceptibly, along toward the closing up of all earthly scenes, and the ushering in of the great day of God; and oh! let us, while it yet lingers on the threshhold of a vast eternity, individually, make the solemn inquiry. Surely it will be the very height of folly, and the most daring presumption, for any with God's word before them to wilfully close their eyes against this great revelation—turn a deaf ear to its solemn warnings, and say within themselves, "my Lord delayeth his coming—there is time enough yet," for unto such he has declared that he will come as a thief in the night—in an hour when they look not for him.

The second coming of Christ is indeed a delightful theme for the contemplation of every true child of God. Every lawful heir of the "promises made unto the fathers" is looking forward with bright anticipation to the certain and speedy consummation of all sublunary things, the establishing of Christ's kingdom on the earth, and his eternal reign with his children. How eagerly the travel-stained pilgrim" looks toward the end of his toilsome journey. As he plods with weary footsteps through this "vale of tears," enduring trials and privations at almost every step, he is sustained and comforted through all the ills of life by an unfaltering trust in God's unfailing promises. How joy swells his bosom and hope buoys up his fainting heart as he draws near home. He sees with faith's clear vision, but a little distant, a resting place for his weary limbs and aching head. Already the green fields of Eden, with their shading trees and cooling streams, are heaving in view. Already the sweet songs of the birds of Paradise fall upon his delighted ear. Soon he shall rest in that bright home of the faithful,—yes, in that land of unfading glories sit down with loved ones, to go no more out forever. No holy ties will be sundered there; no farewell words spoken; no tolling death bells will be heard to strike their mournful peals, telling the departure of loved and cherished ones; and the slow moving hearse will never pass Jerusalem's golden streets, for saith the inspired man of God, "there shall be no death there." But friendship will forever flow with a perpetual fullness, and wisdom shine with an unclouded splendor.

Brethren and sisters, let us who profess to love and are looking for the "glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ," see to it that we are continually walking in the light—constantly in that position where we may catch the first glimpse of our returning Lord, and hear the first sound of his approaching footsteps. Then, with a good title to our glorious inheritance, we shall be able at the angel's summons, to go out and meet the Bridegroom, and with him enter into the kingdom which he has prepared for all his dear children. Oh! that none would be so unwise, so unconcerned respecting their eternal interests, as to procrastinate the great work of repentance, and neglect until too late to insure to themselves a happy home in the Paradise of God; but that they might see the importance of improving the present moments, and hasten while the day lasts to knock at mercy's door while it is open, realizing that soon, very soon the night cometh when the Master will arise and shut to the door; and oh, terrible thought! "when God shutteth no man can open."

For the Crisis.

A Letter.

MY BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Having become seated for the purpose of writing, I find a variety of letters before me unanswered—some from Mass., Ct., and R. I. I find myself incompetent to the task of writing you individually, which I should prefer doing; but as you are mostly readers of our family paper, please accept this as a reply to your welcome letters. My only apology for not writing is, I have not been sufficiently strong to write, study, or perform any labor, until of late health is improving somewhat.

Some of you have spoken of great triumph through grace over your own evil natures, and over the vanities of this vain world. I rejoice with you that amid extreme perils your faith is strong enough to overcome the world with its sinful affections. But while I rejoice with you, there are other classes occasioning the falling of pity's tear at the throne of grace. Some of you have been tried and exceedingly tempted to that degree that you fear you shall be finally overcome, and never share in the overcomer's reward. Take courage, fainting one, though you find such weakness in yourself. There is one whose sympathies are enlisted, to whom all power in heaven and earth is given. His was the love which prompted him to leave his glorious abode and take "upon him the form of a servant," becoming of "no reputation," because he viewed frail humanity without an intercessor. And inspiration declares he remains "the same, yesterday, to-day and forever." Hear the word of God, all ye who fear the Lord and obey the voice of his servant, yet walk in darkness and have not light: let such trust in the name of the Lord and stay upon their God. Isa. 50:10. Some have been wounded; you think you could have easily borne it had it not have come from those you supposed your friends —those whose voices have mingled in prayer with yours.

Alas! lamentable fact, that one christian (professedly) should seek to wound or injure another,—but thus it is—thus it has been—thus it doubtless will be, until the reign of peace and righteousness is established. Poor, blind apostate! how little do you realize the solemn import of this language, "better that a millstone were hanged about" thy "neck and" thou cast "in the depth of the sea" than to "offend one of these little ones." Ah, beware how you deal with those of whom there is any possibility of their being christians. Scripturally, if you wound them, you wound Christ. Who dare use the tongue of slander against Christ? Who dare impugn his motives? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me:" this sentence will strike with dread many an ear, at the last great tribunal. I pray that it may greet our ears with pleasure on account of cups of cold water administered by us.

You that are wounded, be very cautious in regard to the spirit you possess. Try well thy spirit, and cherish none but the one manifested by Jesus when he prayed, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

Another class have said, "it seems impossible for me to obey the gospel." There must be wrong existing here, for God certainly does not require that which he does not enable us to perform. His commands are not grievous. Do you know, if those unacquainted with our Master should hear us say this, they would think we had a hard Master? Could we tell them ours was a God of love? I do not think it sinful to regret our short-comings in the performance of duty, or to sorrow over our slow progress in overcoming evils existing within or without. This has been the experience of the good in different ages, and ofttimes it has been the stepping stone to greater attainments, more power with, and greater access to, the people, in winning to Christ. But when one complains of the gospel requirements being so hard as to be impossible to be performed, I think sin is lurking very near. What has caused this change to come over you? Once you didn't think the gospel hard. It was truly glad tidings to you; you actually seemed to suffer more from fear that you should not obey all, than you did from obedience. (Bear with me in my plainness of speech toward you: it is not because I am an enemy.) Do you recollect that once a slight mist would not have detained you from the prayer circle? Neither would you have been likely to have gone far in the rain where prayer was not to be offered. Ah, no wonder mental darkness usurps the place of light and peace! Again, do you know you conform much more to the world than you once did, not merely in one particular, but in several, in conversation, in dress, in general appearance? In a word, I fear you court the friendship of the world, and it is at enmity with God. Do you say the Scriptures say, "be courteous?" Very true; but do you not think in a far more exalted sense must we be agreeable and pleasing? Not merely to be highly esteemed of the world, to win their favor, to win them to us;—nay, verily, but if possible to win them to Christ. I think we should be very jealous of those to whom we cannot introduce Christ, or, at least, of having friendship exist very closely with such. O, I beseech you disentangle yourself from those elements necessarily bringing bondage. Your position is very unsafe. O, once more become allied to the living vine, and deny self of all that makes you less heavenly minded, or brings in the least spiritual decline. Oft visit your closet, and may we each be enabled to sustain characters spotless enough (through Christ) to be accepted in the consummation. Farewell.

Yours in christian affection,

JENNIE D. ROGERS.

For the Crisis.

A Leaf from my Journal.

Left Lawrence April 19th for a short tour in Maine. Spent three Sundays in Augusta. Gave eleven discourses there. Had some good meetings. Some few have been converted there within a few months past. There is a little company there that are striving for the better land. May the Lord bless them, and preserve them blameless to his coming and kingdom. Baptized two. Others are waiting, expecting to go forward when able, being sick when I was there. Had one meeting on Bolton Hill, four miles east of Augusta. Some few there are interested to hear on the subject of the speedy coming of the Lord. Held four meetings in Belgrade, in two different places, some miles apart. Found a remnant still looking for the promise to be fulfilled—I will come again. Blessed promise! May we be among the ready ones, so as to go to the marriage supper.

Gone eighteen days, preached sixteen discourses, attended six social meetings, travelled some four hundred miles, baptized two, made one hundred and eighty calls, and returned home. Packed and stored my goods, and left the United States of America for Nova Scotia, on a visit with wife and children, and Sister Abigail Mussey. Had a pleasant passage of a little more than three days. Arrived here in Nova Scotia Saturday, May 25th. Sunday, 26th, spoke twice at the Advent Tabernacle, at Bear River. House full and good attention. More anon.

Signs are thickening to show that redemption is nigh. Let us watch and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to escape all the things that are coming on the earth, and stand before the Son of Man.

Camp Bed.

Bro. Wendell:—I wish to call the attention of those who purpose attending Camp Meeting this season to a camp bed I have just completed, and which will be for sale at Bro. G. T. Adams', 167 Hanover Street, or at Dickinson, Lincoln & Co.'s, 15 and 16 Faneuil Hall Square. It is so constructed that it can be packed in a two foot trunk, and weighs but from six and a half to nine pounds. Being provided with sacking bottom, no straw or other bedding is needed but covering. It is a very convenient article for household use. Price $2.00.

Correspondence.

From A. F. Servis.

Bro. Wendell:—As we are nearing the judgment, I desire to exchange a few thoughts with the dear saints who are looking for rest, eternal rest, a little beyond the present strife of the nations of earth, in the paradise of God—the earth made new. Amid the present excitement of earthly governments for a preparation for the "battle of the great day of God Almighty," how it becomes the heirs of the kingdom soon to be established to be sober, believing, watching and praying, lest that day overtake them unawares.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, whatever your lot may be in the present life, I beseech you despair not. "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not." Jesus loves you, intercedes for you, and if you love him and his appearing, you will soon receive a righteous crown. If you look for him, he will soon appear for your salvation. The evening shadows are fast passing away, and the day of bright glory appears in view. It is your privilege to "look up, for your redemption draweth nigh." The last page of prophecy is being fulfilled. The history of this world is almost complete. The political horizon is portentous of a "whirlwind rising up from the coasts of the earth and going from nation to nation." Then the last great conflict will be over. Shield us, then, O thou great Jehovah, from the last great storm of the present life, and give thy children rest.

Backslider, wake thee once more, and quicken thy return, as you will want eternal life when Jesus comes. And speed thee, O careless sinner; get ready, for soon, very soon, you will want a covert from the coming storm, and none but Jesus can be your help. Now is the time for reconciliation, for labor, and a speedy preparation for eternal joys. Soon the Master will be here, and we receive according as our work shall be. O Lord, awaken the careless and save thy people. From a brother in hope of eternal life soon.

INTELLIGENCE.

London.

In a notice of the contents of the London Quarterly Review for April, 1861, the Herald of Progress says:—

Of the articles, the titles of which are given above, one of the most instructive is that on the Spiritual Destitution of London. From it we glean the following statistics, showing the ratio of church accommodation to population at different periods in English history:

In the latter part of the reign of Edward III., in 1377, the entire population of England was but 2,323,802, which was less than that of London in 1851. In Edward's reign, the entire number of churches and chapels in the kingdom was 7,000, or one place of worship to 332 people. In 1509, there were 9,407 churches, and 645 religious houses in England, and a population of 5,000,000; this gives one church to about 500 people in the reign of Henry VIII. In 1851, there were of all religions and all sects, 34,467 places of worship in the kingdom, and a population of 18,000,000, giving one to about 522. Thus in the last 500 years, England had most church accommodation for her people, by nearly two to one, when she was most barbarous and uncivilized!

The increase of population in London during 500 years appears to have been as follows: In 1377 it was 34,371, within a circle of eight miles radius, Paul's Cross being taken as a center. The number of churches and chapels at that time in the city was 139. In 1509 the population was 200,000; in 1603, 300,000; in 1696, 479,000; in 1801, 3,000,000. In 1851, when the population was a little less than two and a half millions, there were in London 458 places of worship belonging to the Established Church, and 639 belonging to Non-Conformists, which accommodated in all 701,723 people, or less than a third of the population.

"Church-room," says the writer, "is barely adequate if it be capable of accommodating fifty-eight per cent. of the population in a given district. But we have already shown that, as far as the church is concerned, the London poor, and especially the poor of London West, partake very little in the boon, such as it is. Of the 18.7 per cent. for whom the church provides, twelve per cent. at least belong to the paying classes. As regards Dissenters, things are even worse. It appears that the amount of accommodation provided within the bills of mortality by all the Non-Conformist bodies put together, including Roman Catholics, foreign Protestants, and Mormons, scarcely reaches eleven per cent."

Executions in Japan.—A letter from Jeddo, (Japan) in the Abeille du Nord, contains the following passage: "Executions are very frequent in Japan, and at Jeddo scarcely a day passes without one. Beheading and ripping open the abdomen are the most usual punishments inflicted. Not long since the murderers of a prince were boiled to death in large kettles. The other modes of execution by which the Japanese tribunals attempt to terrify criminals are crucifixion, cutting open the chest, breaking the limbs with an iron bar, exposing of the criminal to the attacks of insects in hot weather after stripping him naked and smearing his body with honey, etc. These cruel punishments, however, do not diminish the number of crimes; on the contrary, they seem to have produced the most reckless contempt of death. The following incident occurred not long since: A Japanese policeman was walking along the middle of the street, when a European on horseback told him to stand aside, and, as the order was not obeyed, struck him with a whip. The Japanese rushed on the aggressor, unhorsed him, and drew his sword to kill him, when a neighboring shopkeeper exclaimed that it was the English consul. The Japanese hesitated on hearing this, and the foreigner meanwhile got away. With his drawn sword in his hand, the policeman immediately went to the nearest tribunal and stated his case to the presiding judge. 'You drew your sword to avenge the affront,' said the magistrate, 'that was right; but you did not kill your enemy, and you know that an insult, if not avenged by the blood of the offender, must be avenged by the blood of the offended.' The judge had hardly finished speaking when the policeman ripped up his abdomen with his own hand, and died on the spot."

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Lord John Russell said in Parliament that the Government had no information of a Canadian volunteer regiment having tendered its services to the United States, and of course could not say what action should be taken.

The Adriatic took out the news that the British Government would not permit privateers or armed vessels to take prizes into British ports. Lord John Russell, in his letter to the Lords of Admiralty, directing them to carry out this intention, says it is done to secure the strictest neutrality.

Mr. Siddell gave notice that he should ask Ministers if this interdiction is not at variance with former practice, and the reason for this change of maritime policy.

Lord Stanley gave notice of his intention to ask what steps Government had taken to prevent the violation of neutrality in the case of the regiment of volunteers in Canada who have offered their services to the United States.

Five cases containing one hundred rifles, directed to the Commercial Bank of New New York, intended for the steamer Adriatic, were stopped at Galway by the agent of the line, who refused to let them pass.

Lord Elgin, at the banquet given to him by the Grocers' Company of London, said he doubted if we would have trade with China without political relations, although he agreed that it was not political relations but trade that he wanted. He believed our relations were now established on a footing not likely to be disturbed in future.

The Bombay mail of the 12th has reached England. News unimportant.

FRANCE.

Prince Napoleon had embarked for Spain.

The Paris Bourse was flat and lower, and rentes were quoted at 69f. 20c., influenced mainly by Count Cavour's illness, which caused considerable anxiety.

French political news is unimportant.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald argues that Italian independence will be buried in Count Cavour's grave, and the peninsula become a mere tendency of France.

ITALY.

Count Cavour died at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 6th inst. His death caused a profound sensation.

The evening preceding his death his state had become so alarming that great emotion was evinced by the people of Turin and immense crowds surrounded his residence.

Signor Minghetti is intrusted ad interim with the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, and Gen. Fanti with the provisional administration of the Marine.

It is rumored that Garibaldi contemplates a visit to America in a month or two, if war in Italy appears unlikely.

SPAIN.

The Queen of Spain has given birth to a princess.

AUSTRIA.

The Empress is suffering from ill health.

In the Hungarian Diet the address to the Emperor, proposed by Mr. Deak, was adopted in the Lower House by three majority, the vote being 155 for to 152 against.

PRUSSIA.

The Chambers closed on the 5th with a speech by the king. He said the results of the session tends to confirm the government in the line of policy it has adopted, and it will also augment the influence of Prussia in Europe. The votes of credit for the army did not affect any vital principle. The military organization of Prussia is strong and satisfactory. He said the Danish Government has not entirely yielded to the demands of the German Federal Diet.

The proposals made by Denmark do not afford a certain prospect of a solution of the pending question, but the nature of the relations between Prussia and the Great Powers offers a guarantee that they will be affected by the energetic measures which may become necessary within the frontiers of the German Federal territory. He concludes with aspirations for peace and prosperity.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Hagarstown, Md., June 15. An express messenger has just returned from Harper's Ferry, having left there this afternoon. He was in the Ferry several hours. All of the Baltimore and Ohio Bridge has been burned, except two spans and 300 yards of tressel work. The bridge over the Shenandoah river is still standing. Persons walk up and down the canal on the opposite side of the river freely; the sentinels stationed there do not interfere. Two camps are still on the heights, containing about 600 men. The remainder of the troops vacated to-night, to follow the main body to Winchester.

The greater part of the 14,000 troops stationed at the Ferry go southward to join Beauregard and Lee's forces. The smaller body it is believed will march to join Wise at Romney, who is on the march to oppose the advance of General McClellan's column from the West. Wise has 30,000 men at Staunton, one regiment of which has already marched. A great number of small arms, said to be 1000, were thrown into the river by the rebels and also some of their accoutrements, boys and men are recovering them. The place wears a desolate appearance. Some large guns only have been removed six miles up the Shenandoah. It was reported at Harper's Ferry that the locomotives below Aqueduct had also been burned with those at Martinsburg, numbering in all 70.

The picket of the Virginians opposite Williamsport retured to-night after an absence of two days.

Ex-Governor Manning brought the order to evacuate Harper's Ferry.

The Messenger saw the Scott Legion on the march to-day. They looked well. He also saw the 1st Philadelphia city troops, who were in good health. Letters mailed to the Philadelphia regiments here reach them safely.

New York, June 15. The schooner Savannah, a privateer, under the charge of Midshipman Cook, with the stars and stripes floating triumphantly over a secession rag, arrived here this afternoon. She was captured by the brig Perry, about 60 miles outside of Charleston.

She is schooner rigged, formerly a pilot and has an 18-pounder pivot gun amidships. She had been out from Charleston about 30 hours, and had captured the brig Joseph of Rockland, which was sent into Georgetown, S. C.

The crew of the Savannah, thirty in number, were put in irons and transferred to the frigate Minnesota.

Louisville, Ky., June 15. The Charleston Mercury of the 11th mentions the capture of the privateer Savannah, and calls on Jeff Davis, if the crew is hung, to retaliate. It also complains of the traders' habit of supplying provisions to the blockading fleet.

The Raleigh Standard says the volunteer force of North Carolina is twenty thousand.

New York, June 16. The Herald's Washington dispatch says Gen. Scott received reliable information on Saturday, from Manassas Junction, that the rebels are concentrating all their forces there, and he (Gen. Scott) has no doubt they will make a stand there. The rebels were to strengthen their forces at Fairfax Court House on Friday. A military officer of high rank said on Saturday that he thought it probable a movement would be made in the direction of Manassas Junction. Very large trains of Government wagons, laden with ammunition, camp equipage, and provisions for troops across the Potomac, left Saturday evening under the escort of regular U. S. infantry. A lady relative of a distinguished General of the U. S. army, who has arrived from Mississippi, passed through Manassas Junction Saturday forenoon. She says the troops to be seen there are not so many as she saw in passing through Alexandria. The troops at Manassas Junction talked freely of attacking Washington, and seemed quite confident of capturing it.

The Times' Washington dispatch says Gen. Butler has demanded 15,000 additional troops and will have them in five days, the men being ready and anxious to go. Governor Morgan has agreed with the Government to send a full regiment from New York every three days, until her entire force is dispatched.

A signal balloon was seen at a considerable distance over and beyond the chain bridge on the Leesburg road, Friday. It is supposed it was sent up by the rebels for the purpose of communicating intelligence to the secessionists in this vicinity.

Washington, June 17th.—The Massachusetts First Regiment arrived here at seven o'clock to-night. They passed through Baltimore quietly. They are quartered on Pennsylvania Avenue. Less than an hour after their arrival, all the soldiers were well fed—a fact unequalled among any troops that have heretofore arrived here.

Later news has been received here from Fortress Monroe than at Baltimore. Great preparations are going on there for a battle, which it is expected will occur to-night.

A rebel battery on the Potomac, eighty miles below the city, fired into a vessel today with muskets, the river being half a mile wide at that point.

Additional troops have been sent across the river to-night. Rumors are rife that Beauregard intends to advance to-night.

A skirmish occurred on the London Railroad, ten miles out from Alexandria to-day.

The War Department desires it stated that all vacancies in the army are filled, and all further applications are useless. Over ten thousand applications have been filed since the war commenced.

The New York Tribune says: "Orville H. Browning, the new United States Senator for Illinois, has long stood at the head of the bar of that State. He resides at Quincy, and must be fully sixty years old. Probably no appointment could have been more satisfactory to the Republicans of Illinois."

Obituary Notices.

Died, of consumption, in Thorold, C. W., May 10th, Elizabeth McClellen, daughter of John and Harriet McClellen, aged twenty-one years, nine months.

Her disease preyed steadily upon her for nine months, defying the skill of her physicians. She stated during her sickness that she should rejoice to see the Lord come, but disease would not yield its victim, and she fell under the enemy, but in the triumph of faith, believing, apparently without a shadow of doubt, that she would have a speedy resurrection unto everlasting life. Her hope in Christ remained firm unto the end, and a short time before her death, she exhorted her friends to be faithful to God, stating that if so they would soon meet in the Kingdom. Her friends sorrow, but not as those which have no hope. No—there is hope in her end, and Elizabeth will live again. Sermon at the funeral preached by the writer, to a large and attentive assembly, from John 11: 25, which words were the choice of our sister for the occasion.

Henry Stevens.

Harbinger, please copy.

Died, at N. Turner, Me., May 23, 1861, Flora A., daughter of Leander F. and Adelia D. Teague, aged five years and four months.

Although almost constantly in her mother's arms, (not being capable of walking,) the kind care and attention bestowed upon her by her parents, showed how dear she was to them, and how great must be their loss. The writer had the privilege of speaking words of comfort from the language of the prophet, Jer 31: 17. May the parents sorrow not as those that have no hope, but believe Jesus will come to raise their little one to life and immortality.

> "Then together, father, mother,
> With their darling child will be,
> By the peaceful, flowing river
> Of life's water we'll be free.
> No more sorrow, no more weeping,
> No more parting hand of death,
> Soon will come the heavenly greeting,
> In the restituted earth."

E. M. Haggett.

Died, in Portsmouth, N H, June 11, 1861, Zara Thompson, father of our Bro. Henry Thompson, aged sixty-four years.

Also, our dear Sister Sarah, wife of our beloved brother William Shapley, sister-in-law to Bro Zara Thompson, died the same day. Notice will soon be given. May the Lord comfort the numerous mourners.

Special Notice.

Eld Miles Grant was appointed by the Christian Publication Society to act as Travelling Agent for the Crisis. Monies on subscription, for publications, and on account may, therefore, be paid to him and he will account to the office. Payments made in this way to Bro. Grant will be acknowledged in the Crisis the same as if remitted to the undersigned.

Rufus Wendell, Business Agent.

Wilbraham Camp Meeting.

The Camp Meeting Committee think favorably of Monday, August 19th, as the best time for commencing the meeting at Wilbraham this season. It will soon be definitely fixed upon and announced in the Crisis. Friends wishing to make suggestions as to the time for holding the meeting may write me, and I will inform the Committee of their preference.

R. Wendell, for the Com.

Notice.

Providence permitting, there will be a Tent Meeting held at Floyd, Floyd Co., Iowa, to commence July 11th, at 8 o'clock. Eld. Moses Chandler will be present to preach the word with the New England Mission Tent. Hope to see a general gathering of the brethren from abroad.

Peter S W Dayo.

Herald, please copy.

Eld. M. Grant in Canada East.

On the 27th of June Eld. M. Grant will commence a series of meetings at Danville, C. E., and continue as long as may be thought advisable. By the earnest request of the Church.

J. Porter.

Danville, C. E., June 1, '61.

Grove Meeting.

Eld. Miles Grant will attend a meeting of days with the church in North Stanbridge, C. E., to be held in a pleasant grove, on the land of Bro. H. N. Currie, in the Stone Settlement, to commence July 11th, at 10 A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. A general attendance is solicited. Brethren, let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that it may prove to be for the glory of God and our good.

C. P. Dow.

Notice.

The next R. I. Quarterly Conference will be held at Foster, R. I., commencing June 26th, at precisely 2 o'clock, P. M. At the request of the church, the religious exercises will be protracted over the following Sabbath. Those from abroad will come on the Providence and Danielsonville stage and stop at Hopkins Mills. Let us again come together prayerfully and in the spirit of our Master.

M. R. Prettyplace, Clerk.

Grove Meeting.

By divine permission, a Grove Meeting will be held in the township of Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis., on the road leading from Baraboo to Merrimac, near the Saw Mill, commencing on the 21st of June, and holding over Lord's day.

W. Sheldon.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be holden at West Wareham, Mass., near the Tremont Depot, upon the Fair Haven Branch R. R., to commence July 4th and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to make this a meeting of great interest. The field is comparatively a new one, but there are some warm hearts here who love the "faith of Jesus" and desire to have it published abroad. There seems to be a laudable desire to hear the "word of the Lord," and now is our time to work. We know not why it may not by the blessing of God be a large meeting. Wareham is twelve miles from Plymouth, six miles from Carver, ten from Middleboro, twelve from Mattapoisett and eighteen from New Bedford—the three last mentioned places being connected by Railroad; and we earnestly hope for a large representation, from each of these towns, of brethren and sisters who have a "mind to work" and hearts to get good. Eld. J. S. White, Eld. E. Bellows, and possibly M. Grant, are expected to preach the "word of life" at this meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all preachers and laymen who have a heart to forward the work of God to aid us in this attempt. Come one, come all—come in good cheer—come in the might of God—come early; let us celebrate the "Fourth" in Divine worship. Come to stay all the week. Provision made for man and beast. In behalf of the brethren,

H. F. Carpenter.

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting in Plainfield, Hampshire Co., Mass., on land we occupied last year for a meeting. The meeting will commence June 27th, at half past ten o'clock, A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Brethren are invited. For the church,

Rufus Starks.

Grove Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be held in Dane, Dane Co., Wis., (near Bro. A. Darling's,) commencing on the 5th of July, and holding over the following Lord's day.

W. Sheldon.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we got them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1 25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1 60; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1 62; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.60; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer.—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth, for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. Wendell, per order of Publishing Committee.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Bro. that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon, otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

GEORGE STORRS.

Bro Storrs writes us as follows:—

"After the tenth of July, I shall spend several weeks on a tour from West Lebanon, N. H., through Concord, Lowell, Mass., perhaps Boston, Worcester, Springfield, and other places. At Springfield I have an engagement to spend one or more Sabbaths; but, as yet, none for any of the other places mentioned. Letters intended for me, which would not reach New York before the 28th inst., should be directed to "West Lebanon, N. H.," till July tenth; after that I shall be on the route indicated, returning towards New York. The time I shall occupy on my route will depend on whether I have any other appointments than those already made. I do not wish any complimentary INVITATIONS, and I shall not accept any such, if that is their appearance. If the invitations are clearly cordial, I shall do the best I can to comply with them. 'None other need apply.'"—Ed.

The Fly in the Cathedral.

A fly, while walking on the dome
Of great St. Peter's Church at Rome,
Exclaimed: "To me this lofty pile
Of stones seems built in wretched style;
I scarce can find one smooth place o'er all
The surface of this crooked wall;
Go where I will, I still detect
Some excrescence or some defect."
A spider from his web o'erhead,
Had heard the critic speak, and said:
"'Tis not for you, poor puny flies,
To judge of things of such a size.
This structure was not raised for you,
But creatures in whose larger view
The workmanship you censure so
No sign of ruggedness may show;
While they see what you never can,
The beauty of the building's plan."

Thus often narrow-minded men
Will judge of things beyond their ken;
They spy slight faults that cannot mar,
But see not where high beauties are.

For the Crisis.

*The Hope of the Church.—No. 1.

It is not of the hope of the christian church, under the present economy alone, we would now speak; but respecting the character of the hope cherished by true believers both under the Jewish and the Gentile dispensation. And, in order to rightly determine what constituted the objects of their hope, our appeal will be to the inspired testimony of ancient seers, who spake as they were moved by the holy Spirit, and to the recordings of the apostles of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Hope always has respect to something in the future. No one hopes for that which they already possess. It is an expectation of attaining to some future good or enjoyment. It is a fruit of faith. No one hopes for or really expects to obtain the desired object, without first having faith in the evidence upon which his hope is based. God gave his church, from the morn of creation, promises of future good, to be realized through obedience. When faith embraced these promises, immediately hope was produced in the mind; there was a looking forward to the time when the blessings promised would be granted, with the expectation of realizing them in all their excellency by and by.

The first promise affording hope to fallen man, was given in the garden of Eden. It was the promise of a future deliverance by means of the bruising of the head of him who had caused them to sin. This was the first development in embryo of the plan of redemption through Christ. Through successive generations this was to enlarge and unfold, and adapt itself to the progressive state of the church, affording a firmer basis for their faith, and in consequence a more steadfast and glorious hope. The wounds inflicted at the cross, when Satan for a time seemed triumphant, and the final victory of the woman's seed was very dimly shadowed forth to the infant church; but notwithstanding its faint outlines, the great fact that an atoning sacrifice would at some future period be offered for man's sin, was sufficiently discerned for the apprehension of faith, and the establishment of hope, as is evidenced by the slain lamb constituting the acceptable offering of Abel. From that period onward, the shed blood of slain beasts typified the future heaven-appointed and divine sacrifice for sin, and it was to the time of its manifestation, and offering, that the patriarchal and Jewish believer specially looked. The types of the mosaic economy centred in Christ. Not that they, with all their grand outline of form, and innumerable jots and tittles, imaged forth Him alone; but such as were not actually fulfilled by Him in his offices and work, were to be fulfilled through Him, as the divinely appointed medium.

We might linger long amid the types and shadows of good things to come, by means of which the church beheld, as through a darkened glass, the glories of that dispensation which was to succeed and exceed their own glorious economy,—but this is not our present design: we purpose rather to refer to those "exceeding great and precious promises" which stand out on the open plain, bathed in the brilliant sunbeams of heaven's light; unobscured by the mists and shades of mountains and forest groves. True, the cross, at which a thousand rays of light converge from prophecy fulfilled, stands prominently forth, in the foreground; but, instead of concealing, it brings forth into clearer view the excellent things which lie beyond. The cross does not absorb the beams of glory, which for centuries have been gathering and increasing for the specific purpose of baptizing it with light, but it radiates that glory,—it scatters it abroad with such glowing scintillations, that it pierces the veil and reveals to the believer's vision the substance of those promises, so that, with assurance of faith, and joyousness of hope, he can now exclaim, "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!"

At the cross, the hope of the condemned sinner centres, but the hope of the justified saint, germinating in Eden and budding at the cross, attains its full fruition "in the world to come." Its rainbow tints span the concave of heaven, from Paradise lost to Paradise restored! At the cross the title-deed to the inheritance is received; when the perfect day shall dawn, the purchased possession shall be redeemed, and revealed and enjoyed with all of its attendant blessings. Then is the full consummation of bliss! Then the complete glorification!

Having thus sketched the outlines of the believer's hope, we will endeavor to fill up the ground with those prominent promises, which inspired the hope and made it like an anchor, sure and steadfast, entering within the veil. M. D W.

* As an article has recently appeared in the "Herald" bearing the same caption, we deem it proper to state that several sheets of this article were written previous to the publication of those, and we have long hesitated, because of their similarity, to furnish our own; but the Editor has not thought necessary to decline them on that account, as many of the readers of the "Crisis" do not have access to the "Herald."

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 10.

For several years we lived after this manner, keeping up the form of godliness but denying (or destitute of) the power thereof. I often wondered why I could not enjoy the same degree of love and power as formerly, and as often felt the conviction that I was pursuing a wrong course. Whereas I had once, in expectation of the nearness of the coming of the Son of man, given up the world, lain all upon the altar and received the rich blessing of love divine, but had now (though unintentionally) put forth my hand and taken a part of the sacrifice therefrom. But I struggled on, living at the halves, sometimes repenting that I had given up my expectations, but, then, how could I help it? Others had done so too! I neither saw or heard anything to encourage or influence me back again to the old paths for years. I felt gloomy and dejected, and like one lost in the wilderness, knowing from experience that there was light, but in what direction, and how to gain it was my constant study. Near this time Eld. C—— came into the place, and gave a course of lectures upon the second coming of Christ as close at the door, and upon the doctrine connected therewith. I had an intense desire to hear, but was able to attend only the last day, and somehow there seemed an undefinable influence and power attending the exercises, which had not recently manifested itself in other worshiping assemblies, that stirred the deep fountain of my soul and gave a new impulse to my whole being. O how I longed to regain the lost blessing and enjoyment which I knew was closely connected with the belief of the speedy coming of Christ to release his people, but, how shall I obtain it? was the all-absorbing question. Once the entire community was stirred, the ministry advocated, the churches received, companions, friends and neighbors were friendly to, the doctrine,—but now the reverse. All are set in battle array against the doctrine and its advocates and [illegible] attempt to return, I must surely meet with a strong, full force of opposition in these directions. The thought of dissenting from the church to which I had been bound by the strongest ties of christian love and fellowship for more than twenty-five years, was like taking my life. And then again with regard to religious views and sentiments, to separate myself from closely connected friends, to be despised, to suffer reproach and ridicule, seemed like amputation and dissolving all earthly ties and connections in life. Presently the thought arose, can I not entertain and cherish these views, and enjoy in a good degree the same divine influence and power, keep it concealed from them, and so avoid these sufferings and retain their fellowship and good will? I consoled myself with this idea, and commenced again in earnest to seek for the "old paths." I found the more I cherished "the faith," the more I loved it and the easier I could approach the mercy-seat, and the nearer I approached this and the Savior, the clearer were my ideas and views of divine truth, and the sentiments and doctrine which are now being advocated by the Second Advent people, seemed more in accordance with the revealed character of God than those previously entertained. But as yet I dare not speak them, or utter one word.

In the winter of '53 a friend put the Crisis into my hand. This was the first reading of the kind, and the first help afforded, in word or deed, aside from the Bible and C.'s lecture, for seven or eight years. I read it with increasing interest, and through the blessing of God received much instruction, strength and courage therefrom. When inquiry arose with regard to its issue, principles and cost, I replied that it was a free paper for the poor and I could receive no possible injury from its perusal.

For several years I stood as it were between life and death. To go back was sure death spiritually, and to go forward advocating such views and sentiments, would incur sufferings worse than physical death. I read and investigated, wept and prayed, earnestly beseeching God to give me strength of mind, courage and fortitude sufficient to resist the evil and choose the good and right way. During this time these truths were accumulating in my heart, and seemed like the pent-up fires of a volcano, which I could not very easily at all times refrain from uttering, but, loving peace and quietude, and knowing that from almost every quarter suspicious eyes rested on every movement made, I was compelled to be the more cautious. I was now almost unconsciously following the influence and teachings of the Spirit and gradually submitting my will and ways to God, who was leading me in a way which I knew not; and while all was dark and doubtful outside, the light of heaven was pouring its divine rays into my soul, separating me from earthly objects, severing those ties which so strongly bound me to friends, drawing me nearer to Christ, and thus preparing me for the approaching struggle. I had received and read the Crisis more than a year before I dare to speak out, and before the full light of divine truth burst upon my ravished view. Never shall I forget April 17th, 1854. All the day, while employed in my household affairs, tears of joy fell like rain drops, while my overflowing heart exclaimed again and again, Glory to God for the light! I had now found my way out of the wilderness, and this was the light, only an abundant increase in brightness and splendor, which I knew to exist. So resplendent with divine glory were these truths advocated, and which we can now so plainly see were ever taught in the word of God, and so strengthened and encouraged was my naturally timid heart, so filled with love and good will to all men, that I ventured to speak in favor of them, resting all upon the Scriptures and producing a thus "saith the Lord." But no sooner done than was manifested such a spirit of war and persecution on all sides as has seldom if ever been equalled in humble life and in modern times, which lasted nearly six years. D. N. K.

For the Crisis.

Not far Enough.—An Appeal.

One evening, as I bent my steps toward home, tired and somewhat perplexed with the crosses of a life of business, thinking, what of the morrow, and the morrow, AND THE MORROW,—thinking, what shall the morrow bring forth,—feeling this life to be one of dependence, uncertainty and doubt,—being assured by all that surrounded me that on all things the mark of change was apparent; that what obtains to-day may vanish, to be seen no more by the morrow; that the setting sun, as he silently and majestically lowered himself into the abyss of darkness to us, but light to others, may never rise for our observance; that the fast failing day may carry with it the failing and failed life of many who then were the observers of this common but glorious performance of Nature,—I thought of the many, many changes that had come over my short life, the retrospection of which was a source of continued thankfulness to Him who in great mercy had for so many years cared for me. I could but contrast my highly favored condition in life with [illegible] many that came in my path as I journeyed homeward. Some I met were the squalid and dirty, of which city life shows an abundant supply;—these, many of them, the probabilities were, had been born into the lap of luxury and affluence; had bad parents who lived in all the enjoyment that wealth could produce, i. e., of a sensual character. Into those homes, the debasing influence of intoxicating liquors had been introduced. There, the gaming table had become part and parcel of their "household gods."—There, had been introduced him who afterwards became the destroyer of the happiness of the whole family,—for, in an unguarded hour, the brightest flower of that once happy family ceased to be virtuous. What then? Did the father of the family dash from his side-board and cellar the cause of this unhappy event, and begin to reflect as to what may next transpire to continue the breaking up of his once happy home? Did he at all see the evil that now made inroads upon the domestic felicity of home? Nay, verily, did he not rather continue on, and on, and on, and then downward was their course. The probabilities were that parts of such families beset my path, poor, degraded, squalid, and full of disease, hating and being hated, living in riot and rapidly going where hope reaches not. So I queried, and thus my thoughts ran on.

Another object was brought before me, and that which gave rise to thoughts of which the heading of this article is composed—"not far enough." Two little boys were at their play; "hide and seek" was the play. One of the boys called, but the other could not discover his whereabouts; he was hid in a door-way, and the seeker had to turn a street; in doing so, he failed to discover his playmate; he was just upon him, but did not see him. He did not go far enough—and the thought pressed itself upon me like this:—"Not far enough!" Alas! how true it is that many will fail of eternal life and incorruptibility because they do not go far enough. First, when the offer of eternal glory is presented them—when the means for escaping the frown of God and destruction is shown them—when the way to enjoy this life, as it only best can be, is set before them—when God's character is presented them, and they are told, "be ye holy, for I am holy"—when Jesus, coming in power and great glory, with the angels of his might, the resurrection of the dead, the possession of the "all things which God by the mouth of all his holy prophets had spoken since the world began," of living and reigning with Christ on earth—of all these things and more beside;—I say, when they have heard these things, and were made for the time being happy, and willing to even suffer death for Jesus and the truth's sake, and then—ah! then to fail to obey even as they had believed, forgetting that "obedience is" in the sight of God "better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." The sin of disobedience is a grievous sin. God has ever shown his disfavor for all who disobeyed. He is the Almighty, and who can withstand his power?

"NOT far enough!"—and why? God is faithful—and why? Jesus is true—and why—ah! why, what has come between you and God's mercy? Has the fear of the frown of man loomed up in awful terror before you, and thus hindered your entire devotion to this supremely pleasant and blessed life? Or has self, that ever present and ever ruinous characteristic, held control over you, so that what appeared duty at one time ceased to appear duty at another? Such are the inclinations of human nature, that, unless we crush out, by keeping under (and that through grace) our bodies, we shall never attain that high exaltation of spiritual life in Christ Jesus to which we are by the favor of God called. There should be no stopping by the way; any one, having put their hands to the plough, must not look back to lust after the things of this age, or they are become unfit for the kingdom of God. None who enter the race for eternal life must even think of turning back. The life is a race, a journey, a warfare, a striving to enter into the gates of the city of God. You must run according to the prescribed rules of the race. You must journey in the road appointed. You must fight according to the tactics written, and printed, and published for the whole army. If you will enter the life, you must keep the commandments. If ye do this ye shall never fail, but an abundant entrance shall be administered unto you into the everlasting kingdom.

"Not far enough." We read in the Scriptures that many "in that day" will say, "when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?" Then shall he answer them and say, "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Others will put in the plea, "have we not prophesied (or preached) in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" Then will Jesus say unto them, "I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity." This comprehends a class, so it appears to me, who have been zealous for God, but not according to knowledge. They must be of that number who go about to establish their own righteousness,—thus do they miss of eternal life, because, however much they did know, they did not have the mind of God in them, or they would be received in a very different manner than is evident they will be. They might be of that class who give their body to be burned, and have not charity, or love. And in the judgment it will be manifest they did not go far enough, or they would have believed the truth and obeyed it, and walked accordingly. This, and this alone, will enable a person in the judgment to stand firm, and, with bold resignation to the will of the Deity manifested through Jesus, accept the proffered gift of eternal life.

And now, in closing these few remarks, permit me to ask the readers if they have satisfied their consciences by comparing their views of the plan of God by His word. This Word shall judge them in the "last day." And further, presuming they have believed the gospel, are they following in the duties consequent? If so, then they can say, "far enough"; for, if faithful unto the end, they shall be saved. And may God through the Christ save us. Amen.

For the Crisis.

The Conference in Amboy, Illinois, May 23d, 1861.

DEAR BRETHREN:—In harmony with our previous arrangement, we commenced our meeting in Mechanic's Hall, Thursday evening, when we listened to a sermon by Bro. Towle from Matt. 20: 4, showing the necessity of working for God if we would see his cause revived and men saved in the kingdom.

Friday morning we met for prayer and conference. Fervent and effectual prayer was offered for the blessing of God to rest on the meeting, and for the salvation of the poor sinner. It was a refreshing season for the weary pilgrim at this time. Brethren from a distance arrived, making our hearts glad. A good congregation listened to remarks from the writer, from Prov. 4: 4, showing the fulfillment of prophecy in the past, and the light it throws on our position relative to the events just before us. In the afternoon Bro. Wm. M'Cullock preached from Acts 17: 17, showing that God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world, and that then, and not before, the righteous and wicked will be rewarded. In the evening preaching by Bro. Calkins, from Matt. 24: 14, showing the connection of the gospel of the kingdom with the coming of Christ to reign. The response of the Church seemed to be, Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus.

Saturday morning the conference met to transact business; when it was resolved that we form ourselves into a conference, to be called the Northern Illinois Conference of Adventists, embracing four counties, viz., Lee, Decalb, Lasalle and Bureau. The following officers were chosen: President, N. W. Spencer; Vice President, A. S. Calkins; Secretary, H. G. M'Cullock. The following brethren were recognized as preachers in the conference: Eld. N. W. Spencer, Shabona Grove, Decalb Co.; Eld. A. S. Calkins, Deer Park, Lasalle Co.; Eld. H. G. M'Cullock, Lamoille, Bureau Co.; Eld. D. S. Clark, Amboy, Lee Co.; Eld. Wm. M'Cullock, Lamoille, Bureau Co. Bro. Mabey was also commended to the churches as a laborer in word and doctrine. Bro. Chandler having arrived, we listened to a sermon from this old soldier of the cross from 1 John 3: 3, showing what this hope is, and its practical bearing on the christian's life. Saturday afternoon sermon by Bro. Spencer, from 1 Pet. 4: 7, showing the end to be near, and the necessity of watchfulness and prayer in these perilous times. In the evening sermon by Bro. E. B. Hatch, a Baptist minister from Wisconsin, from Rom. 5: 5, showing the strength and blessedness of the christian's hope. O, how thankful we ought to be that light is breaking on the blessed truths of the Bible away in this western world.

Sunday morning we came together for a love feast, and truly the Lord was with us. Peace, love and joy prevailed, saddened only by the thought that, all thoughtless, the world are rushing on to death. Many testified of what God had done for them, and others would had time permitted. Sermon in the forenoon by Bro. Chandler, on Dan. 7th and Rev. 17th, showing by the fulfillment of prophecy our location in the history of the world. In the afternoon, sermon by Bro. Calkins on the three woe trumpets. After service we brought to mind the sufferings and death of the blessed Son of God in the breaking of bread. Some sixty partook, and it was a solemn time. In the evening we assembled to hear the remainder of Bro. Chandler's sermon, which was left unfinished in the early part of the day. The people being interested, the hall was filled with silent listeners. He showed us plainly where we are, and I think many were convicted of the truth of our position.

Monday morning three happy souls were buried with Christ in baptism by Bro. Calkins. Others are interested, and we hope they will soon obey the command—repent and be baptized.

Thus closed one of the most interesting meetings it was ever my privilege to attend. Perhaps there were not as many converted as in many other meetings, but it strengthened the things that remained, and I think preachers and people went away from that meeting encouraged to fight on a little longer till Jesus comes. Unity and love were the prevailing elements of the meeting, and we all felt that the scattered saints of God would soon be gathered home. O, in what a time we live! Men seek in vain to solve the problem of our nation's trouble, and ask with anxious looks for what is coming on the earth. Nations are gathering—the storm-cloud of Jehovah's wrath is gathering blackness—but, glory be to God, in the midst of this awful storm God's word sheds light, and will pilot us safely through until the morning dawns. O, let us be ready to hail the glad day.

H. G. M'CULLOCK,
Secretary of Conference.

Selections.

Women as Physicians.

Many ojections have been urged against the medical education of women. It has been said: "Woman is the weaker vessel," and therefore the depths of science are beyond her penetration. The strength of her judgment is inferior to that of man, and she is therefore unfitted to discover the secret sources of disease, and to foresee the results of its destructive agency; or, in medical phrase, she is "deficient in power of both diagnosis and prognosis!" Permit us to be a little facetious on the first of these allegations. Which is the weaker, the main spring or the hair spring of a watch and which is the more important? The former, it is true, by its superior physical energy, impels the whole machine, but the latter acting upon the delicate escapement regulates the motion to all useful purpose. Weakness, then, is no proof of inferiority. Which penetrates most easily the wood—the sharp point, or the rude head of the nail? It is not true that woman is inferior in penetration; it is, perhaps, her highest mental quality. In strength of judgment, she may succumb to man; but in quickness of perception, and consequently in promptitude of judgment, she excels him; and both these qualities are of equal value in the study and practice of medicine. Diversity—not inequality—is the law of the sexes. What the one wants in strength the other wants in speed; but the moments are equal, though their proper functions differ. Yet in what sphere of life adapted to her physical structure has woman failed to make herself at least respectable and useful?—Dr. Coates.

STAMPED LETTER SHEET.—The Postmaster General has ordered the preparation of sheets of letter paper, cut, gummed, and embossed with the three cent postage stamp, combining in one both a letter sheet and envelope. Also, similar sheets note size, to be packed in such manner as may be necessary to insure the safe transmission of the sheets by mail. This will be a capital safeguard against the carelessness of correspondents who are prone to omit placing postage stamps on their letters. It will be also just the thing to obviate legal difficulty which sometimes arises in identifying the date of an enclosure with that of the official post mark.

The Secret Out.

A very impudent physician has done his brethren a great injury by thoughtlessly divulging one of the most valuable secrets of the profession, while riding up to Union Square in the Fourth Avenue cars yesterday. "How is practice, now?" you must be making a great deal of money, for every third person seems to be ailing." "True, there is much serious sickness, but I get no practice. Secession has made the times so hard, that people cure themselves by eating nothing."

There are a few bodily ailments which are aggravated, and in some cases rendered incurable by insufficient diet; but with the exception of diphtheria and a few others, nine out of ten of all ordinary ailments are controlled, are arrested, are permanently cured by a wise diminution of the amount of food eaten. This is particularly the case when there is no decided ailment, but a general feeling of discomfort or of unwellness. In all actively inflammatory maladies, where there is acute pain anywhere, total abstinence from all substantial food, from everything liquid or solid, except hot teas, is the sheet anchor of safety, when not extended beyond thirty-six hours. No one should venture on a longer abstinence on any occasion without the advice of a physician.

Hence the more a man exercises short of actual fatigue, the better he will feel, the sooner and more effectually will he be relieved. Many a time a man has felt uncomfortable, sometimes very decidedly so, but upon taking a walk or ride, or engaging in some interesting work, he expresses himself as having been greatly relieved. Let then this thought impress itself on the mind, that in the common every-day ailments of life we must look for the cause in an excess of blood and other fluids in the body, and that whatever diminishes that excess is curative. The methods of this diminution are worth remembering. 1. Abstinence from food. 2. Perspiration, whether induced by covering up in bed and drinking hot teas, or by muscular exercise. 3. Vomiting. 4. Bleeding. 5. Counter irritation, by frictions with the hand or a mustard plaster. Of these we recommend only abstinence, perspiration, exercise, friction. But let it be remembered that when exercise evidently increases the discomfort or the pain, or when it induces a positive feeling of weariness, it is contra-indicated, and quiet of mind and repose of body should be sedulously cultivated. And under all circumstances let it be remembered that however beneficial exercise may be in any given case, the very moment it becomes a felt fatigue, that moment it becomes a positive injury, if persisted in.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Worthy of Imitation.

It is easy to ruin, and it is easy to save a young man. One of the leading brokers of New York had a young man in his employ. The vast amount of money in his hands was a great temptation to him. Small sums were missed from day to day; one quarter, then fifty cents, then one dollar, then two dollars were missed. He was charged with peculation. The broker showed him how he could detect the abstraction of the smallest sum from his money; the young man stammered and confessed. Now, said the broker, I shall not discharge you, I shall not dishonor you. I intend to keep you, and make a man of you. You will be a vagabond if you go along in this way. Now let me see no more of this. He went to work. He did not disappoint the confidence. And the other day he was inducted into one of our Banks in an honorable position, and his employer became his bondsman in the sum of $10,000. Had he done as some would have done—sent the boy away and proclaimed his dishonor—perhaps he would have ended his days in the State prison, and been sent to his tomb in the garb of a convict. But one young man was rescued from ruin who had been placed amid the temptations of money, and for a moment was overcome.

The Blind Boy and the Bible.

An agent sends us the following interesting account of a little blind boy, for whom a Bible in raised letters was on request granted by this Society. The circumstance herein related occurred prior to his reception of the book.

"I am acquainted with the boy, and consider him far above mediocrity in intelligence and love for the Word of God. He teases his parents to read the Bible to him much of the time, more than any other person I ever knew. He has the alphabet for the blind, and has learned it. I consider him a worthy object of your charity. I have just presented the Bible cause in this place where he lives. The people subscribed liberally, in view of the prospects of the little blind boy receiving a Bible which he can read. I stayed all night at his father's, and the most affecting scene I have met with was, when on the next morning he came to me with half a dollar, and with tears in his eyes urged me to take it, so that I could give Testaments to poor little boys who had not got any. I could not refrain from weeping, and I will make many others weep with that half dollar."—Bible Society Record.

DRINKING IMPURE WATER.—Set a pitcher of iced water in a room, inhabited, and in a few hours it will have absorbed from the room nearly all the air respired and perspired gases of the room, the air of which will have become purer, but the water utterly filthy. This depends on the fact that the water has the faculty of condensing, and thereby absorbing all the gases, which it does without increasing its own bulk. The older the water is, the greater the capacity is to contain these gases. At ordinary temperatures a pint of water will contain a pint of carbonic acid gas, and several pints of ammonia. This capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the temperature to that of ice. Hence water, kept in the room awhile, is always unfit for use, and should be often renewed whether it has become warm or not. And for the same reason, the water in a pump stock should all be pumped out in the morning before any is used. That which has stood in the pitcher over night is not fit for coffee water in the morning. Impure water is more injurious to the health than impure air, and every person should provide the means of obtaining fresh, pure water for all domestic uses.

Faithful, yet Gentle.

Paul knew how to reprove; it was part of his office, and a piece of his spiritual surgery. But when he had done lancing he knew how to pour oil and wine into the wound. And herein the apostle Paul sets a copy to all the ministers of Christ. Their hearts must be fired, not with the heat of passion, but with love towards their people. It is better to love as a pastor than to speak as an angel. Love is the flower of delight, which should grow in the heart, and send forth its perfume at the lips of every minister. Those which come in the spirit of meekness to their people, are likely to do much good. Knotty hearts will be soonest wrought upon by love; the fire will go where the wedge cannot; the thunderbolt may break, but the sun melts. When love sends forth its sweet influence, it melts a sinner into tears. —Thomas Watkins.

WHAT MAKES A GOOD EDITOR.—A good editor, a competent newspaper conductor, is like a general or poet—born, not made. Exercise and experience give facility, but the qualification is innate, or it is never manifested. On the London daily papers, all the great historians, novelists, poets, essayists, and writers have been tried, and nearly all have failed. We might say all; for after a display of brilliancy, brief and grand, they died out, literally. Their resources were exhausted. "I can," said the late editor of the Times, to Moore, "find any number of men of genius to write for me, but very seldom one man of common sense." Nearly all successful editors have been men of this description. Campbell, Carlyle, Bulwer, and Disraeli failed; Stirling, Barnes, Phillips, succeeded; and Delane and Lowe succeeded. A good editor seldom writes for his paper; he reads, judges, selects, dictates, directs, alters, and combines; and to do this well, he has but little time for composition. To write for a paper is one thing—to edit a paper another. —Exchange.

HOW MUCH WAS A PENNY A DAY.—Much better wages than it sounds to us. An agricultural paper says that in the time of Christ a penny was about equal to fifteen of our cents, and as money was ten times as valuable as now, the penny a day was as good as one hundred and fifty of our cents; so that the men who worked in the vineyard for that, got as good wages as good men now generally have in harvest time. The gift of the good Samaritan of two pence to the landlord to take care of the man who fell among thieves, in addition to the raiment, the oil and wine, was equivalent to about three dollars of our currency, which would probably pay for his board two weeks in a country tavern where board was very cheap.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CLOTH.—A recent writer gives the following reason why clergymen dress in black. "In the year 1524, Luther laid aside the monk's costume, and henceforth dressed according to the fashion of the world. He chose black clothes, and consequently the color has become the fashion of the clergy. His reason for choosing this color was, the Elector of Saxony took an interest in him, and now and then sent him a piece of black cloth, being then the court fashion; and because Luther preferred it, so his scholars thought it became them to wear the same color as their master. From that time, black has been the color mostly worn by the clergy."

QUICK SYMPATHIES.—We imagine with wonder the passage of a comet through space, flaming and sparkling along strange paths, and glowing upon stars innumerable as it goes; but that is not half as wonderful as the passage of the human heart, flaming, and sparkling and glowing with ten thousand effects shot out upon every man we meet, as we move through life. Planets are cold and dead, and all their radiance falls without effect; but the human soul, as it passes up and down the ways of its experience, is producing ten thousand effects at every single moment, many of which we know nothing about.—H. Ward Beecher.

☞ Send your little child to bed happy. Whatever cares press, give it a warm good night kiss, as it goes to its pillow. The memory of this, in the stormy years which fate may have in store for the little one, will be like Bethlehem's star to the bewildered shepherds. "My father—my mother loved me!" Fate cannot take away that blessed heart-balm. Lips parched with the world's fever will become dewy again at this thrill of youthful memories. Kiss your little child before it goes to sleep.

☞ When any one does you an injury, endeavor to elevate your soul so high that his malice cannot reach you.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send so much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All persons desiring to receive the Crisis, or any of the Publications on sale at this office, should always state distinctly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed, and direct their communications and remittances to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

The Throne of Grace.

Come to the throne of grace,
With confidence draw near;
Come seek a tender Savior's face,
And banish every fear.

Come ye who weep and mourn,
By sin and fear opprest;
Come, every heavy laden one,
Approach and gain your rest.

Come, ye of doubtful mind,
Come and with boldness plead;
You shall his matchless mercy find,
And grace in time of need.

Thoughts for the Times. 1861.

(Concluded.)

V. And here we may once more repeat what has been so often said—We may give one more warning to infatuated Protestantism. A snare is laid for you of which you have not the slightest suspicion. A pit is dug, and covered over with the olive branches of peace. It is Satan's snare for Protestantism. We tell you again, that the man who overturns Popery will be the Head of the Last Apostasy. He will be worse than Popery, or than all that have gone before. Yet by the destruction of Popery he will assume the appearance of Protestantism. By the TOLERATION of true religion he will appear to be the friend of Truth. He will be William of Orange on a great scale—"glorious, pious, and immortal;" and all shall WORSHIP HIM, whose names are not written in the Book of Life. His enmity to the Pope will be regarded as the evidence of his sanctity; and with this specious bait false Protestantism will be caught. Such will be Satan's last snare for the mock Protestantism of the age—for those who present the Bible with one hand, and the sword and poison with the other. This will constitute the most decisive trial to which Protestantism has ever been exposed; and one which will marvellously exhibit the justice of God. "The ungodly is trapped in the work of HIS OWN hands," says the Psalmist. For three hundred years have Protestants been reviling Popery, as if it were the only criminal of the universe. We rob, we murder, we poison, we sell soul and body for filthy lucre, we commit every abomination except that one abomination of reverencing the Pope, we strike out one link from that "adamantine" chain which binds the heart to the throne of Satan, and then we take up that one link and pronounce upon that alone all the "curses that are written in the book;" fling away the fragment, and then boast that we have flung away, along with it, everything that is criminal, and everything that is accursed. Look to the writings of Dr. Cumming or Mr. Elliott, and you will find scarce anything but the abuse of Romanism. Our pride, our avarice, our incessant wars, our insults to the weak, our boasting—even our infidelity, are scarcely hinted at. The destruction of full ten millions of human lives in building up our empire, is passed over as a forgotten trifle. POPERY—POPERY is the only crime! and the whole of God's commandments may be infamously violated without national peril, provided we are sufficiently obstreperous in our outcry against the Pope. So long as you hate the Pope you can have nothing to do with Antichrist, though you may be guilty of all the other crimes in the catalogue of sin. The falseness and treachery of such teaching is intolerable. Do you think that God can be mocked, or Satan cheated of his prey by such flimsy deception? The snare is formed, and ready to be laid, which will capture and destroy the hypocrites of Protestantism. Their own hands, indeed, have dug the pit in which they themselves shall be taken. Antichrist means the POPE! Very well! A man will arise who will overturn Popery and the Pope; but the Pope is the Antichrist, therefore the man who overturns him must be the anti-Antichrist—the friend of God, and the Champion of Protestantism! All the false Protestants of the world will rush into his arms, and perish in his grasp, like those who were clasped by the Italian image of the Madonna. They will follow him as their Champion, and he will lead them on to their destruction. For "God shall send them strong delusion, that they may believe a lie." Is it not just that vengeance should fall upon these men who shut their eyes to all the horrible iniquities of Protestantism, and can see no spot upon the sun but the spot of Romanism?—who have turned the sun into darkness and the moon into blood, by slaughter and revenge, and then turn round upon Popery and lay all the horrors of the scene to her account alone? We warn every man, as he values his immortal soul, to avoid all connexion with the destroyer of Popery; and, while he abjures the crimes of the Church of Rome, to abjure, equally, the crimes of the antagonist of Romanism.

Romanism has turned the sun into darkness, but English Protestantism has turned the moon into BLOOD!

You will not believe this: then make the calculation. The Spanish Inquisition destroyed 500,000 lives. St. Bartholomew destroyed 70,000, making in round numbers about 600,000—say a million, if you wish. But not one of these lives was destroyed by any guilty participation. The English opium-trade has destroyed 400,000 lives a year for twenty years, making EIGHT MILLIONS of human lives; and in every case the person destroyed was made to participate in the guilt of his own destruction. In every case the double crime was committed of MURDER and SUICIDE! In the midst of these horrible facts let us shut our lips, and say no more against Popery or the Inquisition, or against the worst tyranny of ancient or modern Rome. Or else take it in this way:—two criminals are disputing with each other. One of them says, "You have committed ten robberies and five murders; I have only committed five robberies and three murders. Therefore I am an excellent Protestant, and you are a wicked Roman Catholic!" Beware, we say once more, beware above all things of the man who shall overturn the Roman Church, and the Roman Hierarchy, for us will be worse than they. Beware of the last and deadly pitfall which Satan will dig bye and bye for Apostate Protestantism!

VI. DENMARK. It is a pleasant thing to sit by the fireside, or to stand in the parlor, "reckoning out your money," while the nations around are agitated and perplexed,—to refuse them all aid except empty words, which every one despises, and then lift up your eyes in absolute amazement at your own generosity. But as there is no pleasure without its alloy, it is unpleasant to discover what an English writer in an English paper has had the honesty to confess—That our selfishness towards all, and our insults to the weak, "have made us detested and despised by the whole of Europe." It is still more unpleasant to find ourselves without one ally in the world, when our own turn shall come for that inevitable humiliation which the enemy is preparing for us. We shall be paid in our own coin—we shall have abundance of our favorite "SYMPATHY," and we shall then learn by experience what a paltry thing it is. DENMARK stands this day at the head of all the nations of mankind. Of dauntless courage—of devoted patriotism—of Protestant faith—of pure and spotless morals—free from the ambition of France—the avarice and homicide of England—the mercenary atrocities of Switzerland—the gigantic crimes of America—Denmark is the only country of the earth that seems to retain the aspect of Christianity. Christianity elsewhere is only the mask of villainy without end. In Denmark it has still some of its primitive reality. This noble country is threatened by the pedants and infidels of debased Germany. The Danes are our cousins by descent, with almost Anglo Saxon blood in their veins—with Saxon features, and far more than Saxon virtues. They are Protestants, like ourselves; they have every claim upon us, both of kindred and of religion. Half the North of England is peopled by Danish colonies. We have cruelly insulted them by invading their coasts, and carrying off their fleet, without any declaration of war. With all these claims upon us, they, at least, might look for something more than "sympathy,"—they might look for substantial aid; but they, like all others, may look in vain. Not an atom of assistance shall we give them. They may be blotted out of life, and their country out of the map of Europe; and we shall sit by the fire-side reckoning up our money, and now and then cheering them with an expression of condolence. We have sent fleets and armies to the very ends of the earth, to kill the Hindoos, or to poison the Chinese, yet we will not lift one finger to assist a nation of kindred blood, and a nation of kindred Protestantism. We can kill and destroy when avarice and ambition call us to the field, and then talk of Christianity and peace when every generous principle of human nature summons us to action. What term can be too strong for such a policy? Denmark, in despair, must throw herself upon France, and France has, in every instance, proved herself generous to the distressed. But the French Emperor is not France. He, as an individual, may be as unscrupulous as the British nation. He, like ourselves, may be selfish and ambitious, and he may use the generosity of France as the instrument of his own ambition. He has already stretched out his hand to Denmark, while we were maundering about "sympathy." She rests upon his strength as her only earthly support under overwhelming oppression; and the consequence will be, that the whole gallant fleet of Denmark will be united to that of France in the great day that is to open upon Europe, and above all on the Saxon race. We have deserted all our allies; and when we want them most we shall find them converted into enemies.

VII. SPAIN. It has just been announced that Spain is preparing for war upon a very large scale; and the "Times," with its usual blindness, suggests that Spain intends to make war upon France and England, in favor of the Neapolitan Bourbons! You see to what false guides you have committed yourselves in the path of destiny. You trust the "Times" as if it were a God; and it invariably deceives you. Never has the "Times" foreseen or foretold one single event. It follows, but never leads. It flatters, but never warns. SPAIN arming for a conflict with France and England! No; but Spain is arming for a junction with France against England, and for the seizure of Gibraltar. Have you not observed that the French iron frigates are multiplying week by week? France is nearly ready with her iron warriors. The time of action is at hand. She gives the hint to Spain to be prepared for what is to come. Spain understands the hint, and begins her preparations. The Ionians have begun already to demand separation from England and annexation to Greece. They are perfectly right; for we have not only treated them cruelly, but we have acted towards them with PERFIDY. IONIA was handed over to us that we might protect its liberties from the designs of other great powers. And we have destroyed its liberty, trampled its Parliament underfoot, and hanged its citizens by dozens, because they ventured to resist. The Ionian islands will be lost! And then Malta and Gibraltar will insist upon separation. One belongs to Italy—the other to Spain. Lord John Russel's foolish letter has justified all the three in demanding separation. Then rises a "vision of judgment." Spain, equipped for war, will unite with France; Gibraltar will be attacked by sea and land; Morocco, in league with both, will co-operate with her batteries. The Straits will be closed up, should any necessity arise; the Mediterranean will be LOCKED, and Gibraltar will be taken. All this, we believe, has been fully arranged between France, Spain, and Morocco. The Moorish ambassador was last year sent to Paris, as you may be sure, to settle the details of the grand scheme. And now the French iron frigates are nearly completed, Spain is beginning to arm, in order to be ready at the appointed moment. Malta, Ionia, and Gibraltar, are not only liable to be separated from England, but we may be assured that the whole scheme of separation has been long ago sketched out in the dark recesses of the Tuileries. Built by Catherine de Medici, the dark Florentine spirit of the builder still broods in the chambers and glides along the corridors of the Tuileries; and the conspiracies which shook France in the sixteenth century have grown up with the strength of three hundred years to agitate all Europe.

VIII. While we were in the act of writing, intelligence arrived of a new deed of cruelty perpetrated by this nation. We have made war upon the unfortunate natives of Western Africa for no greater offence than that of refusing to trade with us in GROUND NUTS. We have attacked their army, and have destroyed or bombarded two of their towns. The despatches announce, with exultation, that we have "blown entire masses of the inhabitants to pieces with our guns!" In bombarding a town, of course the women and children are as much exposed to injury as the men. And all this for the sake of a few bushels of ground nuts, and, perhaps, a few hard words. We are given over to a reprobate mind, heaping crime upon crime, insulting the weak, filling every quarter of the globe with wanton carnage, exulting in deeds of violence, and yet cringing on all occasions to the power of France. No minister of the Gospel will utter a word, either of censure or of warning; but there is one above who keeps a strict account—and, "know that for all this God will bring you into judgment."

LASTLY. A great deal has been said of the Emperor's regard for England; and it is even asserted that he himself has warned our Government to get up our volunteers, lest the French prætorian guards should force him to invade this country against his will! Therefore, people will conclude, he can have no wish to invade us, but quite the contrary. This conclusion may be extremely erroneous; and we believe that it is so. The Emperor is determined to avenge Waterloo and St. Helena, yet, at the same time, he has an aversion to bloodshed. He reasons with himself to this effect:—"Should I land an army in England, great slaughter must ensue. I will therefore warn the English government to get up the volunteers, and I will then make the presence of those volunteers an excuse to my own army for not attempting a direct invasion. BUT, I will have a whole fleet of iron ships before England has two. With those iron ships I will sweep the channel, attack the dockyards, and then she work is done. England, without a navy, will be shut up, as in a prison-house, for many a year to come." Such, we believe, has been the counsel of the Tuileries, and the dark spirit of Catharine de Medici has not walked the earth in vain!

POSTSCRIPT.—A short time ago we spoke of the wretched being who made his fortune by defending M. Bernard. You now perceive that the true character of that man is exposed to public view. But the NATION has still to answer for that scandalous Trial!

For the Crisis.

Why Fight?

It appears while many reasons are urged why Christians should stand aloof from the present War spirit, that there are a few reasons, deemed worthy of a conspicuous place in the columns of the Crisis, why the disciples of the prince of peace should "join Ahab" and go up to fight for the recovery of "Ramoth Gilead"! Let us consider them.

1. We must obey magistrates and rulers, and Rulers say "fight." The magistrates once commanded Peter and John (Acts 4: 18) "not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus." Why not obey? The three worthies were commanded to worship an image. Why not obey? Daniel was commanded not to pray. Why not obey? The martyrs, to renounce the "faith of Jesus." Why not obey? The answer comes from lips inspired—"Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." Our duty, then, is to be learned from the Word of God, not from the law of man. The question then is—when man says "go up with us to Ramoth Gilead to battle," does God say, "put up thy sword?" If he does, obey HIM. Suppose Jesus had said, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants cheat, lie, steal," etc., "but now is my kingdom not from hence,"—would he not have thus prohibited falsehood, theft, fraud, etc., among his disciples? Would it not have been regarded as a prohibition of such things? How then can it be regarded as anything less than a prohibition of the use of carnal weapons, when he says, "If my kingdom were of this world, then (not till then, i. e., under no other consideration) would my servants fight"? Whoever, therefore, would justify the sword in the hand of a Christian must prove Christ's kingdom to be of this world; he must dishonor God as Jehoshaphat did when he said, "I am as thou art, my people as thy people." 1 Kings 22: 4. Shame on Christendom at this time, that it thus yokes itself "together with unbelievers;" "righteousness" fellowships "unrighteousness;" "light" communes "with darkness;" "Christ" hath concord with "Belial," and, joined in common cause, away they go, while "false prophets" and men that ought to know better, shout after them like Ahab's priests, "Go up and prosper."

2. "It is no worse to send armed men to defend our country, than to keep armed policemen to guard our cities." But is there no difference between a watchman and a soldier? A Christian may guard the dwellings of his neighbors against fire or assassin without shedding blood, by giving timely alarm of their approach,—but not not so in battle. There is no true analogy between the two. Besides, I have yet to learn that a Christian needs an armed police to keep him safe. Elijah had no such defence, and he was quite safe against a "captain of fifty." Elisha was safely defended from a whole army. The Wesleys appealed to no "armed police," yet their persons and their dwellings were often miraculously delivered from the hands of a mob. I fear Christ needs to say unto us, "O ye of little faith." Faith is a stronger shield than a hireling police. Paul tells us that by faith some "escaped the edge of the sword," "quenched the violence of fire," "out of weakness were made strong." It was Peter's lack of faith that made him unsheath the sword: this is more than intimated in Christ's rebuke—"Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" If Peter had been mindful of such a defense (which by the way he afterward enjoyed,) he would not have felt the need of the sword. Since, then, the Christian needs not the sword to protect him, he is under no obligation to use it in defending a nation the protection of whose sword he does not require. But—

3. Paul appealed to a "war power" for an armed band of soldiers for protection, (Acts 23,) and if the Jews had made an attack upon him, "would he have said, you must not fight?" This argument has one thing, at least, against it, viz., that it is not true. The Jews did band together to kill Paul. They desired him brought down again to the council that they might lay in wait for him and kill him. Paul's nephew told him their plans. He (Paul) sent the young man to the chief captain—but with what request? To obtain armed protection? Not an intimation of it, but to request that he might not be "brought down" as they (the Jews) desired. Paul wanted to be left where he was. This appears in the young man's appeal to the chief captain—"Do not thou yield unto them," i. e., do not carry him down again to the council, as they require, but leave him where he is, or let him go. Hence, it is not true that Paul appealed to "armed protection." His confidence was not in "Roman soldiers," but, as he tells us, "in Him who raised up Jesus again from the dead." Paul did not believe in needlessly exposing himself to danger, nor fighting when danger came. He had been in many a mob before this at Jerusalem; in none of them did he appeal to armed soldiery for defence, but "God delivered him." Ofttimes, when violence was threatened, he escaped by obeying his Master and fleeing "into another city." Such a course did indicate that he wished simply "to be let alone." Neither is such a course pusillanimous or cowardly. Flight from the violence of men, and quiet submission to human violence when unavoidable, is the counsel of the Lamb of God, and it has his example and the example of his apostles and martyr church to enforce it. Was the example of Christ "pusillanimous?" Does it not require more moral courage to submit to wrong than to stand one's ground and fight for the right? Do not many fight for fear of being called cowardly? We are to be lamb-like. The lamb "flees" at danger's approach, and is "dumb before its shearers." On this principle Paul fled from Damascus, from Antioch, from Iconium, Thessalonica and Berea. On this principle he suffered at Lystra, at Phillippi, at Jerusalem, and finally at Rome. Paul did on one or two occasions appeal to his Roman citizenship to remind his foes that they were violating Roman law—but what then? Because a Roman, must he defend Rome with his sword? He once also appealed to his Phariseeism:—"I am a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee." Because a Pharisee, in some points, must he defend Phariseeism with the sword? No; and on the same principle he need not so defend Rome. Paul did not bend the energies of his mind or exhaust his physical strength in apologizing for or defending earthly thrones. Those who heard him preach said of him that he taught "another King, one Jesus."—Acts 17: 7. I imagine one would have to listen a good while to modern pulpits to catch the first intimation of "another" kingdom to come, in which Jesus shall be King. Their thoughts, their interests, their desires, their efforts, all end with "our country"—"our Republic." They look on the things that are seen—not on things which are not seen.

Not so with Paul;—his eye rested on things "not seen as yet," which are eternal. He doubtless, like Abraham, confessed himself a "pilgrim and stranger," and they that say such things declare plainly that they seek "another country." Let us imitate his example. Remember, we have a kingdom to preach, a kingdom to call men unto, a kingdom to inherit that is not of this world. Peter calls christians "a holy nation." We are a nationality of ourselves. This "holy nation" is about to obtain its everlasting dominion;—shall we, by a blind zeal for God-smitten nations of earth, forget the interests and the glories of this "holy nation"? In the hour when our kingdom is "ready to be revealed," shall we be drunken with the wine-cup of earth's fury? When God arises to "shake all nations," as he is now doing, shall our puny arm attempt to stay them in their reeling? Christian, beware! Say not to the world, "I am as thou art, my people as thy people." Take the counsel of Micaiah, and be in peace. 1 Kings 22: 17. "Wherefore we, receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."

The Two Horned Beast.

LOUIS NAPOLEON LIKELY TO DEVELOPE IT AND BECOME ITS HEAD.

As the two horned Beast is so frequently alluded to as acting for the first Beast, it will be well to consider, first, what place the "first Beast" occupies in the world's history; we can then get a better idea of the two horned Beast.

This first Beast has "power over all kindreds, tongues and nations"; and "all that dwell upon the earth worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life." His predominant sway among the nations is indicated in the inquiry, "Who is able to make war with him?" It was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given unto him to continue (or, margin—"make war") forty and two months. (1260 years.) His forty-two months' career is followed by a reverse of fortune. He receives a deadly wound, loses his power over all nations, etc.; his power to overcome, to make war with, overcome and kill the saints, and his universal respect from those whose names were not written in the book of life; receives his wound, "as it were unto death," and goes into captivity.

Though we are told that this Beast receives a "deadly wound," yet it is said to be "healed"; hence it is not in its strictest sense a deadly wound, but, "as it were, wounded to death." This idea is expressed also in different language; as when speaking of him in closing the account of his course for forty-two months, it is said, "He that killeth with the sword (alluding, probably, to his fierce raid upon the saints in killing them) must be killed with the sword;" and though such language might in ordinary usage imply his end, it cannot here, for he is afterward spoken of as "the Beast which had the wound by a sword and did live." And it is further evident, that we may not understand these expressions to imply his end, from the assurance that he is at this time in "captivity," which does not admit that he has ceased to exist. Thus we are to expect that his forty-two months' career of power, oppression and triumph will be followed by his "captivity" in weakness, suffering, and degradation, approaching near unto death. This first Beast, as all agree, is the Papacy in her past history; and her "captivity" and degradation are manifest to all in her present condition, and her state for some time past.

But while in this condition, it receives support from a miracle-working power, causing the earth and them which dwell therein to worship this first Beast. This is the first work attributed to the two horned Beast, and hence this two horned Beast power does not come to the support of the Papacy till she has become helpless, when he first restores to her the respect of the world, then co-operating with her he causes the world to make an image to what she was in her former glory, or, a power resembling the first Beast power, which will be a union of Church and State. Then all must worship as they direct, under penalty of death; and they will require all to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their forehead, and none shall buy nor sell save those who have this mark. In this work we are not to suppose the Papacy to act a leading, but a co-operating part, with the miracle-working power at the head. Their interests, it seems, will be mutual, their co-operation general, and their success almost universal.

It seems quite likely that this miracle-working power is Spiritualism. The religious position of the Papacy in its arrogant blasphemy, corruption, and saint worship, is not so different from Spiritualism as to discourage the idea of a mortification of minor differences, for the sake of advantage. And, as to their prospect of a general co-operation, we know that the present distressed condition of the Papacy would welcome assistance from almost any quarter, and at almost any price; and with fair prospects of success, would need but the Pope's and Bishop's "nod" to enlist the sympathy and aid of all her hordes. That such a combination would have general success seems very evident, for Spiritualism would enlist the sympathies of most of the Protestants, especially the churches, whose their enthusiasm would be unbounded in view of the union of all religions as a sure indication that their fabled millennium had commenced, while the communications direct from the invisible world would give tone and vigor to all their projects in this inauguration of what they regard the Kingdom of Heaven on earth.

It seems probable that Louis Napoleon, in his course as a Spiritualist and friend to the Papacy, is destined to effect this union. His dominion does not yet represent the two horn feature, but none look for his settlement of the Italian matter, without taking a slice of her territory. The only question now is, how much and what is he going to take? When we behold in him this two horned feature, we may then expect the next feature to be developed,—his causing the earth to worship or respect the Papacy. Then we may hear that he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men. Then, that there is a general belief in the world, through his miraculous power, that he is destined of heaven to do wonderful things toward the union of the world, in preparing them for the millennium. Then, by the co-operation of his admirers and the Papacy, this new and popular religion will become nationalized, when persecution will follow, and the reign of Antichrist will have come. I think Louis Napoleon will not be the Antichrist, but his forerunner, turning the hearts of the children to the fathers. Everybody hopes that he is the Man who is destined of heaven to give success to his peculiar ideas. He is claimed by the Despots, Monarchists, and Republicans; by the Catholics, Protestants, and Spiritualists.

For the Crisis.

We may do the Same.

"And went and told Jesus."

Precious privilege granted to the christian, that in all his devious and weary pathway he may tell Jesus. Its various windings, its long and tedious marches, toilsome labors, and griefs and sorrows, may all be told confidingly into the ear of that faithful friend, who, "like as a father pitieth his children, so doth the Lord pity them that fear him." How secure, then, is the child of God; nothing can shake his sure repose if he is the friend of Jesus. The world may turn a deaf ear to his complaints, and every avenue of relief be closed against him; his property may be swept away; the tongue of slander may be employed to effect his ruin, and his life be imperiled; but still he has left to him, amid all his other losses, the privilege of telling Jesus, which is above every thing else in value. This is all the disciples could do, when the faithful John the Baptist was shut up in prison and finally beheaded, for bearing faithful testimony against the evil works of darkness. When no sympathy could be obtained from the world, and no redress made for the taking of that good man's life, they could tell Jesus; they could pour their grief into his gracious ear, and tell him the loss they had sustained, knowing that he could assuage their sorrow and dry up their tears, affording them in himself an unfailing and ever abiding source of joy and peace. It is just so now, away down through the vista of time at this remote distance from that painful occurrence, although the blessed Savior is not now in the flesh, and does not walk and talk with his lowly and sorrowing disciples. Yet as a Prince and Savior he sits on the throne of his Father, ever ready to lend a listening ear to the woes and wants of his children. Shall we not, then, lift up our heads and rejoice, even amid all the gathering gloom of earth, its toils and conflicts, its tribulation and anguish, in the privilege of telling Jesus, as often and as much as our increasing griefs demand. His ear is never heavy when we petition, nor weary when we complain, but his love invites us nigh, and bids us cast our burden upon the Lord and he will sustain us.

O that poor trembling sinners, who are tired of the false, vain world, would hasten to tell Jesus how deeply their sins oppress them, and how bitterly they lament their wanderings from their Father's house, and, like the prodigal son, would fain return. Go, then, poor penitent sinner, go; the Master calleth for thee,—"Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden; take my yoke upon you and learn of me, and ye shall find rest to your souls." Blessed invitation! Go quickly, trembling one, and tell Jesus, that he may speedily cleanse you from your guilt, and clothe you with the garment of adoption, and thus prepare you to escape the storm of wrath ready to be poured upon the world of the ungodly when Jesus comes.

"Lord, open sinner's eyes,
Their awful state to see,
And make them, ere the storm arise,
To Thee for safety flee."

☞ Luther used to say, "There is so much in this world that [illegible] of good men, but the Gospel is [illegible] indeed."

For the Crisis.

My Visit to Winsted.

Winsted is a beautiful manufacturing village in Connecticut, at the terminus of the [illegible] R. R. At present but little is doing. The war spirit is almost predominant. A large number of inexperienced young men, urged on by the prevailing spirit and the [illegible] of those who profess to be God's ministers, have enlisted. One [illegible] said, his "highest glory was to be wrapt in the stars and stripes." Another said to the volunteers, "Give your hearts to God, and be sure to take good aim at the enemy." One of the volunteers died on his way to Washington; his remains were brought to Winsted for interment. A sermon was preached by the pastor of the Second Congregational Church in W., on Sunday, May 12th, from this text—"The love of Father-land," and published in the Winsted Herald of May 24th. I wish to make a few extracts, more especially to show that Spiritualism is deep-rooted in the popular church at the present day. Mr. Eddy said:—

"It is a new and strange sight to see our dead wreathed in the stars and stripes. It is a new sound for us to hear the roll of martial music on the Lord's day. But I do not find in my heart to object. These sights and sounds only express the flame which burns within all our hearts. And we cannot feel that we are wrong in joining in this military display. Come, therefore, to the house of God, with your glittering bayonets and your broadswords, and consecrate them to the God of battles; and this is now appropriate to be done when the remains of a soldier are borne to us for burial. It seems to me that is the thought of this occasion. This strong and noble youth had laid himself on the altar of his country. I am persuaded he did it understandingly. It would almost seem that his giving himself to his country, was the act of his giving himself to God. And I believe that true patriotism comes with regenerating force to the heart. It is an inspiration from God. . . . Our battle-fields show where men have fought and bled and died for God and father-land. The spirits of the mighty dead look upon us from these battle-fields, and they ask us, 'Shall Bunker Hill, Saratoga and Yorktown preserve the country but once?' We, their sons, respond—'The spirit of those battle-fields shall preserve the country forever!' We hear the whisper of friends in the breezes which fan us; and those who contend for home often feel the dear departed looking down upon them, stimulating them in the deadly strife. They strike for home, while the spirit sire and the spirit mother look on. Will it not be an additional motive to those Massachusetts men who fought their way through Baltimore, in some future engagement to realize that the spirits of their brethren, who fell by their sides, are looking on? Will not the men of '76 look down upon the homes for which they fought and bled, which they protected and made happy, handing them down to us as the most precious treasure, anxiously enquiring if we will protect them and hand them in turn down to the next generation?" In speaking of forty generations of the past, Mr. E. said:—"Not forty generations of the past, but the innumerable myriads of the to come he sees looking down upon him, and hears them praying him to strike home for the right. An army of such lovers of father-land, while realizing the great cloud of witnesses looking down upon it, will strike terror and shake a continent by its tread."

Thus you see how Spiritualism is embodied in the popular church.

When I came to Winsted, June 8th, I found Bro. Miles Grant there, and he had very reluctantly consented to preach the next day, fearing the writer might feel hurt, as it was his appointment. Tell Bro. Grant never to refuse on my account, for I consider it a great treat to hear, and should have been sorry to have had him go away. Bro. G. preached three times; first, on The duty of Christians in the present struggle; second, Man in Death; third, The signs of the Times. Camp's large hall was filled each time. In the morning, his text was Matt. 5: 9—"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." He showed what it was to be peacemakers, giving us a clear Bible view of the christian soldier, his captain, and his orders, showing the contrast between the soldier of Christ and the soldier of the country. I will refer to a few texts he quoted. 2 Tim. 2: 3, 4, 5; 1 Tim. 6: 12—the Armor. Eph. 6: 13–17; 2 Cor. 10: 4—Jesus is our Captain. His orders are—Matt. 5: 39, 44; Luke 3: 14; Rom. 12: 19; John 18: 36. The sermon made a powerful impression on the audience. In the afternoon he gave us a discourse in his usual impressive manner, on Man in Death. In the evening, on The Signs of the Times. Quite a number had to stand, and a death-like stillness pervaded the whole house.

It seems to me the people of Winsted must be convinced that the christian should be filled with the Spirit of Christ, and then there is no room for a war spirit; and if we let in the war spirit, the Spirit of God will depart. God is testing his children, to see whether they are of His kingdom or [illegible] world. After looking [illegible] for God's kingdom, [illegible] and pray on—"Thy kingdom [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 26, 1861.

"Why Fight?"

This article in our present number, by H. F. C., reviewing the article copied into our issue of June 5th from the Bible Examiner, will be read with interest, the subject it discusses being one which, as we have reason to know, excites considerable attention at present among our brethren. In connection with it there are suggestions which we wish to submit, in the spirit of kindness, for the consideration of the writer and our readers. If anything that follows betrays any misapprehension on our part, or contains any misstatement as to what Bro. Carpenter has written, the opportunity to set us right will be freely accorded to him. The question in hand is one upon which we are in doubt. Not having settled views on the subject, we welcome every thing that affords us light. If we were fully persuaded on either side of the question, we should give utterance to our convictions without hesitation. As it is, we must feel our way along until we clearly perceive what is in harmony with "the law and the testimony." If we can find out what the Book of God teaches on this subject, we shall be sure we are right and stand upon solid ground, for "the law of the Lord is perfect." Having thus defined our own position, we proceed with our remarks.

1. The "war spirit." The Examiner says, "a 'war spirit' is not the spirit of Christianity;" and to such as "feel themselves called upon to take up arms," it says, "let them not give place to revenge, or a desire to gratify private animosity, but to promote the public good." We conclude, therefore, that the editor of the Ex'r would unite cordially with Bro. C. in counselling Christians to "stand aloof" from any "spirit," in the present or any other war struggle, that is contrary to the spirit of Christ, and that does not have direct reference to obligations imposed upon us by the revealed will of our heavenly Father. It is certain that godly men have believed in the lawfulness of "bearing arms;" and it is equally certain that the feelings and motives underlying their convictions have been such as mere "patriotism," judged by the world's standard, knows nothing about. It is nevertheless true, we fear, that of a very large proportion of those who profess to be the followers of Christ it may be said, with too much truth, that "their thoughts, their interests, their desires, their efforts, all end with 'our country'—'our Republic;'" and this painful fact, while it in no wise justifies in true christians the absence of a proper solicitude for the country's welfare, should make us careful to determine our principles of action in these troublous times from a standard other and higher than the example of the multitude.

2. The Examiner utters not one syllable concerning "Ahab" or "Ramoth Gilead," and we feel quite confident that Bro. Storrs and Bro. C. entirely agree in condemning the conduct of Jehoshaphat in his unwise affinity with the King of Judah. He acted in direct contravention of that "word of the Lord" whose guidance he had sought. Bro. C. seems to present these two monarchs of a former dispensation to illustrate the guilt which, in his view, christians inevitably incur, under all circumstances, by bearing arms. That the reference fails, however, to serve such a purpose, will readily appear if we observe how easily the argument can be turned the other way. Asa, the father of Jehoshaphat, while doing "that which was right in the sight of the Lord," was extensively engaged in the use of "carnal weapons," and the Most High, in answer to his prayer, aided him with a mighty hand in the work of destruction! His petition was,—"help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude." At a later period, this same King, instead of trusting in Jehovah, "relied on the King of Syria," and this resulted in the escape of "the host" that would otherwise have been delivered into his hand. "Herein thou hast done foolishly," said "Hanani the seer," who also taught him this lesson: "the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him."

The question, then, whether a "cause can exist justifying the taking up arms by the civil magistrates," must not be carried to the Old Testament for a negative answer; and if we are compelled to believe, from other scriptures and other considerations, that the disciples of the Savior should never "fight," it will be just as well to say nothing about "the recovery of Ramoth Gilead." Let it not be supposed that we cite the case of Asa to prove that christians may lawfully, under any circumstances, engage in carnal warfare. We do no such thing, nor do we believe that a hundred similar instances, if found in the Old Testament, would give countenance to such a conclusion. All valid argument on the subject must, as we understand the matter, be based upon the teachings and examples of Christ and his Apostles.

3. "We must obey magistrates and rulers, and Rulers say 'fight.'" This Bro. C. presents as the Examiner's argument. His doing so leads us to remark that there is not in his article, so far as we discover, a single recognition of our obligation to "obey magistrates and rulers"! We should not seem reluctant to admit a clearly revealed duty, even though it may appear to us that others are making it the basis for conclusions at once, pernicious and unwarrantable. Peter says, "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man, for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." 1 Pet. 2: 13–15. Paul says, Titus 3: 1, "Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates," etc. He likewise enjoins the following: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." Rom. 13: 1–7.

We reproduce these scriptures in full because we wish them impressed upon the reader's mind. They not only mean something, but they mean what they say; and it is our conviction that they set forth obligations which many among us, who rejoice in the fact that Christ's "kingdom is not of this world," are too prone to disregard. As illustrating this remark, witness the habitual neglect of the requirement to offer to God "first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, for kings and for all that are in authority." 1 Tim. 2: 1, 2. Now it is upon the fact that human governments are God-ordained, and that "he" whom Paul declares to be "the minister of God," "BEARETH NOT THE SWORD IN VAIN," that the Examiner rests its conclusion that it may be the christian's duty to fight. It is not simply that there are "rulers" in the land and that they say "fight." It is, rather, that God has placed his sanction on "the powers that be," commanding us to submit to their "every ordinance" for His sake, and investing them with the power to meet resistance with "the sword." Sound or unsound, this appears to be its argument, and we desire that none may lose sight of the real issue.

When man commands what God forbids, or forbids what God commands, the christian's duty is clearly suggested in the language Bro. C. quotes from the apostle Peter. But does the Examiner affirm the "higher law" doctrine with less emphasis? Hear what it says:—"Where rulers command to do that which is plainly forbidden of God, we may and ought to suffer, unresistingly, the pains and penalties they may inflict rather than disobey God, whose law is supreme, as in the case of the three Hebrews, commanded to worship Nebuchadnezzar's image."

4. "It is no worse to send armed men to defend our country, than to keep armed policemen to defend our cities." This sentence, which Bro. C. puts within quotation marks, does not occur in the Ex's article, but as its substance is there, we make no objection to it. Bro. C., however, seems at once to lose sight of the real point, and asks—"But is there no difference between a watchman and a soldier?" We answer yes, but what of that? The position, as cited, has nothing to do with "watchmen," but with "armed policemen;" and if the functions of the latter are admitted to be analogous to those of the "soldier," and at the same time compatible with the Christian's calling, does not the inference that a saint may be a soldier become imperative?—"Faith," says our brother, "is stronger than a hireling police," and still he seems to favor the idea of employing "watchmen" to "guard" our "dwellings" "against fire or assassin without shedding blood, by giving timely alarm of their approach." Such a measure we should call showing our faith by our works—but would the case, as it bears upon the exercise of this grace, be essentially different if we authorized an "armed police" to arrest the assassin, even if violence had to be employed, and permit us to remain securely in our homes? Perhaps we "ought to know better," but we confess to our brother that the knowledge of the fact that we are surrounded and our cities guarded by "armed police" affords us more comfort than it does regret.

The examples adduced to show that Christians need no such protection, deserve a passing remark. Elijah is one of these. But he used the "sword" and with it "slew all the prophets" of Baal—"four hundred and fifty" in number! Elisha is another. He likewise favored the use of "carnal weapons," for he commanded Joash to "shoot"! (1 Kings [illegible]). But how about these eminent, God-trusting men—"the Wesleys"? Did they discard "armed police" arrangements as in no way subservient to the "needs" of one who has the "shield of faith"? On this point we are inclined to think that our brother's affection for these men of blessed memory (which is fully shared by us), led him to conclude that what ought to be true of all good men was true of them. But what are some of the facts? In the "Life of Rev. John Wesley, A. M.," by Richard Watson, we read on page 95:—"On the last day of 1742, Sir John Ganson called upon Mr. Wesley, and said, 'Sir, you have no need to suffer these riotous mobs to molest you, as they have done long. I and all the other Middlesex magistrates have orders from above to do you justice whenever you apply to us.' Two or three weeks after they did apply. Justice was done, though not with rigor; and from that time the Methodists had peace in London." On p. 102, we read that Charles Wesley, on having a sword presented to his breast by the captain of a mob, said to him, "I fear God, and honor the king." This was at Sheffield, and Charles Wesley writes, "As there is no 'king in Israel,' I mean no magistrate in Sheffield, every man doeth as seemeth good in his own eyes." Are we to suppose that Mr. Wesley would have had scruples about appealing to the magistrates to put down these the worst rioters he had ever seen up to that time? On p. 120, Mr. Watson quotes from Charles Wesley's journal this language:—"In the meantime we were advised to send for the Mayor, but Mr. Mayor was gone out of town, in the sight of the people, which gave great encouragement to those who were already wrought up to a proper pitch," etc. We suspect that if "Mr Mayor" had not been "out of town," Charles Wesley would have sent for him, and Bro. C. does not doubt but that the Mayor's prerogatives were above those of a mere "watchman." Of the same mob Charles Wesley writes: "Our constable had applied to Mr. Street, the only justice in town, who would not act. We found there was no help in man, which drove us closer to the Lord; and we prayed with little intermission the whole day." p. 121. This looks as if there had been such an "appeal" as Bro. C. thinks "the Wesleys" did not bring to their aid! On p. 128 we learn that John Wesley once sent the following note to a man from whom he had received "personal insults":—"Robert Young—I expect to see you between this and Friday, and to hear from you that you are sensible of your fault. Otherwise, in pity to your soul, I shall be obliged to inform the magistrates of your assaulting me yesterday in the street." On p. 131 we learn that one thing demanded by John Wesley "from those that were in authority" was the following—"That you would effectually suppress, and thoroughly discountenance all riots and popular insurrections, which evidently strike at the foundation of all government, whether of Church or State." If this was not an appeal for the interposition of what our brother calls a "hireling police," we fail to see any force or propriety in the language. So much for "the Wesleys." Bro. C. has called them on the stand, and we have recorded their testimony. Let it have only its proper influence in solving the question, "Why Fight?"

5. Bro. C. represents the Examiner as saying that "Paul appealed to a 'war power' for an armed band of soldiers for protection," and then declares—"it is not true." Unfortunately for this emphatic denial, it is directed against a "man of straw"! The Examiner does not say that Paul asked "for an armed band of soldiers." Its language is the following:—"He [Paul] immediately sent this young man to the 'chief captain' to seek protection of the 'powers that be;' that power was a 'war' power." Now if Paul did ask for "protection," the Examiner's statement is true; but whether he did or did not, "it is not true" that the Ex'r represents him as having made an appeal "for an armed band of soldiers." Dr. Eadie, of Scotland, says (in "Paul the Preacher")—"Lysias was well aware of the unscrupulous nature of the men with whom he had to deal, and at once took measures for his prisoner's safety and sent him the same night under a strong military escort to Cesarea." Bro. C. will hardly deny that Paul's appeal was for "safety," and this, according to Dr. E., was secured by "measures" that certainly look warlike.

6. Bro. C. says Paul "had been in many a mob before this at Jerusalem." We do do not know what facts there are to warrant this statement.

7. "We are to be lamb-like," and "the lamb 'flees' at danger's approach, and is 'dumb before his shearers.'" So says Bro. C., and "on this principle" he thinks Paul fled from place to place and suffered in various places, "and finally at Rome." Paul's method of being "dumb before his shearers" was somewhat unlike the lamb's, on several occasions recorded in Acts. At Jerusalem when the mob were crying, "Away with him," he said to the chief captain, "I beseech thee suffer me to speak to the people;" and when permission was granted him, he said, "hear ye my defence." To Ananias this "lamb-like" (?) Apostle said, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." To Felix he said, "I do the more cheerfully ANSWER FOR MYSELF." To Festus he said, "I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat where I ought to be judged; * * * if there be none of these things whereof they accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Cæsar." To Timothy he writes, "At my first ANSWER, no man stood by me." These facts show us that a man whose renewed nature was most blessedly imbued with the meekness and gentleness of Christ, did not uniformly exhibit "lamb-like" qualities by unanswering silence. Nor did he always, guided by the lamb's example, flee "at danger's approach." To the Ephesian elders he said—"And now behold I go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befal me there; save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me." At Cesarea he declared—"I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." In leaving this point we would remark that the Gospel no where requires us to "be lamb like." Christ's disciples are said to be his "sheep," because they are led by him, hear his voice and follow him. Christ himself is the "lamb of God," but he is so in a character which is not presented for our imitation. We are not to be lamb-like, so far as any Bible requirement is concerned, but we are to be Christ-like.

This article has reached too great a length and we must say no more at present. We have deemed what we have written due to the truth, and calculated to put some points in a correct light which might otherwise be misapprehended. May the Lord direct all our hearts in his love and in the patience of Christ. It is not our fault, as a people, that the war question is up for consideration among us, but it will be our fault, and a guilty one, if we do not bring to its investigation candid, kind and loving hearts. Let us seek for "soft words and hard arguments." In conclusion, we join heartily with Bro. C. in enforcing the admonition—"wherefore we, receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear."

Preachers' Appointments.—Our preaching brethren will observe that we throw out all useless verbiage from the Appointment column. We doubt not but that this pruning will please them. Matters are sometimes sent to accompany the publication of appointments which are of no sort of public interest, and which could just as well be attended to by private correspondence. If a preacher wishes to know the P. O. address of some brother in a locality where he is himself unacquainted, we will always be glad to inform him either by letter or through the Business column of our paper. To precede the place and time of every appointment with, "I will meet the brethren at," etc., communicates no additional information in a printed column devoted to such notices. We therefore propose to let them appear as briefly as possible.

A Correction.

In the Harbinger of the 19th, Bro. John Howell, writing from Poultney, says:—

"The statement that the place [Poultney] is unhealthy, may be misunderstood, and may imply more than is true. I said that for those who were predisposed to affections of the lungs, I did not consider it healthy, and on this ground proposed a change."

The foregoing will correct any misapprehension which might be occasioned by our mention last week of Bro. H.'s purpose to leave Poultney.

The New Tract.—Bro. I. C. Wellcome offers to take one dollar's worth of Bro. Hudson's proposed tract, to be entitled, "Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment." They are to be furnished to subscribers at $2 per hundred. We want $24 more to enable Bro. H. to put them to press. Who will help make up the amount? Let us hear from you. The tract is to contain 24 pages.

Incognita.—Will our correspondents "Amy," of Davenport, and "Sarah," of Griswoldville, please give us their entire names? We want to write them both, but cannot do so while they remain in disguise. Their names shall not appear in our paper without their permission. We can keep secrets.

German Tract Ready.

Bro. Reimer's German tract on "Life only through Christ" is published and ready for distribution. He has sent us 200 copies, which enables us to fill orders, which we shall be happy to do. Price, 20 copies for $1.00; 100 copies for $4.00; gratis, to those who are unable to pay.

Camp Meeting.

It is now probable that the Wilbraham Camp Meeting will commence Monday, Aug. 26th, and not on the 19th. The Committee intend to announce the time definitely next week.

☞ The inquiry of the sister who inquires where she can obtain the publication called "The Last Vials," shall have the information as soon as we can obtain it. Will Bro. Grant please inform us who is the American agent?

Besides being crowded for room, we have not had time to prepare a condensed account of the proceedings of the late Conference at Seneca Falls, from the full Report published in the Harbinger. We therefore give below an editorial article from that paper in relation to the meeting:—

General Conference.

Our Annual Conference closed its session here on Sunday evening. On Thursday a few brethren from different quarters came in; on Friday the number was greatly increased, and on Saturday the throng that assembled showed that the truths of God's blessed word were not forgotten in the midst of the rush of nations in the conflict of war. How blessed the pilgrim's faces looked, lit up with smiles as kind greetings were interchanged, and hand clasped hand, which had been separated a twelvemonth by the circumstances that separate pilgrims in this world of toil and strife. But the season was a profitable one as well as one of pleasure. The earnest preaching of the effective word was attentively listened to by large congregations, and many thoughts of profit and consolation were gathered by those among whom the word was sown. While the preachers were speaking earnestly and eloquently of Christ's coming and kingdom, the moistened cheeks and hearty responses showed a chord of sympathy and love had been touched and made to rekindle with Pentecostal fire. To the brethren who were here we need not say we had a precious season, for you know it. To those who were not here we cannot tell what they lost. The season of Sunday morning's love feast and the evening's baptism were seasons which "ne'er may be forgotten" until we meet among the blood-washed throng on Canaan's shore. The systematizing of our work as an Association, as begun in this Conference, we trust will result effectively to aid in spreading the preached Word and promoting a spirit of trust and confidence among the brethren scattered abroad.—Harbinger of June 12.

Note from Edwin Burnham.

The friends abroad who have requested the labors of Elwin Burnham, when he was too much engaged to respond, and all others who may desire them, are hereby informed that he is now more at liberty and requests all to write him immediately who desire him to visit them.

The Soul—What is it?—The following definition of a soul is from one of Henry Ward Beecher's sermons:—

"It is formless, shadowless, no eye beholds it, no hand handles it, no pencil may draw its lineaments."

We do not know how a better description could be given of nothing than Beecher here gives of the human soul. We would suggest, if friend B. believes the soul to be something, that he try again. J. S. W.

To J. S. White—Inquiries.

Will Bro. J. S. White please answer, through the Crisis, the following questions:—

1. Who are the people called Daniel's people in Daniel 12: 1? Are they the Jews as a nation, or christians generally?

2. From what shall they be delivered? Is it from their present captivity and dispersion, or has it reference to a resurrection from the dead? If it is a resurrection from the dead, why are not the whole of the classes spoken of raised? Daniel 12: 2—"And many of them" (Daniel's people) "that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." If this verse refers to the sleeping dead generally, does it not prove that a part of each class spoken of will not have a resurrection? J. M. Mchlig.

Letter from Bro. H. Pratt.

Bro. Wendell:—Permit me to say a word through the Crisis about "Our Discussion," etc. Instead of proving that "all men would live forever," our friend, Mr. Baker, outstripped us entirely in the "destruction doctrine"; striving to prove that there would be no resurrection of the dust, consequently no resurrection of Man. We found it not difficult to show to the interested congregation that our friend, though a professed advocate of the universal salvation of all men, was in fact preaching the universal destruction of all men; which we disproved by showing "that they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead would die no more." He will try to extricate himself from this dilemma on Nov. 12th, to which our discussion is adjourned. We had a good attendance and attention. Mr. Goodwin, our Methodist preacher, presided.

GROVE MEETING AT NEW-MILFORD.

This was a success. Seven were planted in the likeness of Christ's death, whom we trust have their names recorded in the book of life, the only true record of the church. Bro. Barker is certainly doing good in that vicinity. May he be enabled to walk worthy of God, who we believe has called him to work in his vineyard. The brethren here are workers;—no time ran to waste, and we were filled with their fellowship. A scene like that of '44 and '54 was witnessed at our communion, which was after the retiring of the congregation at night. A holy greeting attended the parting scene, not of promiscuous kissing, but that right hand of fellowship that caused the tear drops (like the holy ointment upon Aaron's head) to run down to the skirts of the garments, and fill the place with odor of more delightful perfume.

One very wicked man arose, with tears filling his eyes and fast running down his cheeks, and after much effort said, "I came here to make disturbance, but God has got hold of me; it is holy ground; pray for me—I can't stand it." We needed no police on such ground. A picked guard of angels I have found ever to be efficient against all secessionists, whether of God or man. I have been enabled thus far to hold up God's banner right in the face of the enemy and nothing more than [illegible] manifest as yet, and I trust I shall be enabled to carry this flag on "with a [illegible]" till I shall have finished the work the Master [illegible] me to do. Yours, H. Pratt.

The Model Church.

I would like to be able to buy and give ten thousand copies of this new book of Eld. H. L. Hastings to the ministry and members of the churches in this country. For some fifteen years I have desired to see a work published to contrast the present state of christendom with the first days of the christian church, in a marked and clear manner. I have now seen it done. With few exceptions, I can say it is the deepest, and keenest, and plainest picture I have yet seen. In nearly every page one sees staring him in the face two groups of characters, each professing the same principles, and talking of the same Master; yet one shows countenance and character, faith and conduct so beautiful and lovely as to bind your heart to them, and inspire you with new courage to work for God. While the other causes you constantly to see the terrible consequences of departing from Christ, and living with a false hope, in presumption, leading you to look carefully to yourself to see "whether you live in the faith." The book is not only important to show the apostacy of christians generally from the faith and hope of the gospel, but it is a good looking glass for all christians to look into, side by side with others, to see where they fail from coming up to the early christians.

Buy the book, all who can; read it, sell, or lend it. It will do good everywhere. You will call the price high; but you should learn the fact that you will get more valuable information out of it than out of several dollars worth of other books you think very good. The same is true of "The Great Controversy," and "The Reasons for my Hope." They each contain a collection of important facts, which cannot be found without searching perhaps a hundred dollars worth of books, and spending much time. I. C. Wellcome.

Belgrade Quarterly Conference.

The brethren met according to appointment, at Chandler's Mills, June 13th, and had a very interesting Conference. I trust it will prove a profitable one, for they came with a mind to work in the vineyard of God. There were representations from Richmond, Augusta, Vienna, Mt. Vernon, Livermore, Wayne, Rome, Mercer, and Whitefield. The reports of brethren were encouraging, showing that the word of God takes effect in the hearts of some, and is producing reformation in several localities. Some of the "virgins are arising and trimming their lamps," because they believe "the bridegroom is soon coming." Several brethren and sisters attended our Conference who never heard such preaching before, and they seemed to enjoy the word very much. God will bring good out of it. Some wanderers thought it time to return to God. Some unconverted ones were made to feel that they ought to obey God. The ministers present were H. B. Sevey, D. M. Hanscomb, S. K. Partridge, H. D. Read, and I. C. Wellcome. Bro. E. M. Haggett being unable to preach, on account of recent sickness, did not attend, but sent a letter stating that his "labors as a missionary had been for some months past bestowed upon Greenwood, Sumner, Franklin, Hartford, Livermore, etc."

Our brethren and friends kindly entertained us, and seemed glad to do all they could to help us, while we tried to feed them with the word of God. May the Lord bring fruit of it into his soon coming kingdom. The more of these conference meetings we hold, the more satisfied we are that they are the means of much good in the cause of Christ. Let us not slacken our hands, but try to double our diligence. The Lord is at hand.

Prayer.—It is not the place of prayer that God examines; nor is it the words that God primarily regards; it is not the form in any sense that avails; it is the intense and ardent desire breathed from the depths of the heart into the ear of God, who answers exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think.

The Family.—The family circle is God's blessed ordinance, and is the sweetest and the most hallowed spot on earth. It is the nursery of affection, of friendship and of virtue; the place where those ties of mutual dependence and help are first formed which, in their expanded state, unite human society.

The Death of Cavour.

And so Cavour is dead!—Cavour, the mind of Italy, as Garibaldi is its heart, and Victor Emanuel its right arm; Cavour who twenty years ago planned that political regeneration of Italy, which the courage and fidelity of the King of Sardinia and the good sword of the Hero of Caprera have united to accomplish. Himself of titled family and ample fortune, he made rank and wealth subservient to the advancement of Italy. Twenty years ago he began to prepare Sardinia for a position among the powers of Europe, by developing her industrial resources and encouraging the education of her people. The agricultural and manufacturing interests of the kingdom, stimulated by the example of England, rallied the energies of the people in the way of self-improvement and self-government.

In the memorable epoch of 1847, Cavour took the lead in procuring from Charles Albert a liberal Constitution for Sardinia—the only free Constitution of that era which has withstood subsequent changes and convulsions. Under that Constitution Cavour has served his country in various offices of public responsibility—always with eminent wisdom and fidelity. His favorite policy was, by cherishing the industry of the nation, by promoting popular education, and by perfecting the organization and discipline of the army, to bring Sardinia up to a point of vitality and strength which should command the respect of Europe, and qualify her to demand the recognition of Italian unity and nationality. His sagacity in sending a Sardinian contingent to the Crimean war, procured for Sardinia a voice in the Congress of Paris, and brought the Italian question fairly before the assembled Powers. He knew how to use Louis Napoleon without succumbing to a foreign despotism. He knew how to give play to Garibaldi without rushing into the chaos of red republicanism. He knew how to thwart the Pope without alienating Catholics from the support of the throne. He knew how to balance conservatism and radicalism, royalty and republicanism, so as to secure for Italy unity and freedom. Though unversed in war, yet in the no less important field of political strategy he was the King's Nestor, and the people's Agamemnon.

To human view Cavour has been taken away at a most critical time for Italy—just as the question of the secular Papacy and the occupation of Rome has reached the point where it must be settled either by diplomacy or the sword. It may be that Victor Emanuel, so long under his training, has become so thoroughly imbued with his ideas that he will carry them out to complete success. Even the impetuosity of Garibaldi reconciled itself at length to the patient watchfulness of Cavour. And Ricasoli is at hand to represent the same spirit and tendencies. But our great hope for Italy is that her cause has now risen above men, and that the Providence which has led her thus far in the conflict will crown her with the final victory.

We look now with melancholy interest upon that mild, thoughtful face, that commanding brow, that searching but unsearchable eye, which make the portrait of Cavour so impressive in the illustrious group of Italy's deliverers. (See the Paris picture of Victor Emanuel, Cavour, and Garibaldi, on exhibition at Haughwout's, No. 488 Broadway.) We wait to hear, through Mrs. Browning, the wail of Italy over this fallen chieftain.—Independent.

Correspondence.

From W. W. Boyden.

Bro. Wendell:—Here I am up in Minnesota, seventy-five miles west of St. Paul. Left a band of dear brethren in Blackstone, Mass., last fall, and came here to the far west, a stranger in a strange land. I commenced circulating books and tracts, and conversed with individuals as opportunities presented, not knowing that there was one of like precious faith in the vicinity. Found a few, however, that are looking for the soon coming of Christ to reign on the throne of his father David; in short, were Adventists—believers in Bible teachings. The tracts presented by Sister Dixon and Bro. Dimmick, and those that I have procured of Bro. Grant, with the Crisis, have done a good deal to awaken quite an interest amongst the inhabitants of this place, and have set them to searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. Quite a number are very desirous of hearing these truths explained; old theology don't look just right to them. "And how shall they hear without a preacher?" Is there not some one to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

The Methodist minister has attacked us severely. Is preaching a course of sermons at the present time to prove our position wrong. Preached a discourse last Sunday, in which he endeavored to prove that the soul was immortal and could never die, but said it was not a part of God. Quoted Gen. 35: 18, to prove that we possess an immortal soul; Luke 20: 37, 38, to prove that the dead are alive. Luke 16: 19 quoted, as an actual transaction that took place, and represented the state of the dead; also affirmed that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are alive in heaven; also Matt. 17: 2. Declared that Luke 23: 43 was stronger in the original language than in the English version. Affirmed, from Rev. 6: 9, that the souls under the altar were in heaven. Is going to preach next Sunday to further prove his position, and to show that words like destruction, perish, and such terms, mean something else. The sure word of prophecy is being fulfilled. The time has come that they will not endure sound doctrine; they have itching ears, have turned away their ears from the truth, and have turned unto fables.

Dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, let us all be up and doing while the day lasts. Let us be found ready when the Lord shall appear. Although we are a poor, despised company now, yet by patient continuance in well doing, we shall wear a crown of immortal glory. Our Lord will soon come in his regal beauty, with the holy angels attendant, to take the ransomed home to be with the Lord forever. "Blessed be the name of the Lord from this time forth and forevermore." Pray for me.

Yours, fighting for the kingdom.

Glencoe, Minn., May 26, '61.

P. S. If there is any brother in Minnesota, or elsewhere, that will come to defend God's truth and encourage these saints, please inform by letter when you will be to Carver, which place you can come to by boat, and we will meet you there. We are poor, but want to hear and have others hear the truth, and will pay all we can. Address W. W. Boyden, Glencoe, Minn.

From B. P. Manning.

Brother Wendell:—For the first time I seat myself to drop a line for the Crisis since you became editor. Well, I by the grace of God am striving for the Kingdom; have been traveling from place to place, and trying to stir up the brethren to diligence all that I have been able for a few months past, and I find there is a better state of things in N. H. among the brethren than I have seen for some time. I have just got home from Danbury, where the Lord has been working in mighty power, and the enemy is doing his best to to deceive the children;—but my prayer is that they will put their trust in the God that made heaven and earth. O, my dear brother, how glad I am that our Elder Brother is so soon coming to relieve his dear people. Truly, the nations are angry, and soon God's wrath will come, and the time of the dead that they will be judged, and that God will give reward to all his family. O happy day! I hail it with joy!

I would say to the dear brethren and sisters, that my health is improving some, but I desire your prayers that God will keep me in this evil time. O, what a trying time we are in. Let me exhort you to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Wickedness is on the increase. Wars and commotions throughout the world almost, but Jesus is coming soon. O, let us all be ready to hail him with joy and not with grief. Dear brethren, watch and pray always, that you may be able to stand in that day. Amen.

Goffstown, June 15.

From Bro. S. F. Leavitt.

Bro. Wendell:—The Lord has been doing a mighty work in Danbury, in spite of what men or devils could do. We have a mixed throng here; some are shouting and praising God that he has healed the sick, (so they stay healed, too, praise God) and poured out his Spirit so abundantly upon us. Some are indifferent. Others are mad. Some of the Orthodox church members, I hear, threatened to tar and feather some of the servants that God has sent here. One member shut the school-house last Sabbath, where we have been wont to meet to worship God, and said we should not have the house. But it was opened by Father Knowlton, who lives near by. Many schemes and devices of the devil are against us now, and doubtless will be while we try to serve God. Some of the gifts have come out here that Paul declared God has set in the church, and they are occupied, too. Glory to God.

A word about tobacco and I am done. There are six of us I think that have left off using it entirely, and some five or six more are about leaving off. I have used it about eighteen years until six weeks ago, when I asked God to take away the desire for it if it was wrong, which thing he did. Praise his name. We are to abstain from all filthiness of the flesh, and not defile the temple of the Lord, whose temple we are if we obey him. Now what I have to say is this: God has shown to me that it is wrong to use the weed (which Barnabas calls the weed of the devil;) it is not imagination; he has shown the same to others; and if it is wrong for me and others to chew or smoke, is it not wrong for everybody? Brethren, think of it and be wise. The Master is coming, and will translate a pure church only. Yours in hope of eternal life.

Danbury, N. H., June 1, 1861.

From E. A. W. Lake.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Cheer up. The Lord is coming soon with the prize. Let us put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. O yes, we need to stand, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, in these days of trial and temptations. O, was there ever such a time as this? Look around you and see those that profess to love our Lord and Master—and what are they doing? Are they setting a good example before the world? I think not; for I see them at the billiard table, and at the saloons offering to treat those that never knew Christ. They dress like the world, do like the world, and act like the world. It makes my heart bleed to see the cause of Christ so trampled on by cold and lukewarm professors. O, let us stand aloof from the very appearance of evil; shun the unhallowed influences which are extant in the land, and floating upon every popular breeze; and live soberly, in this present world, ever "looking for that blessed hope—the glorious appearing of our" Deliverer.

Brothers and Sisters, don't you think that we need on the whole armor in these trying times? O yes, let us gird it on, and take the sword of the Spirit, and press our way onward toward the mark of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us turn our backs to the trifling pleasures and vain allurements of this world, and, with our faces Zionward, we will boldly fight the good fight of faith, that when Jesus comes we may lay hold on eternal life. O ye desponding souls! cheer up, for our redemption draweth nigh. He that is for us, is more than they who are against us. Wherefore, lift up your heads, and rejoice to think that you are counted worthy to bear the cross of a meek and lowly Savior. O, let us not be weary in well doing, but ever stand as living witnesses to such a glorious cause, and in due time we shall reap if we faint not. Wherefore, let us earnestly strive to enter into that rest which remaineth for the people of God. Yours, striving for immortality when Jesus comes.

Mechanicsville, Ioa., May 31.

Obituary Notice.

Died, June 11th, 1861, of congestion of the brain, Catharine T. Christian, wife of Bro. John Christian of Williamsburgh, L. I., in the blessed hope of a resurrection to life at the coming of our great Life-Giver, Jesus the Messiah.

Our Sister was brought up in the Catholic Church; but over eight years ago she renounced the dogma of that faith, and in 1853 fully embraced the doctrine of the advent and life only through Christ, and having laid hold by faith on the atonement, she fully realized that she was adopted into the family of God, and could call him Father by the Holy Spirit which was given unto her, and she was enabled to rejoice in hope of the glory of God; from which time she has walked humbly with God.

Our Sister has been called to pass through a fiery ordeal. Four years ago she lost her two children by the scarlet fever, and about twelve months since she lost her sight, having been afflicted for a long time with the neuralgia. But notwithstanding this, she was enabled to attend to her domestic employment, and even made her husband two shirts, to the astonishment of all. About two weeks ago she was attacked with the billious fever, which turned to the typhus, and finally to congestion of the brain, when she lost her senses on the Friday previous to her death; but though she was unconscious to all that was passing around her, she would sing and pray as correct as if she had her senses. A Catholic woman being present on one occasion when she was praying, was astonished to hear how sensible and correct she would pray, though unconscious to all going on around her. A little before her death it appeared that her sight was partially restored to her, and looking at the window of her room, she saw a flag of the stars and stripes on a building opposite, and she exclaimed, "Ah! that flag and stripes will not wave over the kingdom of Jesus;" which kingdom she was looking for to be speedily set up under the whole heavens, and not beyond or above the skies.

The writer of the above was sent for to improve her death, which he attempted to do from the words of our Lord to Martha in John 11: 25, 26. After the discourse, our Sister was taken to the Cyprus Hill Cemetery, where she was interred, and her two little boys put into the same grave with her, to wait her appointed time until her change shall come; when the Lord shall call her forth to life, and she will exclaim, "Here am I, Lord, and the children thou gavest me." May we all follow her as far as she followed Christ.

FOREIGN NEWS.

St. Johns, N. F., June 22. The Anglo Saxon tried the Straits of Belle Isle, but there was so much field ice that she came round.

Great Britain.

The Great Eastern is expected to leave Liverpool in about a fortnight, with three Infantry regiments, a field battery of Artillery and horses for Quebec. It is admitted that this movement is suggested by the American difficulties, but it is merely for protecting, and will only raise the garrison from their present weak state to what they were ten years ago. The movement is regarded by some as an insult to the United States.

The London Times in replying to Northern indignation against England, shows what little cause England has to sympathize with the American government, and says she will assuredly not rejoice at the military success of either side.

The annual meeting of the Cotton Supply Association was held in Manchester. The result is rather discouraging. An increased effort in India and Western Africa were urged in view of the American troubles.

Mr. Gregory, the member of the British Parliament, who postponed his motion on the subject of the recognition of the Southern Confederacy, has written a long letter to the London Times, explaining why he desires the speedy recognition of the Southern Confederacy. He argues that humanity and unrestricted commerce demand this course, and contends that the North cannot hold the South in permanent subjection, and urges a peaceful separation. He believes its recognition by France and England would cause the North to pause before plunging deeper into the struggle; and concludes by disclaiming all hostility to the North, being actuated only by a love of peace.

The London Times, in an editorial upon the decision of the French Government relative to the American difficulty, which is in complete accordance with that of England, says that the fact of the chief continental powers of Europe fully acceding to the principles laid down by England, must tend to convince all reasonable Americans that in the acts of England there is neither hostility nor double dealing.

France.

The Moniteur confirms the settlement of the Syrian question on the terms already announced. It adds that order will be maintained in the mountains by recruits from the inhabitants of the country.

It is asserted that Cavour's death will hasten the recognition of Italy by France.

It is officially denied that France and Spain have signed a treaty for securing the possession of the Antilles.

Italy.

The new Italian Ministry is formed. Baron Ricasoli is President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The illness of Garibaldi is denied.

Poland.

It is stated that Warsaw is soon to be declared in a state of siege, in consequence of the representations made by the Governor of Poland.

Syria.

The Syrian question has been settled. The Conference resolved that a Christian Governor of Lebanon be appointed for three years, to be in subordination to the Porte.

China.

The Calcutta and China mails have been telegraphed. The French and British embassy are established at Pekin.

India.

The India mails reached Marseilles on the 12th. The American portion of them will go forward in the Europa.

Washington, June 25. The Post Office Department have informed the Postmaster at Philadelphia that he should disregard any stamps on letters dropped into his office, bearing the marks of express companies, where there is reason to believe they are from disloyal States. They, however, should be delivered on payment of full postage, without the cent drop. The Department adds, that the carrying of letters over established post routes, in violation of law, must be stopped.

Special Notice.

Eld. Miles Grant was appointed by the Christian Publication Society to act as Travelling Agent for the Crisis. Monies on subscription, for publications, and on account may, therefore, be paid to him and he will account to the office. Payments made in this way to Bro Grant will be acknowledged in the Crisis the same as if remitted to the undersigned.

Business Agent.

Notice.

Those going to the Wareham Grove meeting on the Fair Haven and Cape Cod Railroads will inquire for Grove meeting tickets, stop at the Tremont station. Fare is reduced to half price. Tickets from New Bedford and to return, fifty cents. Those who have them are requested to bring the Christian Lyre.

H. F. Carpenter.

Notice.

Providence permitting, there will be a Tent Meeting held at Floyd, Floyd Co., Iowa, to commence July 11th, at 8 o'clock. Eld. Moses Chandler will be present to preach the word with the New England Mission Tent. Hope to see a general gathering of the brethren from abroad.

Peter S. W. Dayo.

Herald, please copy.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be holden at West Wareham, Mass., near the Tremont Depot, upon the Fair Haven Branch R. R., to commence July 4th and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to make this a meeting of great interest. The field is comparatively a new one, but there are some warm hearts here who love the "faith of Jesus" and desire to have it published abroad. There seems to be a laudable desire to hear the "word of the Lord," and now is our time to work. We know not why it may not by the blessing of God be a large meeting. Wareham is twelve miles from Plymouth, six miles from Carver, ten from Middleboro, twelve from Mattapoisett and eighteen from New Bedford—the three last mentioned places being connected by Railroad; and we earnestly hope for a large representation, from each of these towns, of brethren and sisters who have a "mind to work" and hearts to get good. Eld. J. S. White, Eld. E. Bellows, and possibly M. Grant, are expected to preach the "word of life" at this meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all preachers and laymen who have a heart to forward the work of God to aid us in this attempt. Come one, come all—come in good cheer—come in the might of God—come early; let us celebrate the "Fourth" in Divine worship. Come to stay all the week. Provision made for man and beast. In behalf of the brethren,

H. F. Carpenter.

Grove Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be held in Dane, Dane Co., Wis., (near Bro. A. Darling's,) commencing on the 5th of July, and holding over the following Lord's day.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1 25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1 50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1 61; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. Wendell, per order of Publishing Committee.

Grove Meeting.

Eld. Miles Grant will attend a meeting of days with the church in North Stanbridge, C. E., to be held in a pleasant grove, on the land of Bro. H. N. Currie, in the Stone Settlement, to commence July 11th, at 10 A. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. A general attendance is solicited. Brethren, let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that it may prove to be for the glory of God and our good.

C. P. Dow.

Redemption Nigh.

[illegible] upward turn thine eye,
For redemption's day is nigh!
[illegible]
As a warning they're given.

[illegible] shadows cast before
[illegible]
The day-star rising in the heart,
[illegible] night will soon depart.

Hark! the trumpet's solemn sound!
Wide, wide through earth doth it resound;
The nations hasten to the strife,
The battle-field 's with slaughter rife.

Earth's kings are leading forth their host,
Each seeks to gain himself the most,
And while they madly strive for power,
They little dream 'tis their last hour.

See! yonder see! a glorious train!
A Conqueror comes! He comes to reign!
'Tis Judah's Lion, Salem's King,
Who universal peace doth bring!

Before Him earthly princes quail,
The men of might are waxing pale,
Their armies flee with awful cry—
But, oh! no refuge now is nigh.

The mighty stone that once was small,
Now makes the giant image fall:
Gold, silver, brass, iron and clay,
Like worthless chaff are blown away.

The Corner-Stone now fills the earth—
The Nazarene of lowly birth
Doth sit enthroned on David's seat,
With all his foes beneath his feet.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 2.

It would seem from the sacred history that to Abram, the man of mighty faith, it was given to have enlarged unfoldings of the divine economy, beyond what had ever before been revealed to man. A Savior had been promised, and, by shadowy type, the Atonement he was to make for sin was manifested; but the character of his kingdom, and the locale of the inheritance he was to redeem for his people, were wrapped in obscurity. In the great and important promise made to Abraham, and renewed to Isaac and Jacob, we have, as in a nutshell, the first and second advent of Christ, the line in which he would be born, and the eternal abode of himself and the heirs with him to the inheritance.

After that God defeated the ambitious schemes of the descendants of Noah, and scattered them abroad by a confusion of language, Terah, Abram's father, sojourned in the land of Haran. After his death, God appeared to Abram, and bade him leave his country, kindred, and father's house, and go into a land that he would show him, promising to make of him a great nation, and through him to bless all the families of the earth. Abram obeyed, and in company with his brother Lot, and his wife Sarai, he went forth to go into the land of Canaan. There the Lord appeared unto him again, and said, "Unto thy seed will I give this land." After a time there was a separation between Lot and Abram, the former selecting the plain of Jordan, while the latter abode in the land of Canaan. After this separation, the Lord spake again unto Abram, saying, "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, eastward and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee." And yet again the Lord appeared to Abram, and taking him forth abroad, he bade him look upon the stars, and see if he could number them, and he said unto him, "So shall thy seed be." He further said to him, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it." Abram asks, "Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" Then the Lord told him to take certain animals, and fowls, and divide them in the midst, for by these God confirmed the covenant made with Abram. The form of a covenant required the parties making it to pass between the pieces, "and it came to pass that when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace, and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces." Thus God confirmed the promise made to Abram that he and his seed should inherit all the land his eye could span, forever. He also at this time told him of the sojourn, and affliction of his seed for four hundred years, in a land that was not theirs, and in the fourth generation they would return again into the land of Canaan, and possess it, giving him the boundaries of their inheritance.

We purpose now to examine somewhat critically this covenant made with Abram. As there is no question of doubt respecting the land promised, we will pass at once to the consideration of the "seed" referred to in the language—"and to thy seed forever." We shall not consult Drs. Clark, Benson, Scott, etc., on this text, but refer to the comment of the inspired Paul, as recorded in the 3d chapter of Galatians, 16th verse: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but, as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." We have now settled the point by the authority of Paul that the expression, "And to thy seed," has direct reference to Christ. Then He is the one who, with Abraham, is to inherit the land of Canaan forever. But are these two the only ones who are included in the promise? No; for Paul tells us in the 11th of Heb. 9th verse, that "Abraham dwelt in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise." The same promise of inheritance was made to them also. By reference to Gen. 26: 2, 3, we find God making promise to Isaac that if he will sojourn in the land which he will tell him of, he will be with him and bless him, "for unto thee," says the Lord, "and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abram thy father; and I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and I will give unto thy seed all these countries, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." For proof that Jacob, too, was included in the promise, turn to Gen. 28: 13, 14. He was a wanderer to a strange land, fleeing from the wrath of an elder brother. On his way to Haran he halted for the night. Stretched on the earth, with stones for a pillow, he had a vision, and saw angels ascending and descending on a ladder between the earth and heaven. Above it he beheld the Lord God, who thus addressed him:—"I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the east, and to the west, and to the north, and to the south; and in thee, and in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

In this grand central promise, first given to Abram, then to Isaac, and lastly to Jacob, we find in each the same specifications. Abraham is promised the land. "To thee will I give it." Isaac is promised the land. "Unto thee will I give all these countries." Jacob is promised the land. "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it." Their seed also is included. "And to thy seed." The blessing that shall flow through their seed will be universal, embracing all the nations and families of the earth. Their seed shall be as the stars of heaven, dust of the earth, and sand upon the sea shore for multitude. All of these specifications are included in the promise made to Abram, Isaac and Jacob.

Too much Bible.

I have just been reading a critical account of the noted old Sinaitic manuscript, lately found by Tischendorf at Mount Sinai, among the monks of the Greek church, and find it confirms the report that the last twelve verses of Mark's Gospel are an interpolation. The account is in the American Theological Review for April, 1861—a quarterly published in New York, Boston and Philadelphia. On page 370 it says: "The Gospel of Mark ends with the 8th verse of the 16th chapter, cancelling or ignoring the twelve verses which follow in our revised text." It also says: "Codex B. (another one of the oldest manuscripts) leaves these verses out." Sawyer, in his able translation of the New Testament, which most of us have seen, says these twelve verses are "an addition by an unknown writer."

Bro. C. F. Hudson, being with me on a visit, gives me the following statement:—

"Tischendorf is doubtless the most able critical editor of the New Testament. On the passage in Mark 16: 9–20 he remarks: 'That these words were not written by Mark is proven by sufficient arguments. 1. They are omitted in the Vatican and Turin MSS.—the latter giving a few other words in their stead; also by the Venice copies of the Armenian version and the Vatican copy of the Arabic. Other MSS. note the passage with an asterisk, as doubtful. 2. The Paris manuscript (L) attests that those more ancient had very different words, etc. 3. The notes (Scholia) of very many copies show that Mark's Gospel ended, in the more ancient (and more accurate) copies, with the 9th verse. Which is confirmed by Eusebius and Jerome, besides other authorities. 4. The passage is not recognized in the sections of Ammonius, nor in the canons of Eusebius. Epiphanius and Cæsarius also give their testimony to this fact.'

Tischendorf gives also other arguments, and the authorities that support the received text. The English reader may know little or nothing of the value of the authorities on either side. But the above is sufficient to show that the passage cannot be claimed as inspired. The Vatican MS., mentioned above, was the oldest known when Tischendorf stated the argument. And he is supported by the Sinaitic MS., which is of still older date."

Bro. Hudson also gives me the following from Alford's Greek Testament:—

"Alford concludes thus: 'The internal evidence, which is discussed in the notes, will be found to preponderate vastly against the authorship of Mark. I have therefore considered it safest, on the whole, to note by different type the distinction between this passage and the gospel itself.'"

From such decided proof I conclude we may say with propriety we have too much Bible in our version. I notice these facts to elicit the attention of brethren who hold baptism to be essential to salvation. Mark 16: 16, one of these twelve verses, is much the strongest text from which to infer that doctrine. For forty years I have wondered why the Savior, in this text, should seem to contradict all he taught elsewhere as to the way of obtaining eternal life. No other evangelist, as any one can see, in giving the great commission, intimates what seems to be intimated in this verse. The sum and substance of Christ's and the apostles' teaching on this subject is seen in John 3: 16,—"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And in Luke 24: 47,—"That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Here we see Christ's last commission.

The Baptists, in their long controversy with Pedo-Baptists, have proved from church history that when the church began to be corrupted, it made baptism essential to salvation, and this was what led to infant sprinkling; and it looks to me as if these twelve verses were then added, and have been retained by the Catholic and Episcopal churches to sustain their creeds, which teach baptismal regeneration. A like addition was made of 1 John 5: 7, to sustain their views of the Trinity. I see this old MS. leaves out this verse, and also alters 1 Tim. 3: 16, so as to read "who was manifested in the flesh," instead of "God was manifested," etc. The Lord hasten the time when we shall have a pure version and a purer translation of the "Precious Bible, book divine."

In learning the tenor of the Bible as to how we are to become the children of God, or what gives a good hope, a wise man will not of course overlook such texts as tell of doing the commands, as well as hearing them. Matt. 7: 24. But those texts are harmonized by another class, such as John 14: 23,—"If a man love me, he will keep my words." This text, and many others like it, settle the question that if one really believes, repents, and is converted, he will strive to obey, and will obey the word as he understands it; but through ignorance he may err, as all do more or less. David said, "I have seen an end of all perfection; thy commandment is exceeding broad." Ps. 119: 96. Yet David was a saint, and saved, as all must be, "by grace, through faith." Eph. 2: 8. It should be noticed, too, that the many texts which urge upon saints the keeping of commands, do not select one duty, such as baptism, or keeping the seventh day, etc., and call that obeying the word. I entreat those who often tell of faith and obedience as essential to salvation, to notice this fact.

My spirits have been much depressed, for five or six years, by hearing doctrines advanced by some which appear to me to impair or undermine the very foundation of God's plan for saving sinners. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" Ps. 11: 3. Is it not possible for all christians to obtain a clear view of the difference between what is essential to make a child of God, and what is essential to become a faithful and obedient child in all points? The last is a progressive work, called "sanctification," "overcoming temptations," "growing in knowledge," etc., while the first is called the "renewing of the Spirit," "quickening," "pardoning," and is represented as God's work, which needs no long process, as we see in the case of the thief on the cross.

Fifty-one years ago I was immersed, not to obtain a good hope, nor to make myself a child of God, but because I had evidence that I was a child,—by having for three months loved and praised my God, and "believing, rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory,"—feeling his pardoning mercy, and that I had been made "a new creature" by God's power in answer to prayer persevered in for many months. And finding I loved all of God's laws, and had a strong desire to be an obedient child, I was baptized, because I learned from the Bible that this was one of the duties of God's children. Christ says in John 14: 15—"If ye love me, keep my commandments." Can we keep any of God's commands acceptably till we do love him? See 1 Cor. 13: 5. "Unto the wicked God saith, 'What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth?'" Ps. 50: 16. These are points that ought to be preached on among us more, and some other subjects less.

I throw out the above facts as to interpolations, and a few suggestions as to doctrines, hoping that others more capable, and having more time, will write, through our papers, or by tracts and books, and "make the vision plain, that he may run that readeth it."—Hab. 2: 2.

Take Advice.

Of all the miserable mortals who make trouble for others and torment for themselves, deliver me from those who are too wise to take advice.

The boy who knows more about the world that he has never seen, and the city he has never lived in, than father, mother, or than any smart, wide-awake businessman,—he doesn't need advice. He can take care of himself.

The dunce who goes to law to get justice done—who determines to have his rights—who pays a lawyer fifty dollars to collect five that were due him,—he finds out that wisdom comes dearer when bought at first hand than when taken second-handed as a gift.

The silly girl who gets up a sly flirtation with some one who has magnetized her and befooled her—who puts on all the demureness of prudery, and listens to advice with the fullest tokens of assenting to it all, and then slips away somewhere to feed on the [illegible] of an "admirer," and to cultivate acquaintances and familiarities that she would not tell her father, or mother, or best friends of for the world,—she can take care of herself. O yes, no doubt she can; but if she does not lay up a very respectable stock of repentance and bitterness for coming days, then I am a much mistaken man.

The ambitious young lady, who studies all day and reads all night,—who wears paper-soled shoes, and who dresses so tight that she couldn't draw a deep breath to save her soul from ruin,—she knows she can take care of herself; yes, for awhile, and then the doctor and the undertaker finish the job.

The invalid who can do two day's work to-day and be sick a month after it,—who isn't afraid of taking cold,—who isn't a bit sick,—who will smash on in spite of all admonition;—such an one generally has sense enough in their last hours to say, "I wish I had heard to what you said."

A very safe rule for such persons is this: Do you admit that your adviser is older, more experienced, wiser on the whole, than you are—having seen more persons live and more persons die than you? Then you are bound to pay respectful heed to such an one's advice, and see that you choose your course in accordance with the dictates of God's word, conscience, calm reason and common sense.

Love's Labor's Light.

Light is Love's labor,—this we know;
Sweetner of toil on all below,
On us thine influence bestow.
Love's labor's light.

"The yoke is easy and the burden light"
To toil for those we love by day or night;
E'en Eden's curse is robbed of half its blight.
Love's labor's light.

The soldier's toil is nothing to him now,
Love of his country glowing on his brow,
Nerves him to meet the contest with the foe.
Love's labor's light.

We have a friend at God's right hand above,
He claims our service, and his name is "Love,"
A willing heart he gives and will approve.
Love's labor's light.

Let me then work for Him who died for me,—
"Eternal life" he gives, so rich and free!
Use me, oh Lord, as best it pleaseth thee.
Love's labor's light.

"As Ye have received Christ, so walk Ye in Him."

This language is not often addressed to the young convert. It is spoken to those who have gone astray. Now it seems to me that about one half who are received into church fellowship have never received Christ. They have not an understanding of him, and, like one of old, think to obtain his Spirit by purchase. They put in a penny every time the collection box passes, and pay their pew rent besides, and as a consequence expect the Spirit to abide with them.

Multitudes have come forward for baptism. They wished to "put on Christ." But they had "zeal not according to wisdom." They have considered no change on their part necessary, except that of attending church a little more regular. I remember, up among the icy hills of my native land, of seeing a female come forward as a candidate for immersion. She stood by the river side in a dress worn in the ball room but one week previous. That same pair of ear-jewels, that same sparkling broach, that same company of finger rings, those very curls that the brawny barber had twisted, still hung defying the bleak winds of Canada. And an Elder from New England received her as a "worthy, intelligent young convert." Poor child! she was ignorant, not blameable. But where rests the blame? Ah! that servant of God had failed to represent Christ in his true character. He ought to have referred her to something that Paul said about the wearing of gold. He knew Christ was never received in such an ornamental manner. He knew the cause of Christ, if not the words of God, would not admit of such a course.

The sister made no change in dress, and deemed it needless to change in action. So she never grew, but ever remained weak. But soon the old habit of dancing tempted her. She took part of the same suit she wore at her baptism, and again entered the ball room. I asked why she had gone back to the world. Because she found no peace nor joy in the church. The reason was, she had been neglected. She was ignorantly added to the church, and as ignorantly left it to seek peace. Now she is mad with the bewitchings of SPIRITUALISM. So seeks peace. No one has learned her the first step toward obtaining peace.

Thus it terminates whenever ministers sanction these "little sins." They destroy souls. They keep them in eternal infancy. They grow to be great sins, and drag ignorant ones downward. A man may preach till all the dancers in his presence come forward for baptism, but unless they know Christ, how can they walk as Christ walked? Let them be enlightened. Give them [illegible] before water. Learn them Christ before creeds. Make them saints before sisters. Learn them truth before poetry. Get them baptized by the Spirit first, then by water. And the servant of Christ needs to be faithful in this respect. When persons of this kind present themselves for admission to the church, let him question them. Let him "preach to them Jesus." Let him rebuke their folly. Let him be true to his calling. Nothing can excuse the negligent. Is the minister young? Then let him begin in youth to rebuke sin. Let him learn to build on the foundation, then there will safety. Where there is safety there is peace. Let him not build up churches that cannot stand alone one month. Remember to esteem the quality above the quantity. Be not over anxious to catch at every butterfly that passes. We want men in the ranks of religion. We want women who know the way and have strength and inclination to go in the way of righteousness. Then shall Zion shine. Then shall something be done in the land for sinners. Then shall Christ be honored by his followers when they learn of him, and know how to receive him. Then can they walk in him as they received him. Then shall the lullaby songs of Zion cease. Then shall christian babies grow up to be "men and women in Christ Jesus."

Let the day come! Let our churches hasten the day. Let the prattling of children be hushed and the sound of common sense at last be heard. Let the toys that have pleased the "children of Zion" be thrown away forever, and the useful things of God be introduced. Let the sword and shield and helmet of salvation take their place. Then will God pour us out a rich blessing. Then shall he cause us no longer to abstain from "meat," but will feed us on the richest food of heaven. May God bless his servants with boldness, and cause their work not to be vain in the Lord. May their houses stand when the winds and waters of eternal doom shall sweep over the land. Amen.

Selections.

Mighty in the Scriptures.

This was high praise for Apollos. It described an element of success with him, quite as important as his eloquence already mentioned. He was thoroughly acquainted with the Scriptures as then existing. He was familiar with them, as an old soldier with his trusty weapons. He knew their stores of argument, illustration and appeal, and could draw them forth and wield them as the occasion demanded. His mind was familiar with the whole range of Messianic prophecies, which had just found their remarkable verification in the person and work of Christ. The common arguments and cavils of opposing Jews and Gentiles were equally familiar to him, and from the same Scriptures he drew his skilful and effective refutations of them. With a well-stored memory and a good judgment, supplying him with apt quotations, and an insight into the relations of Scripture, enabling him to compare spiritual things with spiritual, and to give to single truths the great advantage of comparison with other truths, his discourse had the dignity, the weight, the authority, almost, of inspiration itself. He was mighty in the Scriptures.

It is a distinction to be coveted by every minister of the gospel. Too many of us are ambitious only of the first-named quality of Apollos—eloquence. It is, indeed, a most important attribute of every one whose business is with the multitude. But it is quite as important, and far more worthy of a christian minister's ambition, to be mighty in the Scriptures. One can scarcely be this, without being eloquent also. Familiarity with the Divine Word is familiarity with the very source of eloquence. He who seeks power in the pulpit chiefly by the development of his own oratorical gifts, by the culture of style and by the play of the imagination, even in the sphere of religious truth, commits a professional blunder as well as a sin. He substitutes the enticing words of man's wisdom for that method of preaching which is in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. That preacher is most mighty who is mighty in the Scriptures.

The faithful, close, scholarly, as well as prayerful study of the Scriptures, should form a part of the every day life of every minister of the gospel. He should not only read the Bible as a matter of devotion, but he should study it in the spirit of an exegete. The investigations begun in his seminary course should never be laid aside. With every auxiliary in his reach, he should endeavor to acquaint himself with the true mind of the Spirit in his inspired word. Not as a mere narrow dogmatist, searching the Scriptures for single proof-texts on which, irrespective of their connexions, to build his precise and artificial structure of opinion; but with comprehensive views, taking into consideration the times, the circumstances, the connexions, let him seek to acquaint himself with the Scriptures as such, with the writers and the books as such.

It is surprising and painful to notice how little attention, in handling Scripture, is paid to the connexion of passages. That tact in interpretation, which arises, in great part, from a conscientious regard to every point in the context, or known circumstances of the writer, which can throw light upon the subject, is, we fear, a rare professional quality. Preachers seize upon a passage which, from some striking verbal quality, becomes a good motto, and then go off into a sermon which may be very eloquent and very grand, but which betrays an utter recklessness of the sacred writer's purpose in penning it, and which is mighty in anything but the Scriptures. A text, doubtless, may be made to serve as a motto, but care should be taken not to make it responsible for the preacher's independent utterances. The truth is, the preacher's utterances ought not to be independent of Scripture at all. Our ambition, as preachers, should be to be increasingly Scriptural in the whole spirit of our instructions to our flocks.

A skilful Scriptural preacher will be the most interesting preacher. Frequently nothing opens up a subject more richly for purposes of sermonizing than the careful study of the context. The inspired plan of thought of which the text forms the central idea, is the very one around which the energies of the preacher and the interest of the people will most readily and profitably gather. And for effective illustrations of the truths handled in the pulpit, the Bible is unrivalled. Indeed, large portions of it were put on record for this very purpose. Now all these things happened unto them for examples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Even the best proofs of the divine authority of the Scriptures are found in the fulfilled prophecy, the sublime precepts and the delineations of a perfect life they contain. The true offensive weapon of the christian minister, as of the christian soldier, is the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God,—a weapon quick and powerful, sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Woe to the preacher who suffers it to rest in its scabbard, while he flourishes his showy weapon, fabricated in the schools of men!

For one more, and a very serious reason, should the preacher of our day be mighty in the Scriptures. It is a time when men, speaking and writing in the English tongue, have become mighty against the Scriptures. It once could be charged against infidel writers that they were densely ignorant of the object of their attack. They wrote from a blind and wicked prejudice. That day is gone by. It has passed long ago in Germany; and now, after some delay, it is passed with writers against miracles, in the English tongue. A school of infidels has arisen within the pale of the Church of England, who have applied themselves more earnestly to the study of the originals of our Scriptures, perhaps, than any race of English theologians before them. We must be prepared for them. Our enemies must not know more of our cause than we do ourselves. Duty to our endangered flocks requires us to return from any mere quest after rhetorical power, and to apply ourselves to attaining a mere expository style,—to becoming, if possible, mighty in the Scriptures.—*Amer. Anecdote of Dr. Hooker.

The right kind of non-resistance.

J. S. W.

Anecdote from the "History of New England," by Lambert Lilly.

"Dr. Hooker* was universally respected for his excellent qualities. He was remarkable, among other things, for his mildness. A story, illustrating this trait in his character, is still preserved.

It is said that he was once suddenly awakened, in the night time, by an unusual noise in the cellar of his house. He suspected that some person had crept in without leave, and immediately arose, dressed himself, and went silently to the foot of the cellar stairs. There he saw a man, with a candle in his hand, taking pork out of a barrel.

Mr. Hooker stood still, and looked on till he had taken out the last piece. He then stepped towards him, and accosted him in perfectly good humor. 'Neighbor,' said he, 'you act unfairly; you ought to leave a proper share for me.'

Thunderstruck at being detected, and especially by a man of Mr. Hooker's character, the culprit fell at his feet, condemned himself for his crime, and implored his pardon. Mr. Hooker cheerfully forgave him. He, however, seriously admonished him for his fault, and then made him carry half the pork to his own house.

Query. If all ministers should preach and practice such conduct toward enemies, how long would it be ere vice and crime would recede, and the God-like principles of peace and love prevail?"

* Dr. Hooker was a clergyman among the early New Haven Colonists.

Scolding Clergymen.

The effect of asperity in a clergyman is well illustrated in the following story, the scene of which was laid in the State of "steady habits," and the events of which transpired there several years since. Two clergymen were settled in their youth in contiguous parishes. The congregation of the one had become very much broken and scattered, while that of the other remained large and strong. At a ministerial gathering, (both of these pastors being D.D.'s) Dr. A. said to Dr. B., "Brother, how has it happened that, while I have labored as diligently as you have, and preached better sermons, and more of them, my parish has been scattered to the winds, and yours remains strong and unbroken?" Dr. B. facetiously replied, "Oh, I'll tell you, brother. When you go fishing, you first get a great rough pole for a handle, to which you attach a large cod-line and a great hook, and twice as much bait as the fish can swallow. With these accoutrements you dash up to the brook, and throw in your hook, with—'There, bite, you dogs.' Thus you scare away all the fish. When I go fishing, I get a little switching pole, a small line, and just such a hook and bait as the fish can swallow. Then I creep up to the brook and gently slip them in, and I twitch 'em out, twitch 'em out, till my basket is full."—Cornell's "How to Enjoy Life."

The Cost of an Estate.

"What is the value of this estate?" said a gentleman to another with whom he was riding, as they passed a fine mansion, and through rich fields.

"I don't know what it is valued at; I know what it cost its late possessor."

"How much?"

"His soul!"

A solemn pause followed this brief answer. The person to whom it was given was not seeking first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.

The late possessor referred to was the son of a pious man, who supported his family by the labor of his hands. The son early obtained a subordinate position in a mercantile establishment in the city. He was then a professor of religion. He continued to maintain a reputable profession till he became a partner in the concern. He then gave increasing attention to business and less to religion. Ere he was an old man he had become exceedingly wealthy and miserly, and no one who knew him, had any suspicion that he had ever been a professor of religion. He purchased a large landed estate, built the costly mansion referred to above, and died. Just before he died, he said, "My prosperity has been my ruin."

☞ We must give up all before we can rightly and truly possess anything.

Troublesome Children.

When you get tired of their noise, just think what the change would be should it come to a total silence. Nature makes a provision for strengthening the children's lungs by exercise. Babies cannot laugh so as to get much exercise in this way, but we never heard of one that could not cry. Crying, shouting, screaming, are nature's lung exercise, and if you do not wish for it in the parlor, pray have a place devoted to it, and do not debar the girls from it, with the notion that it is improper for them to laugh, jump, cry, scream, and run races in the open air. After a while one gets used to this juvenile music, and can even write and think more consecutively with it than without it, provided it does not run into objurgatory forms. We remember a boy that used to go to school past our study window, and he generally made a continuous stream of roar to the school-house and back again. We supposed at first he had been nearly murdered by some one, and had wasted considerable compassion on the wrongs of infant innocence; but, on inquiring into his case, found him in perfectly good condition. The truth was, that the poor little fellow had no mirthfulness in his composition, therefore couldn't laugh and shout, and so nature, in her wise compensations, had given him more largely the faculty of roaring. He seemed to thrive upon it, and we believe is still doing well. Laughing and hallooing, however, are to be preferred, unless a child shows a decided incapacity for those exercises.

Our eye alights just now upon the following touching little scrap, written by an English laborer, whose child had been killed by the falling of a beam:

"Sweet, laughing child! the cottage door
Stands free and open now;
But oh! its sunshine gilds no more
The gladness of thy brow!
Thy merry step hath passed away,
Thy laughing sport is hushed for aye.

Thy mother by the fireside sits
And listens for thy call;
And slowly,—slowly as she knits,
Her quiet tears down fall;
Her little hindering thing is gone,
And undisturbed she may work on."

—Religious Magazine.

"Ready for Either."

An efficient Missionary Association is said to have adopted, not long since, a device found on an ancient medal, which represents a bullock standing between a plough and an altar, with the inscription "Ready for either,—ready for toil or for sacrifice."

The whole history of christianity has proved that its great objects cannot be secured without both the toil and the sacrifice. Says the Apostle, "I fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church." In the agony of the atoning sacrifice, Jesus had no sharers. Of the people there were none with him. But he has left, unexhausted, enough of the bitter cup of his previous toils and trials to remind his followers, amid their great work, what their salvation cost him. A readiness for hard work on the one hand, and for sacrifices on the other, can alone evince, not only our attachment to his cause, but also our love to him. O, christian, let the love of Christ constrain you to fidelity in his service. Bring all your talents, your acquisitions, your energies, and, binding yourself to the horns of the altar, there stand, ready either for work or for sacrifice. This is the Spirit which, under God, will conquer the world. This is the consecration at which heaven rejoices, and hell trembles. Whatever it be, labor or suffering, doing or giving, living or dying, to which you are summoned, be ever able to say, "ready for either."—Tract Journal.

RARE PRAISE.—"My son is now twenty-five years old," said a mother to her friend, at the same time wiping tears of gratitude from her face, "and he has always remembered what I taught him in his childhood. He has been a good boy. He has never brought a tear to his mother's eye."

Boys, of how many of you can your mothers say the same? And if any of you feel that it could not with truth be said, who will resolve to-day—"From this time I will do nothing which shall bring tears to my mother's eyes?"—Child at Home.

CHILDREN AND PARENTS.—"Let all children remember," says Dr. Dwight, "if ever they are weary of laboring for their parents, that Christ labored for his; if impatient of their commands, that Christ cheerfully obeyed; if reluctant to provide for their parents, that Christ forgot himself and provided for his mother amid the agonies of the crucifixion. The affectionate language of this divine example to every child is, 'Go thou and do likewise.'"

☞ They that laugh at every thing, and they that fret at every thing, are fools alike.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$[illegible]
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All persons desiring to receive the Crisis, or any of the Publications on sale at this office, should always state distinctly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed, and direct their communications and remittances to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be [illegible] cents a year to any part of [illegible], and [illegible] cents to any other part of the United States.

Our Savior.

A manger was his cradle bed,
No downy pillow 'neath his head,
No costly robes his form o'erspread,—
The babe of Bethlehem.

Of this world's wealth he owned no share,
To lay his head he had not where,
A man of sorrow, toil and care,—
Jesus of Nazareth.

He here proclaimed redemption's plan,
God's wondrous love to fallen man,
And bid us watch he'd come again,—
God's well beloved Son.

For such unworthy worms as we,
He groaned and died on Calvary!
He spilled his blood to make us free,—
The blessed Lamb of God.

He's now ascended to prepare,
And soon will bring a city fair,
That we may here his glory share.

For the Crisis.

"Prepare to meet thy God!"

But a few more transient hours of pleasure,—a few more days of pain and sorrow will pass over your head, e'er the mighty trump of God will resound throughout earth's vast domain, proclaiming to thy trembling soul that time shall be no more: proclaiming that there is no more a mediator between the sinner and his God! that the door of mercy is forever closed! that for him who has disregarded the earnest and oft-repeated pleadings of the holy Spirit,—who has neglected to make his peace with God,—there is now no hope! The righteous will be righteous still, but the unjust must forever remain unjustified.

Then that same Jesus who once suffered sneers and scorn, unutterable tortures, and even a shameful death, for your ransom; whose gentle pleadings for your acceptance of his salvation freely offered, you now daily resist; whose innumerable blessings you continually receive with utter unthankfulness,—that same Jesus will then descend to dash in pieces all earthly power; to claim the kingdom as his own; to judge the living and the dead. All must assemble to hear their destiny from the lips of that all-wise Judge. To those who have laid their all at the foot of the cross; who have meekly followed in the footsteps of their Redeemer; who have disregarded the vain pomp and honor of this world, choosing rather to suffer persecution for His sake than to enjoy the fruits of sin for a season, this will be a joyful time. When they hear the joyful summons, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, ye have been faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many," the sorrows of this life will be all forgotten. Before them lies an eternal life of uninterrupted happiness. Without pain, without sorrow, without temptation, they will forever live in the light of God's glory; forever bask in the sunlight of his approving smile.

But to those who seek after the transient glory, honor and wealth of this world; to those who blaspheme God's holy name and ordinances; those who trample upon and defraud the poor and weak of this world; those who say in their hearts, "My Lord delayeth his coming; we have much wealth and honor here, let us eat, drink and be merry;" to those who live on regardless of the Omnipotent hand which supplies them with all needed blessings,—the awful grandeur of that hour will bring the darkest despair. No wealth of this world can bribe that all-wise Judge! No worldly honor or fame will count to their credit then! No gorgeous apparel or bland address will hide their hypocrisy there! No! The sins of the ungodly will there glare forth in all their disgusting forms. They must receive from the lips of Him whom they have so long refused to confess before men, [illegible] distance, will burst upon your astonished vision. Make ready, then! Prepare to meet thy God! Make not a fashionable display of religion by following after the popular churches of the day. Follow not the example of those who love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and for a pretence make long prayers. Seek not in the popular sermons of the day, framed to suit the wealthy and influential members of the church, for God's truth;—seek it not in human creeds, but in God's holy word. Read your Bible for yourself: ask God to quicken your understandings, that you may see clearly the way there pointed out. Seek not worldly wealth, but to lay up a little treasure in heaven, where none can take it from thee. Seek not to deck thyself with jewels and costly apparel, but to clothe thyself with meekness and sobriety. Seek not honor from men, but from God. Prepare to meet thy God in peace, "for yet a little while, and he that is to come will come and will not tarry."

A Happy Experience.

BRO. WENDELL:—I send an extract from the "Christian Freeman," on Experience, hoping it may agree with the feelings of many brethren, and comfort them as it does myself. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people."

J. BLAIN.

. . . . "I fear, however, that the account I have given of my experience in things divine, may give your mind an improper bias as to my views of myself, and the relation I sustain to my Savior. I am not exalted in my feelings. My unworthiness and sinfulness are also a part of my christian experience. Never does there pass a week, and but seldom a day, that I am not obliged to confess my sins to God, and pray for forgiveness. My life is, in a great measure, a life of penitence, and the best I can say for myself is, that, in my case, the grace of God abounds to a poor sinner. O, how I thank God for the mediation of my dear Savior. It is by him that I have "access into the grace wherein I stand." To be clothed upon with his righteousness, is my hope in the last day. I have none of my own, so far as merit is concerned. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more,"—and, "blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered," are precious portions of the word of God to me. They indicate that, if I am saved, it will not be by my own righteousness; but that all my sins will be concealed from God the Father by "THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." My hope, then, is in the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ my Lord. Here I stand, brother, and it will take more argument than is usual, to explain the doctrine of justification to a guilty sinner in any other way, before I can be removed from this position.

I am much pleased with your remarks on "the life of faith." I thank God there is life in faith, or rather, that faith is the medium through which the blessed God pours the holy Spirit into the hearts of his children. "The life that I now live, I live by the faith of Jesus Christ," is of more importance to us than all things else. The union between Christ and a true believer is of such a nature that theory is made the guide, not the reality, to the things of conscious realization of Christ in the soul. When we enjoy the presence of the Lord in the soul, the faith that has led us to this blessed consummation, becomes trust—a living, conscious trust in all that Christ has promised,—a trust so strong, that all doubt of our acceptance with God is removed. Our consciousness is completely filled with trust, and we could as soon doubt our being, as to doubt the new life of which we are now the subjects. I therefore bless God for a living faith, in the living God." Amen.

Buffalo, June 26, 1861.

For the Crisis.

"The Coming Struggle."

BRO. WENDELL:—I take my pen to call the attention of the readers of the Crisis to the articles just closed entitled "The Coming Struggle." Those who have not read the entire series, will get a very good idea of the subject by reading the "conclusion," or recapitulation in the two last articles. Allow me to say I consider "the order of development," in the 12th No., a prophetic programme of coming events, with but little exception. My attention was called to this prophecy some ten years ago, and I then gave what light I had on the subject to the church, through the "Advent Watchman." The development of Spiritualism, as it has appeared, have confirmed the position I then took, that the [illegible] first place, we to speak like a dragon in the end: that Spiritualism was destined to fill that mould of prophecy. There never have been any other claims to the fulfillment of this prophecy (and I believe I have seen a dozen) but have signally failed in the most important point of identification, viz., miracles! I noticed that they were not pretended miracles, such as the papal priesthood deceived its blind votaries with during the dark ages; but miracles he had power to do in the sight of the Beast,—miracles so very likely to deceive that it needed the special warning of the Savior, who said, "if it were possible they would deceive the very elect." But they will not now, for he has kindly warned us of it: "Behold, I have told you before."

We now wait their union with the papal power, which would sway the destinies of this or any of the European nations. I am of the opinion that America is to be the theatre of its first political movement. I cannot think this great country is entirely left out of the prophetic vision. The seven last plagues are demonstrated to be in the future from the fact—1st, That "in them is filled up the wrath of God," and also that the angels do not receive their commission to pour them out till the temple is opened in heaven, which event does not occur till the sounding of the seventh trumpet. See Rev. 15: 6, and onward; also 9: 19. The second verse of the 15th chapter on to the fifth should be read in a parenthesis, which is apparent, for the saints are not delivered till the sixth vial is poured out. Rev. 16: 15.

Do not be deterred, brother, from examining this subject by the cry, You are saying "my Lord delayeth his coming." Remember, we are living in a time when, in the words of another, "the work of centuries is being crowded into days." He will not delay his coming, but he cannot come till all things written have had their fulfillment. Blessed is he that watcheth—watches for the fulfillment of his word. I would also direct special attention to an article in the Crisis of May 8th, entitled, "Revival Intelligence," taken from the London Wesleyan Times. The residue of the Spirit is with the Lord: our bodies are its earthly temple set apart and cleansed. He will delight to fill them, if we ask in faith. We shall need it amid the perils of coming events. Those commissioned to give the last notes of warning against these delusions will need it that they may do it with that boldness implied by "a loud voice." Rev. 14: 9. When the Lord comes, he will find a sealed people,—sealed with the holy Spirit. This baptism, being filled, sealed, etc., means a vast deal more than the simple "witness of the Spirit" spoken of in the 8th of Romans. Search and see. More anon.

Palmer, May 21, 1861.

For the Crisis.

May 19th, 1780.

I notice in the Crisis of June 19th a brother makes the inquiry whether "the 19th of May, 1780, was the date of the darkening of the sun of Scripture?" and says he "is aware that he shall be charged by some with taking away a landmark, or lighthouse of our faith." No, brother; I hardly think you will be thus charged, for it does not appear that your queries and remarks relative to the various texts concerning the darkening of the sun, nor your quotations from history respecting the various dark days which have occurred in all the world, changes the lighthouse, or removes the basis or landmark of our faith. It is right and well to thoroughly investigate such a point, and for each to give his opinion, and for us all to know that there have been dark days besides the one of 1780. But when we find in our lesson that Jesus tells us, for our especial information, as an omen of the nearness of his second Advent, that "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light," it becomes us to try to learn which of the various days did Jesus mean we should recognize as the fulfillment of this prophecy,—or, whether he really meant, literally, the sun, or, metaphorically, some thing else. As we look at the record of Luke on the subject, we find him recording that "there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity." Luke 21: 25. This settles the fact that Jesus intended the heavenly luminaries, for he descends from the sun, moon and stars, to the earth as another locality in which other events were to be looked for: "and upon earth distress of nations," etc. This settled, we are to ascertain if there are other points to show relation to other events, in successive order, or chronological order. [illegible] tribulation of those days." Matt. 24: 29. Mark records it, "in those days after that tribulation." Here a space of time in the gospel dispensation is given in which the sun shall be darkened. Then there is a "great tribulation" to be experienced in that time, and the sun is to be darkened immediately after this tribulation. This locates the time for it to be done. Now we think it is a fact susceptible of the fullest proof that this tribulation was that of the Church under the tyranny of Papacy, which was stayed towards the close of the 18th century. The darkening of the sun came (May 19th, 1780) "immediately after," and the moon, at the full, was also darkened this side of that. Then the stars began their showers 1799, for the first time, to gain notice, (as far as I have yet learned,) and have been frequent since. In all this there is a chronological connection which it seems difficult to reject. Then it is shown in the history that the dark day of May 19th, 1780, was very much more noted, and produced much greater consternation than any other. Neither Webster nor any other writer has assigned a reasonable cause, even to their own mind, for this dark day, though they conjecture causes.

The supposition that, to constitute the sign, or fulfillment of Christ's prediction, it should be over the whole earth, does not recognize God's manner of giving warning. For in the history of his giving signs to his church, we find them given locally, and then promulgated to others by messengers. As in the cases of the star seen by the shepherds; the voice of one crying in the wilderness; the holy Spirit descending upon Christ at his baptism; the voice of God announcing Jesus as his Son; the transfiguration of Christ on the Mount, to demonstrate the character of his kingdom; the miraculous gift of the holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost;—all these, and others, were local, while they were all intended to be for the benefit of the church every where. So it was to be preached by those who saw, for the faith of others who did not see.

As for the generation of seventy years, that "shall not pass away," I do not see as we are bound to believe that those who lived and saw the sun darkened must be the ones to live to see Jesus come. It seems to refer to the generation who live when all these events mentioned to precede Christ's coming, have occurred, who shall not pass away until he comes. In my treatise on Matt. 24th and 25th, for sale at the Crisis office, may be found a large collection of historical facts on this matter, of service to those who have not seen them.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Richmond, Me., June 24, 1861.

For the Crisis.

A Walk among the Tombs.

It is good for the believer of God's word to visit the dead, and there meditate upon the great plan of redemption, which is, in every respect, worthy of its divine Author. Being in a neighboring town recently, and having a little time to spare, I wandered away into a grave yard to look at the resting place of the sleeping ones, and to read the inscriptions on the monuments erected in memory of those endeared by so many ties of affection. For my own benefit I copied a few of the inscriptions, which I will here write down for the perusal and meditation of the readers of the Crisis. It may do some good to you all, especially if you let the difference between truth and error lead you to grasp and prize the truth more than ever.

Here is one of the inscriptions:

"Though with grief our hearts are riven,
He has faded from earth to bloom in heaven."

The idea that our beloved ones that are dead, have "faded" and are "blooming in heaven," is the common view of these times, I know, but how one can thus believe who reads that they are "in the land of darkness," is more than I can see through.

Another:

"'Tis finished, the conflict is past,
The heaven-born spirit has fled;
Her wish is accomplished at last,
And now she's entombed with the dead."

It is somewhat difficult to get at the sentiment intended to be conveyed in the above. That life is "finished" and the "conflict" in dying "is past" none doubt,—but did she wish to die and be entombed with the dead? Such is the reading of the last two lines, which, no doubt, is right the opposite of her wish, which was to ascend in spirit to heaven. It is good, however, to find the last line so truthful.

No. 3.

"Lo, where this silent marble weeps,
A Friend, a Husband and a Father sleeps."

This is cheering, truly, for death is a "sleep," as saith the Scripture.

No. 4.

[illegible]

Can this be so? Are we born to be angels when we die? Where, O where, is there a "thus saith the Lord" for such an idea? Echo answers, "Where?" And yet such is the theory of these last times. How strikingly in contrast is such an inscription to the following—No. 5:

"Our journey's done. Securely laid
In this our last resort, we rest
Till with the saints by Jesus bid,
We rise to be forever blest."

Amen I can say to this, and, wearied with the monstrous sentiment of No. 4, I thankfully take breath over this last refreshing inscription. It is so truthful and so scriptural. Yes, this gives the glory of a future life to Jesus—the former, to the King of terrors, "Death." But here is another:

"Yes, I shall miss thee, dearest wife,
And o'er thy grave I oft shall weep,
Till death shall end this mortal life,
And by thy side I too shall sleep."

Such an inscription not only presents the sorrow of a husband's lone heart, but also his faith that death is not conscious. How different is No. 7.

"Weep not for me that I am gone,
For death doth not destroy,—
It only leads the wanderer home
To realms of endless joy."

Was ever any thing wider from the truth than this? "Death is" then "the gate to endless joy," and surely it cannot destroy. According to this, death, which is declared to be "the wages of sin" and the penalty for disobedience, is no penalty at all, but a rich blessing. Surely, we have fallen upon strange times. "Let God be true," etc. My heart aches while I pen such absurd sentiments, and I turn to the following most cheerfully.

No. 8—a good one.

"Weep not for her who sleeps in death,
Our loss will be her gain,
For He who watches o'er her dust,
Will bid her rise again."

This is reasonable and scriptural. It shows the true state of the dead, gives the glory of watching over the dead, and awaking them to life again, to Jesus. Amen and Amen.

But enough. O how glad I am that we can yet study and believe the "good book," and feel that our feet are placed on a sure foundation. This alone can keep us from falling into the many "monstrous" errors of these perilous times, and light up our pathway, not only in this vale of tears, but clear through the dark grave, even into the world of eternal life and glory. Praise God for the Bible, the Bible, THE BIBLE.

"Yes, sweet Bible, I will hide thee
Deep, yes, deeper in my heart;
Thou through all my life wilt guide me,
And in death we will not part.

Part in death! no, never, never!
Thro' death's vale I'll lean on thee,
And in brighter worlds forever,
Sweeter far thy truths shall be."

Absence of God in Prayer.

"Oh that I knew where I might find him."—Job 23: 3.

"If God had not said, 'Blessed are those that hunger,' I know not what could keep weak christians from sinking in despair. Many times, all I can do is to complain that I want Him, and wish to recover Him."

Bishop Hall, in uttering this lament, two centuries and a half ago, only echoed the wail which had come down, through living hearts, from the patriarch, whose story is the oldest known literature in any language. A consciousness of the absence of God is one of the standard incidents of religious life. Even when the forms of devotion are observed conscientiously, the sense of the presence of God, as an invisible Friend, whose society is a joy, is by no means unintermittent.

The truth of this will not be questioned by one who is familiar with those phases of religious experience which are so often the burden of christian confession. In no single feature of "inner life," probably, is the experience of many minds less satisfactory to them than in this. They seem to themselves, in prayer, to have little, if any, effluent emotion. They can speak of little in their devotional life that seems to them like life; of little that appears like the communion of a living soul with a living God. Are there not many "closet hours," in which the chief feeling of the worshipper is an oppressed consciousness of the absence of reality from his own exercises? He has no words which are, as George Herbert says, "heart deep." He not only experiences no ecstacy, but no joy, no peace, no repose. He has no sense of being at home with God. The stillness of the hour is the stillness of a dead calm at sea. The heart rocks monotonously on the surface of the great thoughts of God, of Christ, of Eternity, of Heaven—

"As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean."

Such experiences in prayer are often startling in the contrast with those of certain christians, whose communion with God, as the hints of it are recorded in their biographies, seems to realize, in actual being, the scriptural conception of a life which is hid with Christ in God. We read of Payson, that his mind, at times, almost lost its sense of the external world, in the ineffable thoughts of God's glory, which rolled like a sea of light around him, at the throne of grace.

We read of Cowper, that, in one of the few lucid hours of his religious life, such was the experience of God's presence which he enjoyed in prayer, that, as he tells us, he thought he should have died with joy, if special strength had not been imparted to him to bear the disclosure.

We read of one of the Tennents, that on one occasion, when he was engaged in secret devotion, so overpowering was the revelation of God which opened upon his soul, and with augmenting intensity of effulgence as he prayed, that at length he recoiled from the intolerable joy as from a pain, and besought God to withhold from him further manifestations of his glory. He said, "shall Thy servant see Thee and live?"

We read of the "sweet hours" which Edwards enjoyed "on the banks of Hudson's River, in sweet converse with God," and hear his own description of the inward sense of Christ which at times came into his heart, and which he "knows not how to express otherwise, than by a calm, sweet abstraction of soul from all the concerns of this world; and sometimes a kind of vision * * * * of being alone in the mountains, or some solitary wilderness, far from all mankind, sweetly conversing with Christ, and rapt and swallowed up in God."

We read of such instances of the fruits of prayer, in the blessedness of the suppliant, and are we not reminded by them of the transfiguration of our Lord, of whom we read, "As he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment became white and glistering?" Who of us is not oppressed by the contrast between such an experience and his own? Does not the cry of the patriarch come unbidden to our lips, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him?"

Much of even the ordinary language of christians, respecting the joy of communion with God,—language which is stereotyped in our dialect of prayer,—many cannot honestly apply to the history of their own minds. A calm, fearless self-examination finds no counterpart to it in anything they have ever known. In the view of an honest conscience, it is not the vernacular speech of their experience. As compared with the joy which such language indicates, prayer is, in all that they know of it, a dull duty. Perhaps the characteristic of the feelings of many about it is expressed in the single fact, that it is to to them a duty as distinct from a privilege. It is a duty which, they cannot deny, is often uninviting, even irksome.

If some of us should attempt to define the advantage we derive from a performance of the duty, we might be surprised, perhaps shocked, as one after another of the folds of a deceived heart should be taken off, at the discovery of the littleness of the residuum, in an honest judgment of ourselves. Why did we pray this morning? Do we often derive any other profit from prayer, than that of satisfying convictions of conscience, of which we could not rid ourselves if we wished to do so, and which will not permit us to be at ease with ourselves, if all forms of prayer are abandoned? Perhaps even so slight a thing as the pain of resistance to the momentum of a habit, will be found to be the most distinct reason we can honestly give for having prayed yesterday or to-day.

There may be periods, also, when the experiences of the closet enable some of us to understand that maniacal cry of Cowper, when his friends requested him to prepare some hymns for the Olney Collection. "How can you ask of me such a service? I seem to myself to be banished to a remoteness from God's presence, in comparison with which the distance from East to West is vicinity, is cohesion."

If such language is too strong to be truthful to the common experience of the class of professing christians to which those whom it represents belong, many will still discern in it, as an expression of joylessness in prayer, a sufficient approximation to their own experience, to awaken interest in some thoughts upon the CAUSES OF A WANT OF ENJOYMENT IN PRAYER.

The evil of such an experience in prayer, is too obvious to need illustration. If our light can be thrown upon the causes of it, there is no man living, whatever may be his religious state, who has not an interest in making it the theme of thought. [illegible] very few that feel the relish, and are enticed with the deliciousness, and refreshed with the comforts, and acquainted with the secrets, of a holy prayer." Yet, who is it that has said, "I will make them joyful in my house of prayer?"—"The Still Hour," by Prof. Phelps.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord." Psalm 37: 5.

Dear brethren and sisters,—do we commit our ways unto the Lord? This is an important question—one that we should consider well. Do we, as professed christians, give ourselves wholly up to the Lord? If not, is it not time we were beginning to consider our true position in the light of eternity? Should we not pray, as we never have prayed, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" May God give us grace, to enable us to give our hearts wholly up to Him—to overcome all our easily besetting sins; and may we pray constantly, as did David, "Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness."

O, brethren and sisters, while souls are perishing, are we not too much "at ease in Zion"? While the Judge standeth at the door, are we doing all we can for the salvation of our own souls, and for that of others? O, may we be as humble as our blessed Savior, who went about doing good—who became poor for our sakes—who condescended to die the death of the cross that we might live, and will soon come again to receive us unto himself. Then, dear friends, does it not stand us in hand, in these last days, to commit our ways unto the Lord, who has promised to direct our paths. O, let us be faithful till Jesus comes, "that no man take our crown." Yours, in hope of immortality,

Canaan, Vt. WM. H. STEWART.

Living without Life.

How is this? To me it seems paradoxical. The question was asked me a short time since, if there was not such a thing as a "Death that never dies." I replied by asking another question—is there such a thing as a Life that never lives?

We are taught that the wicked will exist eternally in conscious misery. Then, will they not have life, or live eternally? I cannot see how the conclusion can be avoided.

But, it is objected, that it is called Death, yet they are conscious. Well, then, to be eternally conscious, is to be eternally alive, which must be Eternal Life.

The Hidden Tract.

A Swiss girl, of frivolous character, who thought she had only to leave her home in order to get on in the world, and become happy, joined a number of young persons who went to Prussia as governesses. One of her sisters had placed, unknown to her, in her trunk, a Bible and some tracts. The expectations that she had formed prior to setting out were not realized, and she complained in her letters that she led a melancholy life. "I have," said she, "no pleasure here, and no dancing parties. The agreeable days that I spent in Switzerland are past, never to return." These complaints naturally excited the sympathy of her parents and worldly friends, but were a source of grief to her pious sister. This affectionate girl, who was filled with deep anxiety for her spiritual welfare, was at last able to rejoice; for, some months afterwards, she received a letter from her, commencing in quite a different strain from her former ones, and showing the joy of a christian who has found her Redeemer. She wrote:—"One evening, as I took up a volume of plays to read, a tract fell out which I carelessly took up, and found it to be 'Nicodemus, or the New Birth.' I felt inwardly urged to peruse it, and, as I read, the scales fell from my eyes. I perceived, and felt my misery, and during many days I was so unhappy that every one believed I was ill. At last I could pray, and I am now so happy that I would desire to tell what I feel to every one."

For the Crisis.

"Something's the Matter."

Yes, it's always so. But what now? "Why, our preacher is so dry!"

This is a common song now-a-days. I have waited about a year for some body,—a man, you know,—to speak about the troubles at the "minister's study." I will now speak a word or two in their defence, to pay them for slivering female preachers. A young man, with little education and only a Bible, dictionary and hymn book, starts out to preach. Some one must board him. So some one who has a herd of cattle and a drove of hogs takes him in, gradually giving him the chores to do for his board. The chores grow mighty. Instead of "fetching the cows," he has to milk them. Instead of bringing the water he has to bring the butter. He has an appointment for the Sabbath; three sermons, of course, the people will have. Now, then, my talkative fellow, you just preach scripturally, eloquently, historically, sensibly and poetically. If you have not had time to "search the Scriptures," or think about elocution,—if you have forgotten history, and worked till sense becomes sleepy, and the poetry of your nature has been cruelly "transposed," you must preach well, or they will talk about you, and like as not conclude and suggest something about young "upstarts" who have "missed their calling."

I used to think if the minister didn't work just as hard as my father, he had no right to our bread and butter, though he used to get it sometimes. But now, to all churches who want to make their ministers chore boys, let me say, it is a disgrace to the society. Do they need exercise? They get that walking to meeting, and unless they are lazy. Let a country place engage one of these inexperienced preachers, and give him a chance to study; let him learn Greek, and every good thing that will open to him the Bible, and there will be more intelligent ministers who can build up better churches. Some startle at the word HEBREW or LATIN, but if they knew how much preachers need to understand these languages, they might be less frightened. Then they need to study HISTORY; what can they do without it? What will they do without time to study?

Perhaps I may make some one feel bad, Well, I feel better. Now, my christian brethren, don't you think there is something beside want of talent that brings so many dull sermons? Don't you think something can be given better than money or board to these preachers about us, to make them talk more interestingly? Just try it. Make that poor brother study,—make him feel his right and obligation to God and the church to get his mind full, so the church shall be instructed and God honored. Do pardon me for meddling with the subject, but I do want ministers to know something. If they remain ignorant, the churches are responsible.

One word more,—they must have BOOKS, and these articles come by cash. Please hand over a few dimes. Each member can aid, and do for pity's sake let your ministers have something besides pamphlets, primers, papers and almanacs to study from. I presume most farmers have more books than many young and even old preachers. Let the farmers do the preaching, or give the ministers his books. May God add heavenly wisdom to the knowledge thus obtained, and bring all to his glory, is my prayer.

A Letter.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, waiting for translation and eternal life at the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,—I would admonish you yet once more (for I believe it is the last time) in the language of the apostle Peter, not to think it "strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are made partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when His glory is revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." God has a wise purpose in the trial of the faith of all his people; and although his wisdom and goodness, and the importance as well as the necessity of the trial to ourselves may not be fully apparent while we are passing through it, yet we are assured, by the word of the Lord, that if we endure it patiently and submissively to the end, it shall result in our eternal good. And when we are permitted to enter upon our immortal state of bliss and glory, in looking back upon the trials through which we have passed, in the providence of God, we shall be led to praise and adore the infinite wisdom and goodness of our Father in heaven, in bringing us through the fire of purification in this life to the glory of an eternal life in the kingdom of Jesus our Redeemer. The same apostle Peter compares the trial of our faith to the process of trying or refining gold, and, in closing the comparison, declares that our faith is more precious than fine gold, and the trial of it much more important, in order that it may be found perfect, and worthy of praise, and honor, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Brethren, I sometimes get a call from the D. D.'s, many of whom are deceivers. I beseech you, dear brethren and sisters, avoid them, for, by their good words and fair speeches, they deceive the simple. Beware of them, lest they beguile you with enticing words, saying, the kingdom is within you, and that the kingdom of Jesus is a spiritual kingdom, set up at Pentecost, and reigns in the heart, and is to progress till the world is all converted, and the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth as the waters cover the sea; and that God cleanses the hearts of the children by sprinkling in baptism, and made inheritors of the kingdom of grace, and when they die their immortal soul goes to the kingdom of glory. This is the doctrine they are preaching here; but I tell them they are in a strong delusion, and that they are believing a lie, and if they do not repent and believe the gospel of the kingdom, and follow the example of Jesus in being baptized, they cannot be saved; for they are not preaching the gospel of the kingdom, but a gospel without a kingdom, saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us." Luke 19:14. But when He receives the kingdom, he says, "Those mine enemies, who would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me." Luke 19:27. O, if they were wise, and believed in the kingdom of God, which he hath promised—yea, sworn to, and promised not to break! Hear the words of it, ye who think to set up an opposition kingdom. Ps. 89:3, 4,—"I have made a covenant with my chosen; I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Verses 27–29,—"Also I will make Him my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven." Verses 34–37,—"My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever, as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven." Again says Peter, Acts 2:29, 30,—"Men and brethren, let me freely speak to you of the Patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." David's throne was on Mount Zion, 2d Sam. 5:7. "And the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in (the new) Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24:23. "He shall be great, (greater than David) and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." This kingdom is to be set up. "In the days of these kings (now reigning) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, (the kingdoms of this world, see Rev. 11:15,) and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2:44. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." This is the saints' kingdom, for the saints are to take it and possess it forever and ever. The wicked shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets and saints in the kingdom of God, and they themselves thrust out. And when the kings are assembled, and pass by the great city on Mount Zion, even the city of the great King, they will see it and marvel, and be troubled, and will haste away; fear will take hold on them, and pain, as of a woman in travail. See Ps. 48. "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings, be instructed, ye judges of the earth; serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling; kiss the son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

Brethren, let us wait patiently for the kingdom, and have long patience, as Brother James says, "till we receive both early and later rain." "Establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Let us remember that "flesh and blood" cannot inherit the kingdom of God. "As we have borne the image" of the first Adam, we shall also bear the image of the second Adam. The saints of the Most High will be changed from mortal to immortality, from corruption to incorruption, from natural to spiritual, with bodies fashioned like to Jesus' glorious body, before we can enter the kingdom. Then the "tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell among them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Then shall the creature itself be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." It shall be said in that day, "Lo, this is our God: we have waited for him and he will save us: this is the Lord: we have waited for him: we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Let us pray thy kingdom come and thy will be done on earth as in heaven. Amen.

"Be as holy, and as happy,
And as useful here below,
As it is your Father's pleasure,—
Jesus, only Jesus know.
Wake up, brother! wake up, sister!
Seek, O seek this holy state;
None but holy ones can enter
Through the pure, celestial gate."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 3, 1861.

☞ Owing to the death of his sister, Bro. Wendell was called away on Friday last. He will probably return on Thursday evening. Hence we shall fill (?) the editorial chair but one week. F. H. B.

☞ Your particular attention is called to the fact that at our Wilbraham Camp Meeting last fall, it was voted to purchase, of Bro.'s Munger and Ladd, the cooking apparatus, crockery and boarding utensils. To effect this, it was thought best to raise a fund, and hence a subscription list was opened, and many of the friends subscribed toward this object. Some of the subscribers paid their pledges, but the most of what was subscribed is still unpaid. Our object at this time is to call attention to this matter, and earnestly request the brethren and sisters to send their subscriptions immediately to GEO. T. ADAMS, Boston, Mass., so that there may be nothing lacking which will conduce to the comfort and convenience of those who shall go up to our contemplated feast of tabernacles. Let every one respond promptly. F. H. B.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts on Government.

A government may have a right to be, though it may not in all respects be, perfect. If this be true, then it may be that the government of the United States ought to be. If it ought to be, then it ought to be sustained; for, unless it is sustained, it must cease to be. If it be wrong for a christian to bear arms, it follows that, if Ab. Lincoln be a christian, he ought to resign his office. It also follows that every christian holding office in the government ought to resign. It is also true that every christian does wrong who, by his vote, puts a man into office. It then is evident that, as the government ought to be sustained, wicked men should be in office, from the greatest to the least. In case any one of these wicked officers should become a christian, he should leave the government at once by resigning; because though the government should be, still christians should not sustain it.

If we may pray for rulers, and God should so far regard our prayer as that these rulers should become christians, they must cease to be rulers, and let wicked men take their place, for a christian must not bear arms, and he must do this sometimes, if he belong to a government that bears arms. We may thank God that we have an honest President, but, perchance, if he should be honest enough to be a christian, or rather a disciple of Christ, he must cease to be a President, because if he becomes as good as we pray that he may be, he should not bear arms. We may take good care not to thank God for a christian President, lest by so doing, we involve the monstrous absurdity of thanking the Lord for that which we condemn.

If what we have said be true, then we should try to prevent all christians from going into this government, and to have all who are now in it leave it at once; and, as any one now in it may become a christian, we should tell him he must leave it and let the wicked man take his place. And, moreover, if the President should be an honest christian, he must resign his office and let an anti-christian take his place. If, moreover, he be almost a christian, he can remain, and we may thank the Lord that he is President, and pray for his success. This involves the idea that if Lincoln be a good man, he ought not to be President. It would then follow that the farther he is from goodness, the greater is his right to be President. Is this the kind of logic we should use in these perilous times? J. S. W.

For the Crisis.

Inquiries.

Bro. J. M. Muhlig has several questions in the Crisis on Daniel 12:1. "Who are the people called Daniel's people? Are they the Jews, as a nation, or christians generally?"

Daniel's people, in this prophecy, are very easily defined. Chap. 9:16, 19, 24; 10:14.—"O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain: because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for thine own sake, O my God: for thy city and thy people are called by thy name. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days." From these passages it is evident that Daniel's people were, and are the Jews. Thy people shall be delivered. Gentiles are not meant by this passage, but the Jews belonging to the nation in bondage when Daniel wrote, and which were afterwards carried away captive into all nations; whose city was to be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. This people, and no other, is called Daniel's people in this prophecy. This people is to be delivered—every one found written in the book. Not every one of all the Jewish nation, but every one of that nation whose name is found in the book. See Rom. 17:8.

2. "From what are they to be delivered?" See the whole question. They are to be delivered from all that holds them in bondage. Those alive at that time will be delivered from their dispersion, and gathered to the land promised to Abraham and his seed. Those dead will be raised to life,—will be in the first resurrection. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." That is, many of Daniel's people that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake,—all whose names are in the book. Those whose names are not in the book will not awake at that time, but will subsequently awake to shame and everlasting contempt. J. S. W.

Camp Meeting.

Shall we have a Second Advent Camp Meeting this year in the region of Boston? The two last years we have had one at Westford, and I am inquired of whether we are to have one this year, and if so, where? Surely it is a time to be up and doing. The old enemy is up and doing all he can to destroy. And shall we not do our very best, in the name of Jesus, to save our friends from inevitable ruin? Beside the great gathering at Wilbraham, I think it would be well to have one in this vicinity, and one or two in Maine. The subject should be digested, and early preparations made, a committee chosen, a place selected, and the time fixed so as not to clash with the other meetings.

I write this thus early so as to stir up and draw out the desires of the brethren as to whether we shall have one? If any brethren desirous of having one will suggest a place and time for meeting, to talk over and settle the preliminaries, I wish they would make it known through the Crisis. Camp duty is all the go with those fighting for a corruptible crown, and shall not we, who are contending not with carnal weapons for an incorruptible, unfading crown, be ready to leave all and attend camp meetings? August and September is the time for them. They better be early.

Harmony Grove in Westford can be secured, if desirable. Any suggestions through the Crisis, or to me, I will answer. Come, brethren, it is time we are awake. The tokens show the soon coming glory.

For the Crisis.

O, Think of the Rest!

Is there a rest remaining for us? Why, then, do we not think more upon it? Why are not our hearts continually there? What is the cause of this neglect? God has promised in his holy word to take us to dwell with himself. Is this not worth thinking of? Do we believe this, and yet forget and neglect it? If God has not given us leave to approach this light, what mean all the earnest invitations of his word? Why does he condemn our earthly-mindedness, and command us to set our affections on things above? Ah! it is because our hearts are vile. When He commands us to leave all and seek him, shall we think this a hard task? Shall we, like the sinful Israelites, when God required them to march for Canaan, refuse to go?—and when God bade them not to go, then they were anxious to proceed. Now God does say "Love not the world, nor the things of the world." How frequently do we think of our pleasures, our friends, our labors, our flesh and its lusts—yea, our wrongs and miseries, our fears and sufferings. But where is the christian whose heart is on his rest? Are we so full of joy, that we need no more? Are we not apt to let our hearts get stupid? If this world is the only subject of our discourse, we must expect the world will call us ungodly. Why, then, may we not call our hearts ungodly, if we have so little delight in Christ or his kingdom?

Brethren and sisters, if we will not hear and obey, who will? Well may we be discouraged to exhort this blind, ungodly world, and say, as Moses did, "Behold, the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me; how, then, shall Pharoah hear me?" It is because our hearts are at enmity with God; we disobey his commands, and, by so doing, we lose the most gracious and delightful discoveries of His Word. We often ask, How shall we know, and what is the sign of our hearts being right in the sight of God? Why, praise be to His name, we have an infallible sign from the mouth of Jesus Christ himself—"Where your treasure is, there will your hearts be also." God is the saint's treasure and happiness; therefore a heart set upon God, through Christ, is the truest evidence of saving grace. When learning, knowledge, duties, gifts, will fail; when arguments from the tongue or hand may be confuted; then will this from thy heart prove thee sincere. The man that Christ will find out at the last day, and condemn for the want of a "wedding garment," will be the one that wants this frame of heart. The question will not then be,—How much have you known, or professed, or talked, but, How much have you loved? and, Where was your heart?

O, if we would have a proof of our title to glory, let us labor to get our hearts above. In order to do this, let us this very moment take our heart to task, and chide it for its willful estrangement from God. Let us turn our thoughts from the pursuit of vanity; let us bend our souls to study eternity; let us busy ourselves about that world which is to come;—then, if our souls begin to flag, and our thoughts to scatter, call them back—hold them to their work—bear not with their laziness. When you have, in obedience to God, done this, and kept guard of your thoughts, it is then, and only then, that you will find a sweetness in the work and service of God, and that the life of Christianity is a life of joy. Do I hear any say, we are unable to set our hearts on things above,—it must be the work of God only? Be careful, reader; let me tell you, though God be the chief disposer of your heart, yet, next under him, you have the greatest command of it. Without Christ we can do nothing; but in him we can, through grace, do much, and must, or else we shall be undone. God has provided for all his faithful ones a crown of glory, and promised to set it shortly on our heads; he bids us behold and rejoice. And shall we now, in these last days, overlook all? Shall we live in earthly cares and sorrows, and rejoice no more than if the Lord had never wrote them? Why do we not think oftener of these things, and groan earnestly for that home where we, if faithful, must soon take up our everlasting abode? We are strangers, but that is our country. We are heirs, and that is our inheritance—even "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away." * * * *

I live with the glorious expectation, if faithful, of one day outriding the storms of this life, and of being permitted to enter in "through the gates into the city" of the New Jerusalem. Without Christ we can do nothing; therefore let us be up and doing while the day lasts. Let us not be found out of the way, nor asleep when He comes, but ready to exclaim, "It is enough! Christ is alive, and because he liveth, I shall live also." ANDREW J. BOIES.

The Poland Conference.

The Poland Conference is over, and I take my pen to give a short sketch of the same. The meeting commenced, according to appointment, June 13th, and continued each day and evening over the following Sabbath. A good interest was manifested, in all the meetings, and it really seemed that the pilgrim to Mount Zion had taken new courage in these times of severe trial. Brethren Couch, Fassett, Jordan, Howard, Libbey, Lombard and Haggett were there as ministers of the word. Bro. Couch gave us five solemn, interesting, and profitable discourses. As we listened to these, and the sermons preached by some of the other brethren, we rejoiced exceedingly; believing we are on the track that leads to the kingdom of our God, and that our position is a glorious, yet trying one indeed. To have the privilege of hearing, believing, obeying and proclaiming the last message to the world, is a blessed one, and the warm-hearted testimonies and fervent prayers of the children of God at this Conference showed that they appreciated, in a good degree, the honorable position they occupy.

Everything was done by the brethren and sisters of Poland to make the meeting a good one. Hearts, houses, stables and pastures were open to entertain man and beast, and the brethren and sisters from abroad felt (no doubt) at home, according to the promise as given in Mark 10:29, 30. It was hard to close the meeting, and bid one another farewell,—but the bright and glorious hope that we should soon meet, on "Eden's fair, beautiful shore," to enjoy forever a far better meeting, caused us to rejoice even in our sadness; and we said "good bye" with a stronger determination than ever to be faithful, endure to the end, and then obtain the crown of Life.

Before closing, I would solicit the prayers of the saints in behalf of our dear sister Fassett, (now residing with her beloved companion at West Poland,) whose health has failed her. O there is power in prayer, dear children of God, and we cannot spare sister F. nor any of the faithful laborers now. O Lord, let "thy kingdom come," is the constant, earnest cry of thy waiting ones, while [illegible]

"No chilly wind or poisonous breath
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

For the Crisis.

The Seventy Weeks and Twenty-three Hundred Days.

FRIEND WENDELL:—Permit me to say a few words through the Crisis to the friends scattered abroad, in the way of a few questions. The seventy weeks of Daniel have been thought to end at or near the cross. I have ever thought otherwise. As the seventy weeks were cut off from the 2300 days "upon thy people and upon thy holy city," they must necessarily reach to the destruction of the same, viz., the people and city, though other things were to take place within this time. There was to be "seven weeks and threescore and two weeks" "unto the Messiah the Prince," which make sixty-nine weeks, yet Messiah was to be cut off after sixty-two weeks. How can this be, unless "Messiah" is one appellation, and "the Messiah the Prince" another? "After sixty-two" is indefinite time—"sixty-nine weeks unto" is definite time. The destruction of the city and sanctuary are brought in as one of the things to take place within the seventy weeks, and the end thereof (70) with a flood, and unto the end of the war are determined. "And he shall confirm a covenant with many for one week," which is the last of the seventy, "and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease."

Now I ask if it was not the literal sacrifice and oblation that Daniel spoke of? If so, did that cease to be offered until near the destruction of Jerusalem, when the people became so poor that they were not able to do it? This covenant—was it not spoken to the disciples on the mountain, (Matt. 24) and did it not confirm them in the truth of his Messiahship when Jerusalem was destroyed? Now, when did the true and literal sacrifice and oblation in the Jewish nation cease to be offered? When did Christ become "the Messiah the Prince?" Was it not when the Jewish nation ceased to be a nation, and Christ became "the Prince of the King of the earth"? Rev. 1:5. If these premises be correct, the conclusion is, Jerusalem being destroyed in the year 70, the remainder of the 2300 will bring us to 1880, the cleansing of the sanctuary.

Daniel 12:11, 12. If "the abomination that maketh desolate was set up," according to Miller, in 538, the 1260 will end in 1798; the 1290, necessarily commencing in 538, will end in 1829, about the time of the first preaching of the Advent; the 1335 commence at the same time and end in 1873. This reaches to the resurrection of the saints, seven years prior to the cleansing of the sanctuary. This gives Noah's seven days (or years) in the ark before the destruction of the wicked, when the prophet Amos' famine will take place, as the righteous are taken up to meet the Lord in the air, when there is no one to preach the word of the Lord.

Will you please give this a place in your paper, and if I am wrong on these points, I hope the brethren will correct them if they think them worthy of notice.

Yours in the faith,

N. G. BUCKLAND.

"In Christ shall all be made Alive."

The 15th chapter of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians should be regarded by every believer as a complete development of the great doctrine of the resurrection. The occasion that prompted its author, demanded a most thorough exposition of the subject. There were "some among" the Corinthian professors who, as Wesley says, "probably had been heathen philosophers," that denied the idea of a resurrection. It was, therefore, imperatively necessary that Paul should bring forth his strong reasons, and establish the doctrine beyond a peradventure. It is extremely improbable that he would fail to cover the whole ground in such an exigency. No essential feature of the resurrection system could be omitted. As the resurrection of the dead had been denied, it was needful to show its infinite importance and impregnable foundation.

We say "the resurrection of the dead;" for we have noticed that some are careful to italicise the phrase, as above, as if they thought the very words implied the re-living of all the dead. Without stopping particularly to remark the absurdity of bringing up the antideluvian world after they have literally "perished," (2 Pet. 3:6,) or the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, who are "set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," which utterly precludes the idea that they can ever exist again, we observe that the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians treats of "the resurrection of the dead." Now if John Wesley's opinion is correct, (and we believe it is,) that "the apostle throughout the chapter speaks of the resurrection of the righteous, and the righteous only," the aforesaid phrase contains no such implication.

We say "the resurrection of the dead," because we are satisfied that, as the phrase includes all who live again, and as Paul could not consistently exclude from his argument the class who are immensely in the majority, it follows that he would mention the wicked if he believed they would live again.

We say "the resurrection of the dead," for we are very anxious that some good brother would show us how he can maintain the re-living of the wicked dead, without doing one of two things, viz., affirm universal salvation, or give up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death.

"In Adam all die." "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Why did Adam die? Because he sinned. Why do all men die? Because they have sinned. Why do those who have "not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression," i. e. infants, die? Because they have Adam's nature, which is animal, and therefore not "subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." The animal nature is a death nature. It has no future life in itself, and therefore "waiteth for the manifestation" of a new nature, even that "of the sons of God." "For the creature" (the animal nature) "was made subject to vanity" (death) "not willingly," but by reason of Him who hath subjected it, in hope that it shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption" (by the impartation of a new nature) "into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

"In Adam all die." In Adam, "the living soul," all die. In "that which is natural," Adam, all die. In Adam, "of the earth, earthy," of which "we have borne the image," all die. In "that flesh and blood" which "cannot inherit the kingdom of God," Adam, all die. Why do men die? Because they are "in Adam."

"In Christ shall all be made alive?" Why did Christ live from the dead? "Because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." Because he had a Spirit-nature, by which he was quickened. Death claimed the animal, but had not dominion over the Spirit man. Who are "in Christ?" All who are baptized into them "by one spirit." "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his;" he is not "in Christ." Why are all in Christ made alive? Because they have the Spirit nature. "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you." "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood," (have part in His atonement) "ye have no" (future) "life in you." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh" (the animal nature) "profiteth nothing." "Because I live, ye shall live also." "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life." In Christ, "the quickening Spirit," shall all be made alive. In Christ, "that which is spiritual," shall all be made alive. In Christ, "the Lord from heaven," of which "we shall also bear the image," shall all be made alive. Why are men made alive? Because they are "in Christ."

A Sure Defence.

"What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee."

To the worldling and the "fool who hath said in his heart there is no God," there is no hiding place afforded in the day of calamity, no mention of rocks unto which they may resort, no fortress of safety where they may be secure from the great and notable day of the Lord"—"the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion." God hath recorded in his word many notable days in which he has spoken to rebellious man. He has spoken by the fierceness of his wrath, and by the arm of his swift vengeance often consumed them from his presence. It was a sad and fearful day when the sins of the old world had, in their awful magnitude, reached to heaven, determining the Lord to blot them from existence. Not one of the vast multitude at that time peopling the earth was spared, save good old Noah and his family. It was another day of severe judgment when the wickedness of Sodom and Gomorrah caused the Lord to rain fire and brimstone from heaven upon them, leaving only behind them, as an everlasting memorial, the stagnant waters of the dead sea. Jerusalem, too, saw a dreadful day when the army of Titus encompassed the city, and the blood of martyrs and prophets slain within her walls of renown called loudly for vengeance in the destruction of her people, who fell by the violence of the sword.

But we need not multiply instances famous for ancient wickedness, when God in his righteous indignation visited their sins and iniquities upon the heads of the guilty perpetrators, leaving them as an ensample to those who should live after. But we may come down to modern times—to the period in which we live. We of this boasted and once happy republic have come to a "day of trouble and of rebuke"—a day when the hydra-headed monster of oppression, that has long crushed its millions in our midst, and is now in our country emitting its venom and poisoning all with whom it comes in contact, not satisfied with past advantages in securing the blood and sweat and toil of four millions of helpless men, women and children. It is now marshalling its armies of infuriated soldiers against those who would have the stars and stripes—emblem of peace and purity, love and union—wave in triumph over every nation. How many homes have been, and still will be, made desolate by the war precipitated upon us at the instigation of American slavery. But who that has carefully read his Bible doubts but what the time has come when "the Lord who exerciseth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed," is engaged in this fearful contest, and will even "cause the wrath of man to praise him, while the remainder he will restrain." Then let us, while it is a time of perplexity without, of confusion and sorrow, trouble and distress, be quiet and composed within, and say with the Psalmist, "what time I am afraid, I will trust in thee." Glorious trust for the christian.

We think that Christ's sorrowing little ones will not be called to see many more days of trouble like these in which we live, before the last great and notable day will come for which all other days were made. Then will He come and claim his weary, waiting bride; "then the heathen shall be given to him for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." Then shall "he see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," and till then let us manifest the spirit of Christ, and pray for our enemies, whether individual or national, not wishing their blood or their overthrow, but their repentance toward God, and their reconciliation to man. And then when the last scene in the great drama of earth is enacted, and the Lord shall return, he will "discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not." May we be His in that day when he makes up his jewels, and then he will spare us as a "man spareth his son that serveth him."

Faith's Offering.

Why did God have respect unto Abel's offering and not unto Cain's? I assume that Abel was instructed, so also was Cain, relative to duty or the will of God. First, I give the common Sunday school answer, viz., the former was offered in faith, but the latter was not. "Now faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Rom. 10; Heb. 9. We find there is no remission of sin without the shedding of blood; therefore, if I am not mistaken, Cain's offering was a thank offering only, by which he made no acknowledgment of sin, or of his need of redemption by Jesus Christ. Whereas Abel offered his sacrifice in faith, being humble and obedient, he was possessed of a broken heart and contrite spirit, and made an acknowledgment of his sin by an offering. The shedding of the blood of the lamb was typical of the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ. Hence the former—Cain—may be compared to the proud Pharisee; the latter—Abel—to the poor publican. Correspondence.

From Bro. A. W. Mace.

BRO. WENDELL:—One of your most devoted readers has this morning fallen asleep in Jesus. It is with an aching heart and eyes suffused with tears that I pen these lines.

I wrote to Bro. Grant for the "Crisis" over six months ago, since which time my dear companion, Maggie T. Mace, has read nearly every word in that paper up to June 12th, which number came after she was too weak to sit up. I read a portion of it to her, in which she appeared much interested, until she was too weary to listen. She had, as well as myself, been for a number of years a member of the "Methodist church" till last February, when she united with the "Church of Christ," taking the Bible only as her rule of faith and practice. She believed in the doctrine of the Bible as promulgated in the "Crisis," and looked for immortality through Christ. She was taken sick one week ago last Friday, with a very complicated case of fever, and soon we became fearful that she would not recover. When writing to her friends, she requested me to ask them to pray that she might get well again; but added that her prayer was, "Nevertheless not my will, but thine be done, O Father." She said, "Death is an enemy, and I do not like to yield to him." She wished to live till Jesus comes, which she thought would not be long. During family worship, as I offered prayer to God for her restoration, but that his will might be done, and we be reconciled to whatever he thought best for us, she would frequently respond aloud as she lay upon her bed, and did so until Saturday morning; after which her voice failed, insomuch that she was unable to make herself understood. We could not tell whether she was conscious at the last or not. She yielded up her breath with great reluctance, withstanding the grim monster Death for two long hours, when he overcame her and laid her prostrate at his feet. But now a placid smile rests upon her countenance, as if she knew that her Savior holds the keys of death and the grave.

Mrs. Mace has been a very close student of the word of God for a long time, always discovering new beauties in that sacred volume at each perusal. She has been anxious to see her husband devote all his energies in the vineyard of the Lord, and he trusts that this dispensation of God's providence will more fully prepare him for the work of an evangelist. He has two little children left with him to mourn the loss of one he loved most of all on earth, but can say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord, he doeth all things well." I trust in a few more days of toil and affliction here, Jesus will come to call his faithful followers to life and immortality. Yours in affliction.

Olney, Ill., June 24, 1861.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

MY DEAR BRO. WENDELL:—This is the time above all others when we should stand strong in the faith, giving glory to God. The three unclean spirits are doing their best to prepare for the great battle. The spirit of war is pervading the whole country, and nothing but the spirit of Christ will protect and keep us from the spirit of war. "Peace" should be our motto, while we are looking for the Prince of peace. We must now fight the good fight with the whole armor on,—but then our weapons are not carnal. No, no, but they are mighty through God. But may we not use the sword? Yes, the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. But suppose you get smitten? Don't smite back, says Jesus. Suppose they take your coat? Give thy cloak also. But shall we not defend the honor of our country? "Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior who shall change this vile body," and soon, if good and faithful, make us subjects of his blessed, peaceful reign. But this is no satisfactory; we must take hold. "I have chosen you out of the world," "a peculiar people," "not our own," "bought with a price." Let all use the weapons they consistently can to uphold and consolidate human governments, and soon the stone, cut from out of the mountain, will take hold of these and handle them so roughly that, in spite of all that can be done, they will be scattered like the chaff of the summer's threshing floor, and no place be found for them.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations. He will plead with all flesh. Daniel's trouble is right upon us. It is the time to take heed, watch and pray always, be patient, and keep ourselves in the love of God. A little beyond this dreadful war and carnage, and the land of promise comes in sight, shining in her Eden glory. Next you hear a hearty welcome from the King of kings, "Come," ye meek ye peacemakers, ye pure, ye blessed; the Kingdom, Paradise, Earth restored, all, all is yours, glory to God, eternally yours. Peace now is permanent. The glory of God fills the earth—the Christian's home. Amen.

I have just returned from a visit to the churches in Kennebunk, Biddeford, Yarmouth and Hollis, Me., also Lee, N. H., and I have had exceeding good seasons in the name of my Master, doing all I could to warn, entreat and strengthen the things that remain. There seems to be a coming up in all these places, with a strong desire to be found ready now for every good word and work; some, thank God, are coming into the truth and love of it. God bless his children, and preserve them through their hour of peril. Amen. Thy brother, toiling on in good cheer.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Northwood, N. H., May 25, 1861, Bro. JOSEPH BATCHELDER, aged forty years, six months and six days.

In the death of Bro. Batchelder the town looses an exemplary christian, a companion an affectionate and kind husband, and the church a true-hearted brother. He embraced Christ and the truth in 1843 The even tenor of his life and consistent course had a power and influence that precept without example does not have. It was remarked of him that he would be missed as much, or more, than any other man in the place. His sickness was short. But he that had loved God and his cause in health, remembered it also when disease was doing its last work, for, about two hours before his death, he set his name to his last will and testament, in which he gave to the Advent cause several hundred dollars, to be placed in the hands of one of the Lord's, we trust, faithful stewards. Thus our brother has fallen in the vigor of life, but he will sleep only a little while.

J. G. SMITH.

Died, of congestion of the lungs, in Kingsbury, La Porte Co., Ind., June 2d, 1861, MRS. MARY REYNOLDS, about sixty seven years of age.

There are those to the memory of whom chiseled monuments and engraved tablets are the merest trifles; and the highest encomiums in human language fail to express the moral excellence, the high esteem, and the affectionate christian regard in which they are held in life. Such was the christian mother in remembrance of whom these words are penned. An intelligent, sober-minded, faithful christian! In her household she was unceasingly dutiful as a wife and mother, and for many years she has as unceasingly adorned the doctrine of God her Savior.

She leaves a husband, (but cheered, thank God! with the precious faith that was the comfort of his wife in life and in the hour of death,) and a large family of children (some of whom are christians) who with a circle of friends hardly more limited than was her acquaintance, mourn her departure.

Blessed pilgrim! Who that knew thee in life, will not mourn for thee in death? But, thank God, we mourn not without hope! Blessed wast thou in life! Blessed art thou in death! for thine was the consolation of an immortal hope through Christ thy Savior.

Scarce has it fallen to my lot to pen an obituary notice of one for whom my heart has been more deeply moved than for the deceased. But though a mother in Israel has fallen under the dominion of death—one of the brightest stars of my late parish (and indeed of my christian acquaintance) has "gone out"—it is but for a moment, and why need I write! for her record is on high. God grant her mantle may fall on those who remain, and the sweet fragrance of her memory cheer us all until Jesus comes and we meet again.

She died strong in the faith of the speedy coming of the Lord to revive the dead and give immortality to all that are his. She desired, if could be, to live until that time, but was resigned and talked of her death with composure. A little before her death she exclaimed, "How long, dear Savior, O how long shall that glad hour delay!" Exhorted her husband and children to meet her in the kingdom of God. A discourse was delivered on the occasion of her death by Elder Kerr.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

P. B. M.

Died, at Syracuse, April 4th, 1861, after a short and painful sickness, EFFIA, the daughter and only remaining child of Francis S. and Charles McNulty.

She sleeps in Jesus, whom she had learned to love from the kind words and holy example of an affectionate mother, who had taught her to look for the blessed hope unto eternal life. The blow falls heavily upon the afflicted ones, and earth has no charms that can comfort their broken hearts; but, thank God, sin has made no wound that Heaven cannot heal. Then let the afflicted ones look away from earth, and anchor their hope in Jesus, who knows how to sympathize with us in all our trials; believing that all of these little ones, that have been scattered in a dark and cloudy day, will be brought from the land of the enemy, and gathered into the fold of Christ, where we can meet them if we are found faithful unto the end.

C. B. TURNER.

Died, in Torrington, Conn., June 21, 1861, Bro. LUTHER L. LEACH, aged thirty-nine years.

Bro. Leach has been for some years closely identified with the Advent faith, and was a great lover of all our truth as it is revealed in the Bible, more particularly those close, practical truths that develope the real, every day christian. No truth was too close for him. He lived a christian. His was a pilgrim's home. How we have feasted together around the family altar. The heart of the way-worn pilgrim was cheered by the hearty welcome and pleasant countenance of Brother and Sister Leach. But Bro. Leach has dropped to sleep, and oh! praise the Lord, he will soon awake, and, if faithful, we shall greet him. Yes, my brethren, it will be the same pleasant Bro. Leach that has so freely ministered to our wants and tried his utmost to make us comfortable. The church in Wrightville will greatly feel their loss; let us pray for them.

Bro. L. has left a wife and three children. Let us pray for her and her little ones. And the aged father—oh, may the good Lord bless him, is my prayer. Sister L., be faithful, and if you do not go to join your dear companion in a few days, he will come up,—yes, Luther is coming, glory to God. I expect, if faithful, to meet him soon. Sister, may God bless you Amen.

FOREIGN NEWS.

New York, July 1. The steamship Etna, from Liverpool 19, and Queenstown 20th, arrived this morning.

The Etna brings £236,000 in specie.

The Etna passed the Edinburg on the 20th, the Glasgow on the 27th, the City of Baltimore and Bavaria on the 30th.

Political news unimportant.

The fight for the championship of England, between Hurst, the Stallybridge infant, and Jem Mace, lasted fifty minutes. Mace was victor after only eight rounds.

The Hammonia had sailed for New York with £25,000 in specie.

The departure of the Great Eastern had been postponed until the 26th.

The House of Commons rejected the Bill for the abolition of church rates, by the casting vote of the Speaker.

Ship Medford was condemned at Fayal. The frigate Arianne sailed for an American station.

A French division under Admiral Raynaud, is about to sail. They will visit New York, Charleston, etc.

The London Times opposes the shipment of troops to Canada, and says that there is no apparent reason for it, and that America is more likely to regard it as a challenge than a precaution. The London Post defends the movement as a mere matter of routine and precaution, and says the troops were demanded by Sir Fenwick Williams.

The special correspondent of the Times, writing from New Orleans, under date of May 24th, says it is impossible to resist the conviction that the Southern Confederacy can only be conquered by means as disrespectable as those which subjugated Poland. The South professes a determination to resist so long as they can command a man and a dollar.

George Francis Train gave a Union dejeuner in London to numerous literary celebrities, etc., to commemorate the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill. Non-intervention was generally approved of by the speakers, but their sympathy was with the North.

The towns of Saurnarco and Begriano, in Naples, had revolted, and were taken by assault by the Italian troops. Twenty of the inhabitants were shot for having burned alive four Piedmontese. Both of the towns were subsequently burnt.

Spain will preserve strict neutrality in the American war.

There were some disturbances in Syria immediately after the French troops departed, but they were quickly suppressed.

Sir Henry Bulwer is dangerously ill.

The Vienna Press asserts that the Ministerial Council has resolved not to accept the address of the Hungarian Diet, and to dissolve the municipality of Pesth.

At an influential meeting at the residence of Lord Brougham, relative to the suppression of the Cuban slave trade, the conduct of Spain was denounced, and the government recommended to suspend diplomatic intercourse while the trade continues. It was also resolved that it is a convenient opportunity to obtain the co-operation of the government of the United States in the terms of a treaty to remonstrate with Spain.

It is asserted that the recognition of the Kingdom of Italy by France is an accomplished fact, although there has been no official account made of it. In an article on the subject published in the Patrie there is a paragraph which insinuates a belief that the Southern States of America will succeed in establishing a separate Republic.

A funeral dirge in honor of Cavour was celebrated at the Madeline Church in Paris. Cabinet ministers and men of note attended.

BARON RICASOLI.—Of the successor of Cavour in the Sardinian Ministry, the Turin correspondent of the London Times writes as follows:—

"Ricasoli is decidedly the best man to sit at the head of the government. He is a grand seignior by right of birth, wealth, habit and principle. It is impossible to reconcile the patriot and the conservative to greater perfection. He is one of the many in Italy anxious to dissociate national from social revolution; one of those Italians who wanted to conquer their country that they might constitute, not disorganize it.

Precisely because the Baron is the man of order and discipline, he is hated and dreaded by the out-and-out revolutionary party, even more than his great predecessor. The rage with which the journals of Guerrazzi and Mazzini fell foul of him, even before Cavour's clay was cold, shows the wisdom of the King's and the nation's choice. Ricasoli is the man, as the anarchists well know, to curb and chastise them. There is something in his cold, gray eyes, in his deeply furrowed face, in his spare, dried up, somewhat gaunt frame, that speak of undaunted courage and unswerving resolution. He somewhat reminds one of General Jackson, the man whose character the Americans summed up in the single appellation of 'Old Hickory.'"

OCCUPATION OF ST. DOMINGO BY SPAIN.—A most unsettled and threatening state of things exists in St Domingo The native population have taken up arms against the Spaniards in several of the country districts, and are determined to fight for their independence. Meanwhile disease has broken out among the Spanish soldiers, and several of them had died. The greatest consternation, it is said, prevails among the people of the city of St. Domingo. Save the new comers, scarcely any one is to be seen abroad, and a thick gloom overspreads the community. The military are carrying themselves most haughtily and offensively towards the black and colored people, and Santana and his accomplices are in the greatest alarm at the fruits which are already resulting from their treachery. The department of Ciboa is in complete insurrection The Spanish officers and soldiers boast that it is the intention of their Government to possess itself of the whole island of Hati This may be mere talk, but still it is worthy of being noted.

A LOOPHOLE IN THE BLOCKADE DISCOVERED.—It is stated that Sir Alexander Milne, the British Admiral, now cruising on the gulf station, detected an obscure loop hole about forty miles from Pensacola, at which vessels ran in and delivered supplies to the rebels. The Admiral is said to have expressed his fears that if the Southern harbors were not more completely blockaded he should be under the necessity of interfering in order that the prohibition on British vessels may be removed. This suggestion, according to the Times' correspondent, has induced the Powhatan, Brooklyn, Wyandotte, Crusader, Sabine and others of the fleet to move about in order to increase the efficiency of the blockade.

The Tribune's special Washington dispatch says The whole number of rebel troops in Virginia, by a rebel estimate, is 80,000, of which 55,000 are armed, but not over 20,000 can be concentrated at a given point. The largest number now at one point—Manassas Junction—is 80,000. There are 9000 choice men at Yorktown. The number at Richmond do not exceed 6000. Norfolk i regarded as impregnable. Gen. Beauregard's force is camped from Springfield to Fairfax Court House, mostly in a dense forest between the river and the Little River Turnpike.

FATAL TORNADO.—A late tornado at Campaign city and county, Ill., destroyed property of the value of nearly half a million dollars; while five persons were killed and a number seriously wounded.

COST OF THE WAR.—The Washington Republican undertakes to estimate the cost of the war for two years. The sum total is four hundred and fifty-seven million dollars.

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to GEORGE T. ADAMS, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

F. B. BERICK,
MILES GRANT, } Committee.
GEO. T. ADAMS,

Notice.

H. L. Hastings will commence a series of meetings in the Advent Chapel at West Hoosick, Rens. Co., N. Y., July 4th, at half-past ten o'clock, A. M., continuing through the week and over the following Sunday.

In behalf of the Church, JOHN AGAN.

Special Notice.

ELD. MILES GRANT was appointed by the Christian Publication Society to act as Travelling Agent for the Crisis. Monies on subscription, for publications, and on account may, therefore, be paid to him and he will account to the office. Payments made in this way to Bro. Grant will be acknowledged in the Crisis the same as if remitted to the undersigned. RUFUS WENDELL, Business Agent.

Notice.

Providence permitting, there will be a Tent Meeting held at Floyd, Floyd Co., Iowa, to commence July 11th, at 3 o'clock. Eld. Moses Chandler will be present to preach the word with the New England Mission Tent. Hope to see a general gathering of the brethren from abroad. PETER S. W. DARO.

Grove Meeting.

ELD. MILES GRANT will attend a meeting of days with the church in North Stanbridge, C. E., to be held in a pleasant grove, on the land of Bro. H. N. Currie, in the Stone Settlement, to commence July 11th, at 10 A M., and continue over the following Sabbath. A general attendance is solicited. Brethren, let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that it may prove to be for the glory of God and our good. C. P. DOW.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.6?; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. WENDELL, per order of Publishing Committee.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn. that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

For the Crisis.

Latter-Day Greetings.

In love, dear friends, I come to you;
Will you not search with me,
Within the record of God's word,
The page of prophecy?

All scripture doth instruction give,
May we in faith receive,
Rejecting nothing of God's truth,—
Lord, help, we would believe.

When Jesus came in God's due time
To save our fallen race,
'T was then as now—a little flock
Did this blest truth embrace.

Simeon and Anna waited long
To welcome "Israel's King";
Faith turned to sight, and may not we
Still to his promise cling?

He'll come again—in clouds descend—
Hasten thy coming, Lord!
Lift up your heads, ye waiting saints!
Look for your full reward.

The "world's great crisis" now is near,
These troublous times attest;
We live in days that "try men's souls,"
Is now by all confest.

The "hearts of men are failing" now,
God's judgments are abroad;
Oh! let the sinner, ere too late,
Seek refuge in the Lord.

The trumpet sounds! and angel hosts
Their missions swift fulfill;
Vials of wrath to some are given,—
On earth is done thy will.

Jerusalem, our longed for home,
Shall to this earth descend;
Our friends who sleep in Christ awake
To glory without end.

Jesus shall reign forevermore,—
Oh, let thy kingdom come!
Then ends all pain, and sin, and death,—
The victory is won! AMY.

Davenport, May 24th.

For the Crisis.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 3.

About 397 years before the introduction of the christian era, a prophet appears upon the stage, with his scathing rebukes to hypocritical priests, who offer polluted bread upon the Lord's table, and bring for sacrifice upon his altar the blind, the lame, and the sick, worthless to themselves, and unfit to present to an earthly governor—how much more, then, to the Ruler of the universe. He charges the whole nation with robbery; with the guilt of robbing God in tithes and offerings. Mingled with these searching reproofs, we find promises of one to come, who shall suddenly appear in the temple of the Lord, "even the messenger of the covenant." Before him, to prepare his way, a herald should be sent, in the spirit and power of Elijah. This prophet was none other than Malachi, cotemporary with Nehemiah, and the last of the ancient seers.

Almost 400 years have passed away without a revelation from God. Some, who fear God and respect his law, search with attentive mind the recordings [illegible] of the prophets, and there learn the fact that the time for the manifestation of the promised seed is at hand. With deep interest they watch for the predicted star, and when the wise men catch its first glimmering beam in the east, with joy they hasten toward the city of Jerusalem, and on their arrival, without first asking if the expected King is born, they, in the assurance of faith, inquire, where he may be found. The scribes and chief priests direct them to Bethlehem, as the place designated by the prophet Micah, and thither they turn their steps, and, to the little babe in a lowly manger, they present their costly gifts.

It was night, and shepherds were watching their flocks on Judea's plains. Suddenly an angel appeared to them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them. Upon their astonished ears fell the glad announcement, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord!" No sooner had he finished his message, than there appeared a multitude of the heavenly host, exclaiming, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men!" An aged father in Israel, who had ofttimes, with tear-dimmed eye, read the ancient predictions respecting a Coming One, who would be a blessing to all nations, and who "saw with joy the indications of his speedy manifestation to his people, was filled with gladness, when the Holy Spirit assured him that, before his departure from earth, his eyes should behold the Lord's Christ.

When the innocent babe was about five weeks old, his parents brought him to Jerusalem, to present him before the Lord in his temple, and offer the sacrifice required in the law of Moses. Then it was the Spirit, which had given good old Simeon promise of seeing the Messiah, directed him to enter the temple; and when the parents of Jesus brought him in, Simeon took him in his arms and blessed God, and said, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." Under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, he uttered strange predictions, (for such they seemed,) respecting the child, and the coming sorrows which should pierce his mother's heart. Nor was Simeon alone in his gladness, for there was one Anna, a prophetess, who was constant in her attendance upon the service of the temple—and she, too, heaven-directed—entered while Simeon was uttering his predictions; and she likewise gave thanks unto God for his precious gift, and spake of Christ to all those who were waiting for redemption in Jerusalem.

O, what a multitude of precious promises, [illegible] prophecies, and shadowy types cen-tre in that little helpless infant! How great the mystery of godliness—God manifest in the flesh! The Being who called the earth from chaos, and adorned it with everything that was pleasant to the eye, and good for food,—who formed man from the dust, and created the beasts of the field, the fish of the sea, and the fowls of the air,—who made the planetary system, and, throwing them into boundless space, bade them perform their appointed circuit, —that Being, I say, lies, a little smiling babe, in his mother's arms! Upon that child rests the destiny of the world! Not the world only with its then existing inhabitants, but all who have lived in the past, and who shall live in the future, must one day hear from those lips their final, irrevocable sentence! Far, far back in the annals of time, even to the eventful period when man had violated the first law of God, and incurred the penalty of death,—death, to be meted out "in the day" of trespass,—there it was a ransom was found, to keep man back from the pit. The "only begotten of the Father" comes forth to plead in behalf of the guilty. He will suffer the penalty. He will offer himself for a sin-offering, and open a way whereby man can be pardoned, sanctified, and redeemed from death. The Father's heart yearns over him who was created in His image. He accepts the ransom, and man is placed on probation, and given a promise respecting the Deliverer. From thence, on through distant ages, he is as a Lamb slain for man's transgression. The believer, who accepts this sacrifice, is saved from wrath thereby. M. D. W.

A Paraphrase

Of Paul's Earthly and Heavenly House, as a plain and beautiful figure, representing mortal and immortal life.—2 COR. 5: 1–10.

"For we know that if our earthly house [mortal life] of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house [immortal life] not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

For in this [mortal life] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [immortal life] which is from heaven.

If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked [dead, divested of mortal or immortal life.]

For we that are in this tabernacle [mortal life] do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, [dead] but clothed upon, (mark) that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing [immortal life] is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body [clothed with mortal life] we are absent [personally] from the Lord: [here let Paul himself explain.]

(For we walk by faith, not by sight.)

We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body [this mortal life] and to be present [personally] with the Lord.

Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, [laboring here, or being at the judgment seat, which he refers to in the next verse] we may be accepted of him.

It is plain that while Paul was sighing for the immortal state, being burthened with the mortal, the unclothed state, or death, had no charms for him."

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

Work Tried by Fire.

If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. 1 Cor. 3: 14, 15.

Some have understood from this passage that our good works were compared to gold, silver, precious stones; and that our bad works, or sins, were compared to hay, wood and stubble. They have therefore inferred that the bad deeds of the sinner will be burned up, yet he will be saved; a very comfortable doctrine to those who choose to spend their lives in sin.

This is entirely a misapplication of the text. What great loss would it be to have our sins all burned up? The apostle does not set so high a value upon sins as to try to terrify any one with the prospect of loosing them. There is nothing said in the text about any man's works. If a workman build a house, that house is his work; and if it is built of wood, we can easily conceive how it may be burned up and he suffer loss, though he were not burned up in it.

The apostle is using the figure of a building. Paul and Apollos and other ministers of the word are the laborers. The church is the building. Verse 9. "For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."

Paul reproves the church for being divided, and for calling themselves by the names of the laborers, Paul, Apollos, etc. He introduces the figure of husbandry or tillage, to prove that all the ministers were laborers together. Says he, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." He dismisses this figure by saying, Ye are God's husbandry, and immediately introduces another by saying, Ye are God's building.

Christ is the foundation. Paul, as a wise master-builder, hath laid this foundation at Corinth, by first preaching Christ to them. The materials which each minister builds upon the foundation are the persons that he introduces into the church. These should be comparable to gold, silver, precious stones—materials that will stand fire, persons that will abide the fiery trial of their faith, and will not be found hay, wood and stubble in the day of the Lord that shall burn as an oven. "For the day shall declare it." Verse 13.

With this view of the subject, we can see why the workman that builds in good materials—the minister instrumental in converting souls which prove true and faithful —will receive a reward. They will see the fruit of their labors in the kingdom of God, as Christ will also see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied. We can also see how that builder, who thinks he is bringing in fire-proof materials—true and persevering converts—will suffer loss, when he sees that his work will not stand the fire, and a share of his labor, at least, has been in vain. We can also see how he himself may be saved, because his intention was good, while his work—his unstable converts—are lost.

Let the ministry "take heed" how they build. And let the church see that they are "lively stones, built up a spiritual house," and let us all be careful that we do not "defile the temple of God," "for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—R. F. COTTRELL.—Advent Review.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way

While at home enlarged the eleven foot room in which I have lived for more than a year. In our village I had the privilege of listening to a discourse from "a very smart, new preacher," so called. He proposed to prove "the immortality of the soul." I went with Bro. Allen in the afternoon to hear him. His text was in Eccl. 12: 7. No other passage of scripture was mentioned by him to sustain his position; but he related stories to prove the immortality of the soul. Reference was made by him to a number of persons who had seen visions of angels, and had at those times the powers of mind, while the body was inactive. This was one of his proofs that a man had an "immortal soul" that could act without the assistance of the body; and these angels are what the soul saw. Then he tried to prove his position by stating what the soul had been known to do. One instance he related as follows, which he thought must convince any reasonable mind. It was a story of "a sick woman, who saw a heavy log roll over upon her only son. She sprang from her sick bed, and lifted the log off of the boy without help from any one. The next day two men who tried together to lift the same log could not do so. The woman was weak and sick: her body was not sufficient for the task, but the task was accomplished, and it was the soul that had done it." This was his "last and strongest proof," and he supposed that no "reasonable mind would doubt the facts," saying, in conclusion, that "error was giving way before light and truth;" then closed his discourse, seeming to be much exhausted by his great effort.

This great bulk of mind belonged to a young man just out of college. He was called very smart by his friends. That was the first sermon I have heard in our village for two years. In less than three hours God opened the way for me to speak on the same subject. I had but ten minutes notice. The hall was filled. My text was Sam. 15: 24, showing old Saul's character, and that of the old witch who preached the same doctrine of "the immortality of the soul," which was all a lie and a deception. I felt so indignant at this miserable doctrine of the Devil, that I could not help speaking my faith out plainer than ever before, publicly, in our village,—the different preachers being present. Did not block my wheels. I am astonished at the darkness of this age on Bible truth. If God does not work a miracle, the Devil will have most of the people, preachers and all, in the belief of his first lie to mankind, which was, "Thou shalt not surely die" if you do disobey God and sin.

What can be done to make the people see this trick of the Devil to deceive the world, by becoming Antichrist. I never saw it as I do now. I meant to stay at home through fishing time, but men seemed to be worth more than fishes; so I started off, leaving my wife to get the kitchen finished, that she might not have to do her work in an eleven foot room another summer. Stayed until I was fifty dollars in debt, got the blues, and started for East Boston. Had a good season with the church there. Whilst there, I felt impressed to ask a young man if God had not been calling him to preach the gospel. He, being almost a stranger to me and my manners, seemed to be a little dashed at first, but he acknowledged that such was the case. I wished him to pray over it one week, and write me the result, and, if he wanted, I could find him plenty of work that he could do to advantage. The work is great, but few are willing to take this "Last Day Cross," and hold up the truth that will show the track of the Devil. I left this subject there.

Went to East Kingston; found brother White doing well; had a good time. Went to Exeter; found the church in a good state. It had become more independent of the outside influences that had held them in check for years. Had a blessed good time with them. Told Bro. Haley about the young man in East Boston, and what I expected, and wished him to go to Exeter, first, as they had received two new beginners, who are doing well. I thought their hand was in. Went to Portsmouth, a favorite spot for me. Found Bro. Pratt at the depot with an umbrella. Was glad to see him in good health enough to be out in a rainy day. I understand he has been better since he has been to a reasonable doctor, who advised him to eat good wholesome meat well seasoned, which makes blood, bone and muscle, and in fact a man, and not follow the flimsy advice of "all dough and no salt in." I find that such are always sick, and pale, and feverish, and stabbing at every body that pretends to have common sense enough to know what agrees with them, without going to a dough doctor, and soaking in cold water until they are as white as a water lily, and as weak as a reed, and paying eight dollars a week for being "turned into a cabbage head." I have as good right to speak once through this paper as those much younger than I am, who are always croaking at salt and meat eaters. I hope God will bless you, Bro. Pratt, with health and strength, that you may continue to sound truth, for we can't spare such men at such a time as this. While at Portsmouth, I received a letter from the young man referred to above. After praying a week, he felt it to be his duty to go into the field; and I sent his letter to Bro. Haley, at Exeter, and received an answer to send the young man there the third Sabbath in June, which I hope and expect will prove a blessing to him.

June 2d at Kennebunk. The Lord worked here Sunday evening. Three started to serve God; two were brothers. This had a good effect. They were very hard cases, judging from their looks and words. But God is willing to hear such. Stayed at the depot on Monday evening; had a good free time; good signs, but could not stop longer. Went forty miles to Barnsted; stayed two days; gave them some strong food for sectarians, to put down "immortal soulism." I hope it will purge out that old leaven. Next to Pittsfield. Had a meeting at Bro. Emerson's pond schoolhouse. One man broke down under the truth, which gave a fervor to the meeting after he confessed, and three others spoke. Three women walked to the meeting a distance of five or six miles, after doing a day's work, and returned in the same manner at the close of the service. They love [illegible] the present truth, having embraced it when I was there last fall. One was a young convert, the last one that came forward for prayers on the last evening. I did not recollect her until Bro. Emerson stated the fact. This is the third case of the kind I have had my attention called to on this track that started last fall. Glad to see them all holding on, if I had forgotten them.

Next to Loudon Ridge, the old battle-field of last year. Found every one living their religion out straight, although an ungodly, wicked warfare was commenced against them by professors that could not forge lies enough about the work and workmen. They get others to help them out of the place. Lying professors are plenty in this place since the work of God broke out with power. But they all stand, thank God, and the best of it is, a goodly number of young men have been soundly converted. Since I was there before their friendship for me has increased, and also the number of my friends. The malicious lies told about me and this people, after I left last fall, did not stop the work, nor the people from coming out to hear on Sunday, for they came from all quarters, some of them thirty-seven miles. Had a good time telling them the truth, and giving them the signs of the times, which took effect. But few of the liars and hypocrites were out. We had enough without them. Another young man came in with a "flag of truce" on Sunday evening, and laid down his arms of rebellion; he was pardoned that evening and went home happy in the love of God. It did us all good to hear him "praise the Lord." He spoke last evening with all confidence, knowing God had forgiven his sins. Stopped four days. The last day baptized three young men at five P. M. Had one more old-fashioned, powerful meeting. Every one of the converts are alive, and will live in spite of the ungodly opposition brought to bear upon them by a few backsliders and hypocrites banding together, and getting a pretended preacher of the same stamp to carry out their purposes, who has been turned out of, or rejected by, the conference for misconduct. Just the character to preach for that class of opposers. But God is now showing who is on the side of truth.

Next went to Northwood Narrows. Found a few believers. Full house; had a good time presenting the truth and receiving blessings. Received one dollar and sixty cents collection for preaching three times on Sunday. So we see how well the world likes the truth, also those that pretend to. Next to Exeter. Found Bro. Burbank there, the young man referred to above. He gave good satisfaction to those that heard God's truth. This was the first appointment for him to preach. He is satisfied God has called him into the field to preach. He says he had the impression I should ask him to go out into the field, and if I did, it was to be a sign to him that his previous impressions were from the Lord. This is somewhat singular, as we were almost strangers, having spoken together but two or three times. God's ways are peculiar when he calls. Next to Portsmouth, to rest and visit a few of my good friends. Bro. Pratt is getting better. He still eats meat. (Good.) Bro. Campbell staid with us two days, and we had a good time talking over our hope, visiting the Navy Yard and Fort, and seeing the preparations to slaughter men, which speak to us that "the nations are angry" and the great day is near. I am still willing to bear the name of a Second Advent believer, although some of our former brethren have got ashamed of this name. Such are welcome to their honor of leaving, only let us enjoy our privilege of this cross without blackening us by calling us monkeys and not fit to carry food to bears, and other worse speeches, publicly. Never mind. God still blesses the truth. H. MUNGER.

Selections.

Luther's Early Life.

Luther was sent to school at Magdeburg, at the age of fourteen. He was without friends and protectors, and trembled in the presence of his masters. In his play-hours, he and some children, as poor as himself, with difficulty begged their bread. "I was accustomed," says he, "with my companions, to beg a little food to supply our wants. One day, about Christmas time, we were all going through the neighboring villages, from house to house, singing in concert the usual carols on the infant Jesus at Bethlehem. We stopped in front of a peasant's house which stood detached from the rest, at the extremety of the village. The peasant hearing us sing our Christmas carols, came out with some food, which he meant to give us, and asked, in a rough, loud voice, 'Where are you, boys?' Terrified at these words, we ran away as fast as we could. We had no reason to fear, for the peasant offered us this assistance in kindness; but our hearts had no doubt become fearful from the threats and tyranny which the masters then used toward their scholars, so that we were seized with sudden fright. At last, however, as the peasant still continued to call after us, we stopped, forgot our fears, ran to him, and received the food that he had offered us. It is thus," adds Luther, "that we tremble and flee when our conscience is guilty and alarmed: then we are afraid even of the help that is offered us, and of those who are our friends and wish to do us good."

Afterwards, at Eisenach, where he was at school, he was obliged, as at Magdeburg, to go with his schoolfellows and sing in the streets, to earn a morsel of bread. Often, instead of bread, the poor boy received nothing but harsh words. One day in particular, after having been repulsed from three houses, he was about to return fasting to his lodgings, when, having reached the square St. George, he stood before the house of an honest citizen, motionless, and lost in painful reflections. Must he, for want of bread, give up his studies, and go and work with his father in the mines of Mansfield? Suddenly a door opens; a woman appears on the threshhold—it is the wife of Conrad Cotta. Her name was Ursula. The chronicles of Eisenach call her "the pious Shunamite," in remembrance of her who so earnestly entreated the prophet Elijah to eat bread with her. This christian Shunamite had more than once remarked young Martin in the assemblies of the faithful: she had been affected by the sweetness of his voice and apparent devotion. She had heard the harsh words with which the poor scholar had been repulsed. She saw him overwhelmed with sorrow before her door; she came to his assistance, beckoned him to enter, and supplied his urgent wants. He was for a long time supported by this benevolent family, and ever gratefully remembered their kindness.

Many years after, Luther said, "Do not despise those boys who try to earn their bread by chanting before your door—'bread for the love of God'—panem propter Deum. I have done the same."—Quaint Sayings and Doings.

Head-Teaching and Heart-Teaching.

In one of our city Sunday-Schools I noticed, some time since, a teacher whose intellectual attainments were understood to be of no mean order. But in his class was only a single scholar, and she, an intelligent young lady, was gazing listlessly about the room, with no seeming interest in the exercise of the hour. The teacher was in the wall corner of the pew before her. There, lolling indolently, with one arm over the back of the bench, and one leg stretched out on the seat he occupied, with face upturned and eyes on the ceiling, he was apparently sermonizing to his own great edification and entire approval. It was evidently no cause of annoyance to him that he had but one hearer, and she unmindful of all he said. His exposition of the lesson was beyond a doubt thoroughly logical and orthodox, and with a full conviction of this he was quite content.

I learned, on inquiry, that not long before, that teacher had been put in charge of an interesting class of some twenty young ladies. He had brought to his task all the powers of a well-trained mind, and nothing more. His idea of Sabbath School teaching was limited to an hour's preachment. He had no conception of a union of teacher and scholar in a common work, of the joining of head and heart in the earnest study of God's word. He was to talk. His scholars could listen or not, as they chose. His part was to be performed, without thought or responsibility as to theirs. One by one, his class had dropped away, until only the least of the twenty remained. Still the teacher failed to comprehend his own unfitness for the position he had assumed, or to take any blame to himself for the dispersion of his charge. Such as he had, he had freely given to his class, but he was sadly lacking in spiritual, although not in mental qualifications for his place.

In the same school, I observed another class of widely different appearance. The scholars filled a long pew, and from the corners were pressing toward the centre, where their teacher was leaning over the back of the bench before them. His knees were on the seat. His face was brought forward toward his class. His countenance was lighted with animation, and his eyes seemed to meet those of all before him. He was manifestly of the class, not over it, having common interests and warmests sympathy with his pupils. He talked not at, but with them. On their part was no listless indifference, no impatient restlessness; on his, no carelessness no selfish abstraction. It was eviden that the tap of the bell to close the morning session would be an unwelcome sound to that interested group.

This teacher I found had been trained for his present place in the mission school. He had there learned the art of teaching, and ascertained how to fix the attention of those whom he essayed to instruct. But his prime advantage over his neighbor across the room, was in the soul-absorbing interest he felt in the work to which he had given himself. His anxiety was for the spiritual profit of his pupils. His heart's desire and prayer to God for his scholars was that all might be saved, and he sought untiringly to win them to Jesus. His heart, not his head, merely, was enlisted in his endeavor, and this was the true secret of his marvellous power.

Mr. Spurgeon says, "Let a man be never so ignorant, still if his heart be full of love to a cause, he becomes a powerful man for that object, because he has heart power, heart force. HEART IS POWER!"—Vigilarius, in Sunday School World.

GOD'S PROVIDENCE.—"Consider not only one single act of Providence, but the whole scheme, to make a conclusion." The motions of his eyes are various, but all end in discoveries of his strength. Men do not argue from one single proposition, but draw the conclusion from several propositions knit together. It is by such a spiritual logic we are to make our conclusions from the ways of Providence. As in reading Scripture, if we take not the whole period, we may make, not only nonsense, but blasphemy, as in that of the Psalmist, "Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in unrighteousness." If a man should read only, "Thou art not a God," and make a full stop there, it would be blasphemy; but reading the whole verse, it is excellent sense, and an honorable declaration of God's holiness. Such errors will be committed in reading the books of Providence, if we fix our eyes only in one place, and make a full stop where God hath not made any. We judge not of a picture by the first draught, but the last lines; not by one shadow or color, but by the whole composure. The wisdom of God is best judged of by the view of the harmony of Providence. The single threads of Providence may seem very weak or knotty or uneven, and seem to administer just occasion of censure; but will it not as much raise the admiration to see them all woven into a curious piece of branched work? Consider, therefore, God's ways of working; but fully judge nothing till the conclusion, for that is to judge before the time. Judge not then of Providence by the first appearance; God may so lose the glory of his work, and you the comfort.—Charnock.

Family Government.

"Well, Sarah, I declare! you are the worst girl I know of in the whole country!"

"Why, mother! what have I done?"

"See there! how you have spilled water in my pantry! get out of my sight; I cannot bear to look upon you—you careless girl!"

"Well, mother! I couldn't help it."

"Mrs. A., the mother, is a very worthy woman, but very ignorant of the art of family government. Sarah, her daughter, is a heedless girl of ten years. She is very much disposed to remove things out of their proper places, and seldom stops to put them in again. On the occasion referred to above, she had been seen to put water into the tea-kettle, and had very carelessly spilled a considerable portion of it on the pantry floor. After the above conversation, which, on the part of the mother, sounded most like successive claps of thunder on the ears of her daughter, Sarah escaped in a pouting manner, into an adjourning room, and her mother wiped up the slops in the pantry.

Well, thought I, my dear Mrs. A., if that is the way you treat your daughter, you will probably find it necessary to wipe after her a great many times more, if you both live. Such family government, as here set forth, seems to me to be liable to several serious objections.

The reproof was too boisterous. Children can never be frightened into a knowledge of error, or into conviction of crime. It is their judment, and their taste for neatness and order, which need training, and not their ears.

It was too unreasonable. The child was, indeed, careless; but she had done nothing to merit the title of "the worst girl in the country." Children are sensible of injustice, and very soon find it diffiout to respect those who unjustly treat them.

It was too passionate. The mother seemed to be boiling over with displeasure and disgust, and, under this excitement, she despised her darling child; the very same that in a very short time afterwards, when the storm had blown by she was ready to embrace in her arms as almost the very image of perfection.

It was inefficient. Sarah retired, under the idea that her mother was excited for a very little thing, which she could not help. Thus she blamed her mother, and acquitted herself.

Mrs. B. is another mother, in the same neighborhood. Mrs. A. wonders why Mrs. B. has so very good children. Says Mrs. A., "I talk a great deal more to my children than Mrs. B. does. I frequently scold them most severely, and I sometimes whip them, until I think they will never disobey me again. And yet, how noisy, careless, disobedient, my children are! Mrs. B. says but little to her children, and yet her family move like clock-work. Order, neatness, and harmony abound, and I never heard of her whipping them at all." 'Tis even so! And I should like to tell Mrs. A. the great cause of her failure. She has not yet learned to govern herself, and it is not therefore surprising that her family is poorly governed.

Mrs. B. has a daughter, Catherine, about the same age with the daughter of Mrs. A. Not long since Catherine committed in a hurry, the same act of carelessness as above related, and Mrs. B's treatment of it reveals her secret of family-government.

"Catherine, my daughter, can you tell me how this water came on the floor?"

"I suppose, mother, I must have spilled it a few moments ago, when I filled the tea-kettle."

"Why did you not wipe it up, my daughter?"

"I intended to return, and do so; but on getting engaged on something else, I forgot it."

"Well, my daughter, when you do wrong you should try to repair it to the best of your ability, and as soon as possible. Get the mop and wipe it up, and try not to do so again."

Catherine immediately does as she is bid; remarking, "I will try and be more careful another time.

Mrs. A. may be found in almost every community. Mrs. B., though perhaps a more rare personage, yet graces many families in our land.—British Mother's Journal.

Pointed Sermons.

Where the point, the pith, the marrow, the flint, the fire, the hammer?—O where? This generalizing or preaching to somebody way off at the North Pole or in the Moon—what avail? How did the prophet Nathan preach to David? "Thou art the man,"—yes, thou art the man.

John Newton remarks on pointless sermons thus:—"Many sermons, ingenious to their kind, may be compared to a letter put in the post-office without a direction. It is addressed to nobody, it is owned by nobody, and if a hundred people were to read it, not one of them would think himself concerned in the contents. Such a sermon, whatever excellencies it may have, lacks the chief requisite of a sermon. It is like a sword which has a polished blade, a jeweled hilt, and a gorgeous scabbard, but yet will not cut, and, therefore, to all real use, is no sword. The truth properly presented, has an edge, it pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, it is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

☞ Paul was a christian, a thorough christian; Peter was a christian, a thorough christian; but if we watch the history or biography of each of these inspired men, we shall see that grace consecrated, not quenched, in each his personal peculiarity and idiosyncrasy of character. For instance Peter, impetuous, passionate, hasty, always ready to explode the instant that the slightest spark was applied; always first to speak, first to draw his sword, and first to run away when there was danger, and impetuous in all. Paul's was gigantic energy, overwhelming power, irresistible reasoning; but in each was still the devoted, decided, and deeply impressed christian. John was full of all that was lovely and amiable, silent, that Peter only might speak; and yet, when people looked at John and Peter, heard Peter's eloquence, saw John's countenance, they took notice that both of them had been with Jesus; the silence of the one as expressive as the eloquence of the other.

THE BURNT TRACT.—"You need not leave your tracts here," said a Roman Catholic, angrily, to a colporter in France; "if you do, I give you fair warning that I shall burn them." The book-hawker, however, left a tract, the man repeating his statement that it should certainly be burned.

A year passed away, and the colporter found himself in the same part of the country again. He remembered the past circumstance, and felt anxious to know what had become of the violent man who refused his tracts. What was his astonishment to find that with him all things had become new! The man kept his promise, and burned the tract; but, as he watched it slowly consuming in the fire, one sentence caught his eye, standing out in strong relief: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." These words proved the means of his conversion.

SINGING AND GIVING.—Old Aunt Dinah was a shouting colored saint, who would sing at the top of her voice, and cry Glory! above all the rest. It was common at the missionary prayer meetings of the colored people, to take up a collection while singing the hymn,

"Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel,"

in the midst of which Aunt Dinah always threw her head back, shut up her eyes and sang away lustily till the plate had gone by. The sable collector observed her habit, and one night stopped when he came to her, and said bluntly, "Look a 'here, Aunt Dinah! you needn't be singing 'Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel,' if you doesn't give nothin' to make it fly."

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All persons desiring to receive the Crisis, or any of the Publications on sale at this office, should always state distinctly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed, and direct their communications and remittances to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid quarterly, at the office where it is received, will [illegible] cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and [illegible] cents to any other part of the United States.

[illegible] Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i.e., [illegible] numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

Latter-Day Greetings.

In love, dear friends, I come to you;
Will you not search with me,
Within the record of God's word,
The page of prophecy?

All scripture doth instruction give,
May we in faith receive,
Rejecting nothing of God's truth,—
Lord, help, we would believe.

When Jesus came in God's due time
To save our fallen race,
'T was then as now—a little flock
Did this blest truth embrace.

Simeon and Anna waited long
To welcome "Israel's King";
Faith turned to sight, and may not we
Still to his promise cling?

He'll come again—in clouds descend—
Hasten thy coming, Lord!
Lift up your heads, ye waiting saints!
Look for your full reward.

The "world's great crisis" now is near,
These troublous times attest;
We live in days that "try men's souls,"
'Is now by all confest.

The "hearts of men are failing" now,
God's judgments are abroad;
Oh! let the sinner, ere too late,
Seek refuge in the Lord.

The trumpet sounds! and angel hosts
Their missions swift fulfill;
Vials of wrath to some are given,—
On earth is done thy will.

Jerusalem, our longed for home,
Shall to this earth descend;
Our friends who sleep in Christ awake
To glory without end.

Jesus shall reign forevermore,—
Oh, let thy kingdom come!
Then ends all pain, and sin, and death,—
The victory is won! Amy

The Hope of the Church.—No. 3.

About 397 years before the introduction of the christian era, a prophet appears upon the stage, with his scathing robukes to hypocritical priests, who offer polluted bread upon the Lord's table, and bring for sacrifice upon his altar the blind, the lame, and the sick, worthless to themselves, and unfit to present to an earthly governor—how much more, then, to the Ruler of the universe. He charges the whole nation with robbery; with the guilt of robbing God in tithes and offerings. Mingled with these searching reproofs, we find promises of one to come, who shall suddenly appear in the temple of the Lord, "even the messenger of the covenant." Before him, to prepare his way, a herald should be sent, in the spirit and power of Elijah. This prophet was none other than Malachi, cotemporary with Nehemiah, and the last of the ancient seers.

Almost 400 years have passed away without a revelation from God. Some, who fear God and respect his law, search with attentive mind the recordings [illegible] of the prophets, and there learn the fact that the time for the manifestation of the promised seed is at hand. With deep interest they watch for the predicted star, and when the wise men catch its first glimmering beam in the east, with joy they hasten toward the city of Jerusalem, and on their arrival, without first asking if the expected King is born, they, in the assurance of faith, inquire, where he may be found. The scribes and chief priests direct them to Bethlehem, as the place designated by the prophet Micah, and thither they turn their steps, and, to the little babe in a lowly manger, they present their costly gifts.

It was night, and shepherds were watching their flocks on Judea's plains. Suddenly an angel appeared to them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them. Upon their astonished ears fell the glad announcement, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord!" No sooner had he finished his message, than there appeared a multitude of the heavenly host, exclaiming, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men!" An aged father in Israel, who had ofttimes, with tear-dimmed eye, read the ancient predictions respecting a Coming One, who would be a blessing to all nations, and who saw with joy the indications of his speedy manifestation to his people, was filled with gladness, when the Holy Spirit assured him that, before his departure from earth, his eyes should behold the Lord's Christ.

When the innocent babe was about five weeks old, his parents brought him to Jerusalem, to present him before the Lord in his temple, and offer the sacrifice required in the law of Moses. Then it was the Spirit, which had given good old Simeon promise of seeing the Messiah, directed him to enter the temple; and when the parents of Jesus brought him in, Simeon took him in his arms and blessed God, and said, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." Under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, he uttered strange predictions, (for such they seemed,) respecting the child, and the coming sorrows which should pierce his mother's heart. Nor was Simeon alone in his gladness, for there was one Anna, a prophetess, who was constant in her attendance upon the service of the temple—and she, too, heaven-directed—entered while Simeon was uttering his predictions; and she likewise gave thanks unto God for his precious gift, and spake of Christ to all those who were waiting for redemption in Jerusalem. [illegible] what a multitude of precious [illegible] [illegible] prophecies, and shadowy types [illegible] tre in that little helpless infant! How great the mystery of godliness—God manifest in the flesh! The Being who called the earth from chaos, and adorned it with everything that was pleasant to the eye, and good for food,—who formed man from the dust, and created the beasts of the field, the fish of the sea, and the fowls of the air,—who made the planetary system, and, throwing them into boundless space, bade them perform their appointed circuit, —that Being, I say, lies, a little smiling babe, in his mother's arms! Upon that child rests the destiny of the world! Not the world only with its then existing inhabitants, but all who have lived in the past, and who shall live in the future, must one day hear from those lips their final, irrevocable sentence! Far, far back in the annals of time, even to the eventful period when man had violated the first law of God, and incurred the penalty of death,—death, to be meted out "in the day" of trespass,—there it was a ransom was found, to keep man back from the pit. The "only begotten of the Father" comes forth to plead in behalf of the guilty. He will suffer the penalty. He will offer himself for a sin-offering, and open a way whereby man can be pardoned, sanctified, and redeemed from death. The Father's heart yearns over him who was created in His image. He accepts the ransom, and man is placed on probation, and given a promise respecting the Deliverer. From thence, on through distant ages, he is as a Lamb slain for man's transgression. The believer, who accepts this sacrifice, is saved from wrath thereby. M. D. W.

A Paraphrase

Of Paul's Earthly and Heavenly House, as a plain and beautiful figure, representing mortal and immortal life.—2 Cor. 5: 1-10.

"For we know that if our earthly house [mortal life] of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house [immortal life] not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

For in this [mortal life] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [immortal life] which is from heaven.

If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked [dead, divested of mortal or immortal life]

For we that are in this tabernacle [mortal life] do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, [dead] but clothed upon. (mark) that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing [immortal life] is God, how [illegible] also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body [clothed with mortal life] we are absent [personally] from the Lord: [here let Paul himself explain.]

(For we walk by faith, not by sight.)

We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body [this mortal life] and to be present [personally] with the Lord.

Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, [laboring here, or being at the judgment seat, which he refers to in the next verse] we may be accepted of him.

It is plain that while Paul was sighing for the immortal state, being burthened with the mortal, the unclothed state, or death, had no charms for him."

Work Tried by Fire.

If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. 1 Cor. 3: 14, 15.

Some have understood from this passage that our good works were compared to gold, silver, precious stones; and that our bad works, or sins, were compared to hay, wood and stubble. They have therefore inferred that the bad deeds of the sinner will be burned up, yet he will be saved; a very comfortable doctrine to those who choose to spend their lives in sin.

This is entirely a misapplication of the text. What great loss would it be to have our sins all burned up? The apostle does not set so high a value upon sins as to try to terrify any one with the prospect of loosing them. There is nothing said in the text about any man's works. If a workman build a house, that house is his work; and if it is built of wood, we can easily conceive how it may be burned up and he suffer loss, though he were not burned up in it.

The apostle is using the figure of a building. Paul and Apollos and other ministers of the word are the laborers. The church is the building. Verse 9. "For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."

Paul reproves the church for being divided, and for calling themselves by the names of the laborers, Paul, Apollos, etc. He introduces the figure of husbandry or tillage, to prove that all the ministers were laborers together. Says he, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." He dismisses this figure by saying, Ye are God's husbandry, and immediately introduces another by saying, Ye are God's building. [illegible] Christ is the foundation. Paul, as a wise master-builder, had laid this foundation at Corinth, by first preaching Christ to them. The materials which each minister builds upon the foundation are the persons that he introduces into the church. These should be comparable to gold, silver, precious stones—materials that will stand fire, persons that will abide the fiery trial of their faith, and will not be found hay, wood and stubble in the day of the Lord that shall burn as an oven. "For the day shall declare it." Verse 13.

With this view of the subject, we can see why the workman that builds in good materials—the minister instrumental in converting souls which prove true and faithful—will receive a reward. They will see the fruit of their labors in the kingdom of God, as Christ will also see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied. We can also see how that builder, who thinks he is bringing in fire-proof materials—true and persevering converts—will suffer loss, when he sees that his work will not stand the fire, and a share of his labor, at least, has been in vain. We can also see how he himself may be saved, because his intention was good, while his work—his unstable converts—are lost.

Let the ministry "take heed" how they build. And let the church see that they are, "lively stones, built up a spiritual house," and let us all be careful that we do not "defile the temple of God," "for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—R. F. Cottrell.—Advent Review.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way

While at home enlarged the eleven foot room in which I have lived for more than a year. In our village I had the privilege of listening to a discourse from "a very smart, new preacher," so called. He proposed to prove "the immortality of the soul." I went with Bro. Allen in the afternoon to hear him. His text was in Eccl. 12: 7. No other passage of scripture was mentioned by him to sustain his position; but he related stories to prove the immortality of the soul. Reference was made by him to a number of persons who had seen visions of angels, and had at those times the powers of mind, while the body was inactive. This was one of his proofs that a man had an "immortal soul" that could act without the assistance of the body; and these angels are what the soul saw. Then he tried to prove his position by stating what the soul had been known to do. One instance he related as follows, which he thought must convince any reasonable mind. It was a story of "a sick woman, who saw a heavy log roll over upon her only son. She sprang from her sick bed, and lifted the log off of the boy without help from any one. The next day two men who tried together to lift the same log could not do so. The woman was weak and sick: her body was not sufficient for the task, but the task was accomplished, and it was the soul that had done it." This was his "last and strongest proof," and he supposed that no "reasonable mind would doubt the facts," saying, in conclusion, that "error was giving way before light and truth;" then closed his discourse, seeming to be much exhausted by his great effort.

This great bulk of mind belonged to a young man just out of college. He was called very smart by his friends. That was the first sermon I have heard in our village for two years. In less than three hours God opened the way for me to speak on the same subject. I had but ten minutes notice. The hall was filled. My text was Sam. 15: 24, showing old Saul's character, and that of the old witch who preached the same doctrine of "the immortality of the soul," which was all a lie and a deception. I felt so indignant at this miserable doctrine of the Devil, that I could not help speaking my faith out plainer than ever before, publicly, in our village,—the different preachers being present. Did not block my wheels. I am astonished at the darkness of this age on Bible truth. If God does not work a miracle, the Devil will have most of the people, preachers and all, in the belief of his first lie to mankind, which was, "Thou shalt not surely die" if you do disobey God and sin.

What can be done to make the people see this trick of the Devil to deceive the world, by becoming Antichrist. I never saw it as I do now. I meant to stay at home through fishing time, but men seemed to be worth more than fishes; so I started off, leaving my wife to get the kitchen finished, that she might not have to do her work in an eleven foot room another summer. Stayed until I was fifty dollars in debt, got the blues, and started for East Boston. Had a good season with the church there. Whilst there, I felt impressed to ask a young man if God had not been calling him to preach the gospel. He, being almost a stranger to me and my manners, seemed to be a little dashed at first, but he acknowledged that such was the case. I wished him to pray over it one week, and write me the result, and, if he wanted, I could find him plenty of work that he could do to advantage. The work is great, but few are willing to take this "Last Day Cross," and hold up the truth that will show the track of the Devil. I left this subject there.

Went to East Kingston; found brother White doing well; had a good time. Went to Exeter; found the church in a good state. It had become more independent of the outside influences that had held them in check for years. Had a blessed good time with them. Told Bro. Haley about the young man in East Boston, and what I expected, and wished him to go to Exeter, first, as they had received two new beginners, who are doing well. I thought their hand was in. Went to Portsmouth, a favorite spot for me. Found Bro. Pratt at the depot with an umbrella. Was glad to see him in good health enough to be out in a rainy day. I understand he has been better since he has been to a reasonable doctor, who advised him to eat good wholesome meat well seasoned, which makes blood, bone and muscle, and in fact a man, and not follow the flimsy advice of "all dough and no salt in." I find that such are always sick, and pale, and feverish, and stabbing at every body that pretends to have common sense enough to know what agrees with them, without going to a dough doctor, and soaking in cold water until they are as white as a water lily, and as weak as a reed, and paying eight dollars a week for being "turned into a cabbage head." I have as good right to speak once through this paper as those much younger than I am, who are always croaking at salt and meat eaters. I hope God will bless you, Bro. Pratt, with health and strength, that you may continue to sound truth, for we can't spare such men at such a time as this. While at Portsmouth, I received a letter from the young man referred to above. After praying a week, he felt it to be his duty to go into the field; and I sent his letter to Bro. Haley, at Exeter, and received an answer to send the young man there the third Sabbath in June, which I hope and expect will prove a blessing to him.

June 2d at Kennebunk. The Lord worked here Sunday evening. Three started to serve God; two were brothers. This had a good effect. They were very hard cases, judging from their looks and words. But God is willing to hear such. Stayed at the depot on Monday evening; had a good free time; good signs, but could not stop longer. Went forty miles to Barnsted; stayed two days; gave them some strong food for sectarians, to put down "immortal soulism." I hope it will purge out that old leaven. Next to Pittsfield. Had a meeting at Bro. Emerson's pond schoolhouse. One man broke down under the truth, which gave a fervor to the meeting after he confessed, and three others spoke. Three women walked to the meeting a distance of five or six miles, after doing a day's work, and returned in the same manner at the close of the service. They love [illegible] the present truth, having embraced it when I was there last fall. One was a young convert, the last one that came forward for prayers on the last evening. I did not recollect her until Bro. Emerson stated the fact. This is the third case of the kind I have had my attention called to on this track that started last fall. Glad to see them all holding on, if I had forgotten them.

Next to Loudon Ridge, the old battlefield of last year. Found every one living their religion out straight, although an ungodly, wicked warfare was commenced against them by professors that could not forge lies enough about the work and workmen. They get others to help them out of the place. Lying professors are plenty in this place since the work of God broke out with power. But they all stand, thank God, and the best of it is, a goodly number of young men have been soundly converted. Since I was there before their friendship for me has increased, and also the number of my friends. The malicious lies told about me and this people, after I left last fall, did not stop the work, nor the people from coming out to hear on Sunday, for they came from all quarters, some of them thirty-seven miles. Had a good time telling them the truth, and giving them the signs of the times, which took effect. But few of the liars and hypocrites were out. We had enough without them. Another young man came in with a "flag of truce" on Sunday evening, and laid down his arms of rebellion; he was pardoned that evening and went home happy in the love of God. It did us all good to hear him "praise the Lord." He spoke last evening with all confidence, knowing God had forgiven his sins. Stopped four days. The last day baptized three young men at five P. M. Had one more old-fashioned, powerful meeting. Every one of the converts are alive, and will live in spite of the ungodly opposition brought to bear upon them by a few backsliders and hypocrites banding together, and getting a pretended preacher of the same stamp to carry out their purposes, who has been turned out of, or rejected by, the conference for misconduct. Just the character to preach for that class of opposers. But God is now showing who is on the side of truth.

Next went to Northwood Narrows. Found a few believers. Full house; had a good time presenting the truth and receiving blessings. Received one dollar and sixty cents collection for preaching three times on Sunday. So we see how well the world likes the truth, also those that pretend to. Next to Exeter. Found Bro. Burbank there, the young man referred to above. He gave good satisfaction to those that heard God's truth. This was the first appointment for him to preach. He is satisfied God has called him into the field to preach. He says he had the impression I should ask him to go out into the field, and if I did, it was to be a sign to him that his previous impressions were from the Lord. This is somewhat singular, as we were almost strangers, having spoken together but two or three times. God's ways are peculiar when he calls. Next to Portsmouth, to rest and visit a few of my good friends. Bro. Pratt is getting better. He still eats meat. (Good.) Bro. Campbell staid with us two days, and we had a good time talking over our hope, visiting the Navy Yard and Fort, and seeing the preparations to slaughter men, which speak to us that "the nations are angry" and the great day is near. I am still willing to bear the name of a Second Advent believer, although some of our former brethren have got ashamed of this name. Such are welcome to their honor of leaving, only let us enjoy our privilege of this cross without blackening us by calling us monkeys and not fit to carry food to bears, and other worse speeches, publicly. Never mind. God still blesses the truth. H. Munger.

Selections.

Luther's Early Life.

Luther was sent to school at Magdeburg, at the age of fourteen. He was without friends and protectors, and trembled in the presence of his masters. In his playhours, he and some children, as poor as himself, with difficulty begged their bread. "I was accustomed," says he, "with my companions, to beg a little food to supply our wants. One day, about Christmas time, we were all going through the neighboring villages, from house to house, singing in concert the usual carols on the infant Jesus at Bethlehem. We stopped in front of a peasant's house which stood detached from the rest, at the extremety of the village. The peasant hearing us sing our Christmas carols, came out with some food, which he meant to give us, and asked, in a rough, loud voice, 'Where are you, boys?' Terrified at these words, we ran away as fast as we could. We had no reason to fear, for the peasant offered us this assistance in kindness; but our hearts had no doubt become fearful from the threats and tyranny which the masters then used toward their scholars, so that we were seized with sudden fright. At last, however, as the peasant still continued to call after us, we stopped, forgot our fears, ran to him, and received the food that he had offered us. It is thus," adds Luther, "that we tremble and flee when our conscience is guilty and alarmed: then we are afraid even of the help that is offered us, and of those who are our friends and wish to do us good."

Afterwards, at Eisenach, where he was at school, he was obliged, as at Magdeburg, to go with his schoolfellows and sing in the streets, to earn a morsel of bread. Often, instead of bread, the poor boy received nothing but harsh words. One day in particular, after having been repulsed from three houses, he was about to return fasting to his lodgings, when, having reached the square St. George, he stood before the house of an honest citizen, motionless, and lost in painful reflections. Must he, for want of bread, give up his studies, and go and work with his father in the mines of Mansfield? Suddenly a door opens; a woman appears on the threshhold—it is the wife of Conrad Cotta. Her name was Ursula. The chronicles of Eisenach call her "the pious Shunamite," in remembrance of her who so earnestly entreated the prophet Elijah to eat bread with her. This christian Shunamite had more than once remarked young Martin in the assemblies of the faithful: she had been affected by the sweetness of his voice and apparent devotion. She had heard the harsh words with which the poor scholar had been repulsed. She saw him overwhelmed with sorrow before her door; she came to his assistance, beckoned him to enter, and supplied his urgent wants. He was for a long time supported by this benevolent family, and ever gratefully remembered their kindness.

Many years after, Luther said, "Do not despise those boys who try to earn their bread by chanting before your door—'bread for the love of God'—panem propter Deum. I have done the same."—Quaint Sayings and Doings.

Head-Teaching and Heart-Teaching.

In one of our city Sunday-Schools I noticed, some time since, a teacher whose intellectual attainments were understood to be of no mean order. But in his class was only a single scholar, and she, an intelligent young lady, was gazing listlessly about the room, with no seeming interest in the exercise of the hour. The teacher was in the wall corner of the pew before her. There, lolling indolently, with one arm over the back of the bench, and one leg stretched out on the seat he occupied, with face upturned and eyes on the ceiling, he was apparently sermonizing to his own great edification and entire approval. It was evidently no cause of annoyance to him that he had but one hearer, and she unmindful of all he said. His exposition of the lesson was beyond a doubt thoroughly logical and orthodox, and with a full conviction of this he was quite content.

I learned, on inquiry, that not long before, that teacher had been put in charge of an interesting class of some twenty young ladies. He had brought to his task all the powers of a well-trained mind, and nothing more. His idea of Sabbath School teaching was limited to an hour's preachment. He had no conception of a union of teacher and scholar in a common work, of the joining of head and heart in the earnest study of God's word. He was to talk. His scholars could listen or not, as they chose. His part was to be performed, without thought or responsibility as to theirs. One by one, his class had dropped away, until only the least of the twenty remained. Still the teacher failed to comprehend his own unfitness for the position he had assumed, or to take any blame to himself for the dispersion of his charge. Such as he had, he had freely given to his class, but he was sadly lacking in spiritual, although not in mental qualifications for his place.

In the same school, I observed another class of widely different appearance. The scholars filled a long pew, and from the corners were pressing toward the centre, where their teacher was leaning over the back of the bench before them. His knees were on the seat. His face was brought forward toward his class. His countenance was lighted with animation, and his eyes seemed to meet those of all before him. He was manifestly of the class, not over it, having common interests and warmest sympathy with his pupils. He talked not at, but with them. On their part was no listless indifference, no impatient restlessness; on his, no carelessness no selfish abstraction. It was evident that the tap of the bell to close the morning session would be an unwelcome sound to that interested group.

This teacher I found had been trained for his present place in the mission school. He had there learned the art of teaching, and ascertained how to fix the attention of those whom he essayed to instruct. But his prime advantage over his neighbor across the room, was in the soul-absorbing interest he felt in the work to which he had given himself. His anxiety was for the spiritual profit of his pupils. His heart's desire and prayer to God for his scholars was that all might be saved, and he sought untiringly to win them to Jesus. His heart, not his head, merely, was enlisted in his endeavor, and this was the true secret of his marvellous power.

Mr. Spurgeon says, "Let a man be never so ignorant, still if his heart be full of love to a cause, he becomes a powerful man for that object, because he has heart power, heart force. Heart is power!"—Vigilarius, in Sunday School World.

God's Providence.—"Consider not only one single act of Providence, but the whole scheme, to make a conclusion." The motions of his eyes are various, but all end in discoveries of his strength. Men do not argue from one single proposition, but draw the conclusion from several propositions knit together. It is by such a spiritual logic we are to make our conclusions from the ways of Providence. As in reading Scripture, if we take not the whole period, we may make, not only nonsense, but blasphemy, as in that of the Psalmist, "Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in unrighteousness." If a man should read only, "Thou art not a God," and make a full stop there, it would be blasphemy; but reading the whole verse, it is excellent sense, and an honorable declaration of God's holiness. Such errors will be committed in reading the books of Providence, if we fix our eyes only in one place, and make a full stop where God hath not made any. We judge not of a picture by the first draught, but the last lines; not by one shadow or color, but by the whole composure. The wisdom of God is best judged of by the view of the harmony of Providence. The single threads of Providence may seem very weak or knotty or uneven, and seem to administer just occasion of censure; but will it not as much raise the admiration to see them all woven into a curious piece of branched work? Consider, therefore, God's ways of working; but fully judge nothing till the conclusion, for that is to judge before the time. Judge not then of Providence by the first appearance; God may so lose the glory of his work, and you the comfort.—Charnock.

Family Government.

"Well, Sarah, I declare! you are the worst girl I know of in the whole country!"

"Why, mother! what have I done?"

"See there! how you have spilled water in my pantry! get out of my sight; I cannot bear to look upon you—you careless girl!"

"Well, mother! I couldn't help it."

"Mrs. A., the mother, is a very worthy woman, but very ignorant of the art of family government. Sarah, her daughter, is a heedless girl of ten years. She is very much disposed to remove things out of their proper places, and seldom stops to put them in again. On the occasion referred to above, she had been seen to put water into the tea-kettle, and had very carelessly spilled a considerable portion of it on the pantry floor. After the above conversation, which, on the part of the mother, sounded most like successive claps of thunder on the ears of her daughter, Sarah escaped in a pouting manner, into an adjoining room, and her mother wiped up the slops in the pantry.

Well, thought I, my dear Mrs. A., if that is the way you treat your daughter, you will probably find it necessary to wipe after her a great many times more, if you both live. Such family government, as here set forth, seems to me to be liable to several serious objections.

The reproof was too boisterous. Children can never be frightened into a knowledge of error, or into conviction of crime. It is their judment, and their taste for neatness and order, which need training, and not their ears.

It was too unreasonable. The child was, indeed, careless; but she had done nothing to merit the title of "the worst girl in the country." Children are sensible of injustice, and very soon find it diffcult to respect those who unjustly treat them.

It was too passionate. The mother seemed to be boiling over with displeasure and disgust, and, under this excitement, she despised her darling child; the very same that in a very short time afterwards, when the storm had blown by she was ready to embrace in her arms as almost the very image of perfection.

It was inefficient. Sarah retired, under the idea that her mother was excited for a very little thing, which she could not help. Thus she blamed her mother, and acquitted herself.

Mrs. B. is another mother, in the same neighborhood. Mrs. A. wonders why Mrs. B. has so very good children. Says Mrs. A., "I talk a great deal more to my children than Mrs. B. does. I frequently scold them most severely, and I sometimes whip them, until, I think, they will never disobey me again. And yet, how noisy, careless, disobedient, my children are! Mrs. B. says but little to her children, and yet her family move like clock-work. Order, neatness, and harmony abound, and I never heard of her whipping them at all." 'Tis even so! And I should like to tell Mrs. A. the grand cause of her failure. She has not yet learned to govern herself, and it is not therefore surprising that her family is poorly governed.

Mrs. B. has a daughter, Catherine, about the same age with the daughter of Mrs. A. Not long since Catherine committed in a hurry, the same act of carelessness as above related, and Mrs. B's treatment of it reveals her secret of family-government.

"Catherine, my daughter, can you tell me how this water came on the floor?"

"I suppose, mother, I must have spilled it a few moments ago, when I filled the tea-kettle."

"Why did you not wipe it up, my daughter?"

"I intended to return, and do so; but on getting engaged on something else, I forgot it."

"Well, my daughter, when you do wrong you should try to repair it to the best of your ability, and as soon as possible. Get the mop and wipe it up, and try not to do so again."

Catherine immediately does as she is bid; remarking, "I will try and be more careful another time.

Mrs. A. may be found in almost every community. Mrs. B., though perhaps a more rare personage, yet graces many families in our land.—British Mother's Journal.

Pointed Sermons.

Where the point, the pith, the marrow, the flint, the fire, the hammer?—O where? This generalising or preaching to somebody way off at the North Pole or in the Moon—what avail? How did the prophet Nathan preach to David? "Thou art the man,"—yes, thou art the man.

John Newton remarks on pointless sermons thus:—"Many sermons, ingenious in their kind, may be compared to a letter put in the post-office without a direction. It is addressed to nobody, it is owned by nobody, and if a hundred people were to read it, not one of them would think himself concerned in the contents. Such a sermon, whatever excellencies it may have, lacks the chief requisite of a sermon. It is like a sword which has a polished blade, a jeweled hilt, and a gorgeous scabbard, but yet will not cut, and, therefore, to all real use, is no sword. The truth properly presented, has an edge, it pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, it is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

☞ Paul was a christian, a thorough christian; Peter was a christian, a thorough christian; but if we watch the history or biography of each of these inspired men, we shall see that grace consecrated, not quenched, in each his personal peculiarity and idiosyncrasy of character. For instance Peter, impetuous, passionate, hasty, always ready to explode the instant that the slightest spark was applied; always first to speak, first to draw his sword, and first to run away when there was danger, and impetuous in all. Paul's was gigantic energy, overwhelming power, irresistible reasoning; but in each was still the devoted, decided, and deeply impressed christian. John was full of all that was lovely and amiable, silent, that Peter only might speak; and yet, when people looked at John and Peter, heard Peter's eloquence, saw John's countenance, they took notice that both of them had been with Jesus; the silence of the one as expressive as the eloquence of the other.

The Burnt Tract.—"You need not leave your tracts here," said a Roman Catholic, angrily, to a colporter in France; "if you do, I give you fair warning that I shall burn them." The book-hawker, however, left a tract, the man repeating his statement that it should certainly be burned.

A year passed away, and the colporter found himself in the same part of the country again. He remembered the past circumstance, and felt anxious to know what had become of the violent man who refused his tracts. What was his astonishment to find that with him all things had become new! The man kept his promise, and burned the tract; but, as he watched it slowly consuming in the fire, one sentence caught his eye, standing out in strong relief: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." These words proved the means of his conversion.

Singing and Giving.—Old Aunt Dinah was a shouting colored saint, who would sing at the top of her voice, and cry Glory! above all the rest. It was common at the missionary prayer meetings of the colored people, to take up a collection while singing the hymn,

"Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel,"

in the midst of which Aunt Dinah always threw her head back, shut up her eyes and sang away lustily till the plate had gone by. The sable collector observed her habit, and one night stopped when he came to her, and said bluntly, "Look a 'here, Aunt Dinah! you needn't be singing 'Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel,' if you doesn't give nothin' to make it fly."

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much, in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

The Angel of the Lord.

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Ps. 34: 17.

In the deep watches of the night,
When slumber closes every eye,
I wake, and seek with yearning sight
The encamping angel drawing nigh.

With bending head and folded wing,
I cannot see that love-lit face,—
So dim, so shadowy a thing,
It melts into the night's embrace.

Yet comes o'er me celestial calm,
A blest repose, a peaceful prayer,
I hear faint music of a psalm,
A holy lull is in the air.

I trust the Lord; I fold my hands
In suppliance upon my breast,
And leave to him the dropping sands
That waste my pulse, and sweetly rest.

And when time-shadows o'er me steal,
Wilt thou draw nearer, holy guest,
The glory of thy form reveal,
And bear me upward to the blest?

The Dark Day of 1780.

Brother H. H. D., of Hartford, asks if the "19th of May, 1780, was the date of the darkening of the sun of scripture," and proceeds to give his reasons for believing that it was not.

The darkening of the sun is spoken of in various parts of the Scriptures, and of course must be understood as referring to various occasions,—as the overthrow of Babylon, Isa. 13, the events of the fourth and fifth trumpets of Rev., chapters 8 and 9, and the day of the Lord, described by the prophecy of Joel. Without attempting to decide whether any of these, or similar passages in the old Testament are to be understood figuratively or otherwise, we proceed to notice those predictions of the darkening of the sun recorded by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and also those brought to view under the sixth seal of Rev. 6: 12.

I am at a loss to see how any who believe in the speedy coming of Christ, can doubt that the events of 1780,—the darkening of the sun and moon,—fulfilled these New Testament scriptures, if he can believe that Romanism is the "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet." Let us take a position at the point where the dark day occurred, and survey the past, present and future.

1.—THE PAST. The four universal empires have arisen and fallen. Subsequently, ten kingdoms arose, and soon another: "the little horn" comes up, and destroys three of these kingdoms, because they refuse to submit to papal authority. The saints of the Most High are worn out during succeeding centuries of affliction. Toward the close of these dark ages Luther appears, and the voice of truth falls on the ear of Germany, but yet the Man of Sin prevails, and the cry is still heard from under the altar, "How long, O Lord?" Protestantism maintains her foothold, but stands with the long-lost Bible in her hand, bleeding at every pore!

2.—PRESENT. The day of religious toleration is dawning on the lands that have been held in bondage for more than a thousand years. The power of Jesuitism is broken. Francis Joseph II. tears the papal yoke from the neck of Austria. The flames of persecution which have continued burning from the days of Justinian are checked, and the remonstrances or anathemas of the Vatican are treated with contempt. Ah! the "time of the end" of Daniel's 1335 days approaches. "In those days after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." And just at this important period we behold the prediction literally fulfilled! Let us look forward from our stand-point at the events which have occurred from that day to the present, in the exact order of their prediction:—The French Revolution caused the harlot to drink a bloody cup. The wonderful career of the first Napoleon succeeds; and when it ends, the allied powers of Europe give thirty years of almost unbroken peace to the world. Now behold the mighty strides of knowledge! Missionaries rush forth to every quarter of the globe, scattering the inspired word, which is to be a witness to all nations before the end come.

But lo! another wonder appears in the heavens—the third in the exact order of prophecy. "And the stars shall fall." Read what Prof. Olmstead says of this sign:—"Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13th, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been seen since the creation of the world, or, at least, within the annals covered by the pages of history."

Soon afterward the Advent movement, rising in America, is felt throughout the world; a mighty host of christians break away from sectarian trammels, and unite in proclaiming the speedy advent of the Savior; they write the unsealed vision and make it plain upon tables. Though disappointed and disciplined by trials of faith and patience, a remnant still wait for the vision, according to divine instruction, knowing by the signs that have been seen in the heavens,—the physical, political and moral signs witnessed on earth,—that the kingdom of God is nigh, even at the door. And O, while they have thus waited, what floods of gospel light have poured in upon them, fulfilling the promise that the wise shall understand!

Revolution, in 1848, shakes the political foundations of Europe; tyrants vacate their thrones; out of the abyss another Napoleon arises, and puts forth his hands as though he would grasp the reins of universal empire. The peaceful compact of the allied powers is broken, and France, England and Russia meet in bloody strife. A moment of quiet ensues, and then the Austrian prop of the Pope's temporal power is knocked away by the blows of Sardinia and France. Mystical Jezebel cries out in anguish at the swift approach of the modern Jehu, who chases the tyrant of Naples before him, and leads the patriots of Italy, determined to unfurl the banner of Freedom over the city of Rome! The spirits of devils working miracles, go forth unto the characters described by the sixth seal to gather them to the battle of the day of wrath.

3.—THE FUTURE. And now, taking our stand at the present hour, we look out upon the world, and see "Distress of Nations" labelled on all its governments. This is another sign of the series commenced by the darkening of the sun; we therefore expect soon to behold the shaking of the powers of heaven and the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

If the darkness of 1780 was caused by dust, as Noah Webster supposes, we should not regret it as a fulfillment of our Lord's word on that account. Dr. Webster does not pretend to assign a cause for this cloud of dust. The learned men of Egypt were slow to acknowledge the hand of Jehovah directing the rod of Moses and Aaron. It is objected that this phenomenon was local, and not universal. Neither were the miracles of Christ universal. Both challenged the faith of the world, though local in their manifestation.

Our Bro. says: "I cannot understand why the dark day in 1780 should have been selected as the dark day, unless it was supposed to come within a period otherwise determined." Did it not thus occur in the very period spoken of by the Lord? viz: "Immediately after the tribulation of those (papal) days." And if no such an array of evidence, as our brother has procured, can be given concerning other dark days of the last century, should we hesitate a moment to call it the true stand-point? Do not almanacs often note this day?

If the sun is darkened again, when Jesus appears, it will be at the end of the series of foretold signs of that appearing; but the scriptures of which we speak relate to that which begins the list of signs in the heavens which has taken place—not as a mere type, but as a literal fulfillment of prophecy. Some have taken this sign as a chronological guide. They believed the Lord darkened the sun on the 19th of May, when the moon was full, to indicate the true time of the Passover. Supposing that the prophetic numbers of Daniel began at that season, they took this date as a key, in the study of the law and the prophets, to ascertain the day of the saints' resurrection. This view was strengthened by the fact that the sun was darkened at the crucifixion, where the sixty-nine weeks of Daniel 9th ended. The resurrection of "Christ the first fruits" taking place at this season of the year, was believed to mark the day when the entire harvest would be gathered. But they have been honestly mistaken. Shall we, therefore, reject the sign because brethren have failed to settle chronology by it? Others, also, have drawn wrong conclusions from the word "generation," spoken of by the Lord. They believed the word would allow of no extension of time beyond seventy years, or eighty at farthest. Shall we reject the claims of the darkening of 1780 because some have thus limited this word?

I cannot believe that Bro. H. H. D. would wilfully remove a true "landmark, or lighthouse of our faith;" but we may, in seasons of trial, like John the Baptist, almost doubt the evidences of our senses. O, let us, like him, be assured by the voice of our heavenly Friend, referring us to the fulfillment of the sure word of prophecy. Soon shall the ransomed of the Lord return and come to Zion. May we all, through grace, be permitted to join the glorified company. J. L.

Signs of the Times.

The Savior inquired of the hypocritical Pharisees and Sadducees, "How is it that ye cannot discern the signs of the times?" The Pharisees and Sadducees were two of the most popular sects among the Jews. Many of them were scribes, lawyers, doctors and teachers of the law. They would apply the rules of common observation to the weather, but at the same time were so perfectly blinded, they would or could not apply the most simple rules of interpretation to the Scriptures. Said the great Teacher to them, "When it is evening, ye say it will be fair weather, for the sky is red. O, ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

This inquiry of the Savior implies that the indications or signs of the times, if carefully observed and inquired after, will show clearly the position we occupy in the world's history. We need not be mistaken. The times in which men live are to determine, to some degree, their course of conduct. That which may be proper and right to be done in one age, may be exceedingly improper to be done in another age of this world's history. It is so individually. For example: a captain may go to sea at once, when his vessel is loaded, if wind and tide favor him, and there are no indications of a storm about to burst over him; but, should such indications appear as not to be mistaken by a careful observer of the signs, would he do well to disregard them, and rush out to sea, perilling all? And if he should thus disregard the signs of the coming storm, and rush forth and lose all, would he not rightly be called a fool for his course?

Again, does not the husbandman, when about to gather in his crops, watch with care the signs of the weather, waiting for favorable indications to reap down his fields? He would be foolish to reap down his field of ripe grain when there are indications of a storm. He watches carefully the signs, to satisfy his mind as to the course he is to pursue, and he is governed in his operations by the conclusions at which he arrives in his observations. Does he not act wisely in so doing?

Let us go back to Noah. It is said of him, Heb. 11: 7, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Noah was warned of a coming flood, or had some sign or token, by word or otherwise, of that coming event. He heeded it, and we will say he was wise in so doing. But suppose he had disregarded the sign, or warning, would he not have perished with the ungodly? Suppose Noah had bought land, built houses, entered into joint stock companies, or borrowed ten thousand dollars, then failed (to cheat his creditors out of a part or all of it,) just about one year before the time. Would it not have shown he did not believe what he preached? Or any time even after he received the warning from God of the coming deluge, if he had been guilty of hunting for gold mines, or going to war, the people would have justly said he was a hypocrite, and that he did not believe what he preached.

Again, let us look at Moses. It is said, when he was come to years "he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." Moses understood the signs of the times. He knew the bondage of Abraham's seed, in a land not theirs, was near its accomplishment: and he knew that the nation that oppressed them was to be judged, and Israel to be delivered. Seeing the signs of the times, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, or share the throne of Egypt, which he knew could only last for a short time. The time might have been, at a previous period, when it would have been right for Moses to have accepted a place at Pharaoh's court; but the time had come—the sign had appeared—that Egypt was to be judged and Israel delivered. Moses, being a servant of Joel, he could do no other way than to change his course of life, refuse all earthly honor, and hearken to the voice of God.

We might bring other examples to illustrate these principles, but we forbear. We would say, in conclusion, that the Lord Jesus Christ is about to return to this earth, and is to take the kingdom and the throne of his father David; the present world is to end, and there is to be a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. We see great convulsions now going on in the earth; a great change is coming over the world; men's hearts are beginning to fail them for fear, looking for those things coming on the earth." The powers of heaven are being shaken, and the next sign in order will be the sign of the Son of man in heaven. The signs given by the inspired writers are nearly all of them in the past. The four universal monarchies—Babylon, Media and Persia, Grecia and Rome—are gone. The fifth kingdom is to be the everlasting kingdom of God, and its location is to be under the whole heavens, and it shall stand forever.

Do the events of the times in which we live indicate the soon coming of the end, and the establishment of the kingdom of our Lord? Daniel and St. John both unite with angels and saints by saying yes. All inspiration exclaims, "the judgment is at hand." Wicked men and devils prove it to be very near. The upheaving of the nations shows the kingdoms of this world are soon to be overthrown; they totter and reel to and fro like a drunken man. In view of these things, does it not become us to regulate our pursuits and course of life in agreement with such evidence, and such a revolution as the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth implies? Think of the day of judgment for one moment. View the great white throne. Behold the awful Judge of the quick and dead,—then answer the all-important question: Can we live and do as the wicked world doeth? Can we join with cold professors of religion and talk of the world, and dream of heaven, and deny Christ by our daily walk? There are many things that we cannot do now at this point of time. The time is nearly come for deliverance,—the crown of life, glory and immortality. You remember what the inspired Apostle has said,—"If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "Love not the world, neither the things which are in the world." "Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth." Watch the signs of the times. Keep your loins girt about with truth. Be sober; be ready for those things which are coming on the earth, and be ready to stand before the Son of man. O that we may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God. CLARK.

The Love of Christ.

The love of Christ should constrain us to love him. We should never think of looking to our own goodness, expecting thereby to meet with the approbation of God. We should always look to Christ, who is the image of God,—who suffered and died that we might live. In Him is perfection; he was a chosen vessel, through whom God might manifest himself to this lost and ruined world, that they might know how to return to him. Christ was "God manifest in the flesh." The Spirit was given him without measure, that he might bring immortality to light. Before this, man was in darkness as to the future. Christ said, "I am the light of the world." Now if He was the light of the world, the world without him would be in darkness. If men are in darkness, they cannot see; then, in order to see ourselves in the true light, we must look to Christ, who is the light. The nearer we draw to Christ, the more we shall see our own depravity, and the better we shall know how to appreciate his love and goodness. If his image is reflected by us, it is because we are in the strait and narrow way which he has laid down. The apostle Paul says, I was alive once "without the law, but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died." The law only brought condemnation. It brought him to see he was sold under sin—that he was a slave to the world, the flesh, and the devil. He would not have seen this if it had not been for the light, which was Christ. When his eyes were opened, he saw the law in its true light. It taught him what he was by nature. It showed him his true condition, when he exclaimed, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" He thanks God that there is a way of escape through Jesus Christ, and hence he says, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." So we see he was justified and saved by looking to Christ, as the children of Israel were by looking at the serpent in the wilderness.

This is why we are taught to keep our eye on the mark, which is Christ. Just as soon as we take our eye from Christ and his righteousness, and look to our own, just so soon we begin to stumble. Our own righteousness is nothing better than "filthy rags." One reason why there are so many backsliders is, they take their eye off from Christ and his righteousness. This brings them into condemnation, and they get discouraged, and go back to the world. But we have got something better than this world. The apostle Peter speaks of "exceeding great and precious promises," that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature. What are these promises other than eternal life, eternal happiness, and a kingdom that is eternal and full of glory? This is enough to prompt us to be faithful. This is all to come through Christ. He bought it with his own blood. He has bought back what Adam lost. Christ paid the debt of the law. This is the sum of it—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." We have all come short of this. Christ laid down his own life for us. No man can do more than this. We can see, in what he has done and what he has promised to do, sufficient to constrain us to love and obey him.

Let us, then, always look to Christ for peace and comfort in this world of sorrow, pain and death; and more especially, as we are living in a time when men have become lovers of themselves more than God, we ought to put on the whole armor, and fight the good fight of faith, looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith. The Souls that were Beheaded.

BRO. EDITOR:—If it would not be taking too much liberty, I would like to write a few lines on Rev. 20: 4, which reads as follows:—"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

Who were those that John saw? This question is one which I have never had answered by any one to my full satisfaction. I have heard many preach upon this chapter, yet their ideas on this question were vague and unsettled. But, upon giving it a careful perusal, I found John was particular to describe this company; and, in summing up the whole matter, he declares they (or this company, as I understand it) are the first resurrection. They are slain. What for? For the witness of Jesus, and the word of God. And having examined the sure word, with a view, if possible, to ascertain who that company were, I think I have found one that answers the description of the revelator. Mark well, the cause of their being slain (or beheaded) was, the witness of Jesus and the word of God. Now if you will turn to the 2d chapter of Matthew, you will find that when Jesus was born, wise men came from the east to Jerusalem, saying, "where is be that is born King of the Jews?" Why do they ask such a question? Simply because they have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him. Herod, being troubled, calls the chief priests and scribes together, and demands of them where Christ should be born. What is the answer they give? "In Bethlehem, of Judea." How did they know? For thus it was written by the prophet—"And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a governor, that shall rule my people Israel." And now, when Herod had inquired diligently of the wise men what time the star appeared, sends them away to seek him out, and then return and bring him word, that he may go and worship him also. But they, being warned of God not to return, departed, after having presented their gifts, to their own country by another way. Joseph also is warned of God to flee into Egypt. And now Herod, finding himself thwarted in his plans, sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem and the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men.

And now, to recapitulate, for I must be brief. I ask, for what did Herod slay all the children in and about Bethlehem? Was it not simply from the fact that the wise men said they had seen his star (or witness); and that, corresponding with what the chief priests said, was written by one who spake not of his own will, but as he was moved by the Holy Ghost? Certainly. If he had any other evidence that he was in danger of being dethroned by one prophetically born to be King of the Jews, I have failed to find it; and finding none, I conclude very naturally that the (star) witness, and (what was written) the word of God, were the cause, and only cause, for which they were slain.

But we turn for a moment to look at the character of this company. They had not worshiped the beast, nor his image, neither received his mark in their foreheads, nor in their hands. Hence, it could not be fully determined, perhaps, whether this be the company that John saw and Herod caused to be slain, unless we can prove that they did not thus worship or receive the mark of the beast. We take the position they could not have worshiped the beast, or received his mark, from the simple fact that the beast did not exist in their day. Perhaps the objector may ask if the Roman government was not symbolized by this beast? I answer, not at that [illegible] in the dispensation of God's providence, he holds all mankind guiltless until they are proved guilty. This act of Herod was transacted under the law. The gospel economy had not then commenced. The first, or dragon beast, with seven heads and ten horns, differs materially from the two-horned beast that caused all to worship the beast that was wounded and died; and all, both great and small, rich and poor, old and young, to receive his mark in their hands and foreheads.

Now, with this amount of evidence, I am forced to the conclusion that they must be the company which John saw, and which he declares make up the first resurrection, whether the thousand years be in the past or future. I might, perhaps, if time would allow, give my views in regard to that,—but I will close by simply saying that, in my opinion, as the high priest offered or waved an offering of the first fruits, so our High Priest which has entered into the holiest of holies, must also present his wave offering of the first fruits. And as this company was the first that was gathered for the witness of Jesus and the word of God, they constitute the anti-typical wave offering. H. T. HART.

Can I be a Christian?

What a subject for meditation and thought for one who has lived a life of sin and folly, transgressing the very laws of God and man! Yes, one that has always been a bitter enemy of all that has ever tried to do good, and to spread the light of God's truth, that souls through their influence might escape that dreadful day of God's wrath. It is truly wonderful that one who has thus lived in open rebellion against God, can come even at the eleventh hour and find mercy. But so it is,—yes; and receive the same, too, as those that come the first.

Dear brethren and sisters, is not our God worth serving? Yes, I feel that I owe my life and all I have to him. And then what blessed invitations are held out in his word. Jesus says, Matt. 11: 28, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." But says the weary sinner, "that cannot be meant for me." Yes, poor soul, I think that is one invitation for you. Did you ever know a person who is living for Christ to get weary or heavy laden? Are not these the ones that have found rest? And "ye shall find rest to your souls." He says, "my yoke is easy and my burden light." Is not that proof enough that the Savior means you in that invitation? How many poor souls read that passage in sorrow, found in John 6: 44, which reads thus: "No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him." And even some professors are staggered at this expression, and even lose their confidence in God. Let me ask, did you ever know a person in the universe that the Lord never gave an invitation to? He, no doubt, is calling upon all men to be reconciled to him. Some heed this calling, and some do not.

Now God has given certain laws or commandments, which are necessary for us to keep in order to be saved; for "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Notwithstanding all our sinfulness, God is desirous that we should be saved. The Savior says, "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one (not a part) that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life." John 6: 40. And again, in Matt. 9: 13, "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." So the Savior's message was to call sinners. How do you think that he would select out a few, and leave the rest to suffer without offering them mercy? I do not, for my Bible teaches me that God is no respecter of persons. If the Savior died for one sinner, he must have died for all, or else he must be a respecter of persons. And Peter tells us that God is not willing that any should perish, "but that all should come to repentance."

Now, dear brethren and sisters, while we consider how many there are in the world without a hope, shall we fold our hands, and not put forth an effort in trying to save them? Behold the day is at hand. Let us sound the alarm, for soon the trump will sound, and they will be lost. We are living in a time of wars, and rumors of wars; men's hearts failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth. Let us pray for each other, that when the gathering day shall come, that we shall be fully prepared to enter into that rest that remains to the people of God.

Shall we Smite with the Sword?

In the present struggle to maintain our federal government, is it the duty of the christian to take up arms in its defence? This question seems to have been decided in the affirmative by the christian church as a body, though there are individuals probably among all evangelical denominations who question the propriety. The argument is, that since christians, as well as others, receive the protection of the government, they are equally bound to maintain it. But this kind of reasoning will apply to any government or organization of men, however corrupt, who may extend their protection over a christian by the exercise of physical force. Does it follow, therefore, that the christian is bound to take up arms in defence of its protectors? Now, since all human governments are more or less imperfect, to fight for their maintenance is to fight for the wrong. It is true that God made it the duty of the Jews to cut off their enemies with the sword, and it will be equally the duty of christians to cut off theirs in like manner when God commands it, but not till then. Under all human governments, a law is in force no longer after it has been repealed, and the same is true of the divine government. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy: but I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5: 43–45. This certainly repeals the old Jewish law; and the plain inference is, that if ye disobey this law of Christ, ye cannot be the children of your Father in heaven, but prove yourselves to be of your father the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning. Now, unless the claims of this civil government upon the christian are stronger than the law of Christ, he cannot be justified in taking up arms in its defence in opposition to the law of his Savior.

Eternally too Late!

What is meant by eternally too late? I mean the door of mercy closed, and that forever. Then those not ready will be shut out and that to all eternity. Just think, careless one, of being lost, eternally lost—yes, lost to all ETERNITY. My dear fellow mortals, will you still persist in pursuing the broad road that leads to destruction? You will experience the loss of eternal life, for "the wages of sin is death," that is, eternal death. Eternity never ends. The Savior says, Matt. 25: 46, "these shall go away into everlasting punishment" —that is eternal, or, as Paul has it, punished with everlasting destruction.

Oh, sinner, I beg of you to turn to God and live, yes, live eternally. You may be an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ to all eternity. We may become sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, and be privileged to be at the marriage supper of the Lamb. He that "believeth on the Son hath everlasting life," or life eternal. Now, dear reader, you and I will soon occupy one or the other of the above positions. God grant we may have life eternal, is my prayer. IRA FAIRBANKS.

THE MORE CONVENIENT SEASON.—[illegible]

For the Crisis.

The New Hampshire State Conference, for 1861,

Was holden at Lake Village, June 20th and 23d. According to previous notice, the brethren convened at 2 o'clock, P. M., for social meeting, and continued about two hours. It proved to be a season of great interest. Many rejoiced and praised God for the privilege of meeting again at our annual gathering, and for the hope of soon being gathered into the everlasting kingdom of God. At 6 o'clock, P. M., ministers met in conference, and enjoyed a profitable season for about an hour and a half. Adjourned to meet at 8 o'clock next morning. Preaching in the evening, at 8 o'clock.

Friday morning, June 21. At 8 oclock, A. M., minister's conference convened as per adjournment. After prayer, proceeded to the usual custom of the examination of ministers connected with the conference. At this session some questions arose in regard to points of doctrine, which rendered the season somewhat unpleasant. After a session of about one hour, adjourned to meet at the close of the afternoon meeting of worship.

At 9 o'clock, State conference convened according to notice, and after devotional exercises, proceeded to business by the choice of Eld. J. Morse, Moderator; T. M. Preble, Clerk; B. Locke, Treasurer. Called for and heard read the report of last conference. Was accepted.

Voted, That visiting brethren be invited to a seat, and take part in our deliberations.

Voted, That the ministerial committee of last year be continued for the year ensuing, viz.: Elders J. Harvey, Pittsfield; T. M. Breble, Concord; N. H. Shipman, Sugar Hill.

Voted, That a committee of three be appointed to prepare business for conference. The brethren appointed were T. M. Preble, T. W. Piper, S. S. Mooney.

Voted, to hear reports from churches, either by delegates, by letter, or otherwise.

It was soon manifest that brethren were again remiss in reporting according to action of conference, as but very few were reported, either by regularly appointed delegates, or by letter. But the reports, as given, showed a degree of prosperity among us during the past year, which was encouraging, as quite a number had been converted and baptized, and some churches had enjoyed special favors of divine grace. Adjourned till 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Preaching at 2 o'clock, P. M. At the close of public worship, minister's conference met, according to adjournment, and continued the subject under consideration at the morning session, viz., points of difference among us in regard to doctrine, etc. Ministers present were—J. Knowles, T. W. Piper, D. F. Leavitt, L. Allen, N. Glidden. S. S. Mooney, B. Locke, J. Morse, T. M. Preble, O. G. Smith, J. H. Clark, J. Harvey, E. J. Brown, J. Morrill, C. H. N. Green. Adjourned till half past seven next morning. Preaching in the evening, at 8 o'clock.

Saturday, 22d, at half past seven A. M., ministers met in conference, as per adjournment. After prayer, time was mostly occupied in a mutual interchange of thought on the points of doctrine and difference of opinion among us. Adjourned to the call of the Moderator.

At nine o'clock State Conference met as per adjournment. After prayer, business committee called on to report, and the following resolutions were introduced and passed:—

1. Resolved, That the time of holding our State Conference be changed from the third Tuesday in June, to Friday nearest the 20th of Oct., and commence at 10 o'clock, A. M.

2. Resolved, That the second and third resolutions passed at the last session be rescinded.

The following resolution, laid on the table at the last session, was called up and passed:—

"Resolved, That the officers of this conference issue a certificate of the present standing of ministering brethren among us, who have either lost or surrendered their ordination credentials to other denominations."

A preamble and resolution was then presented by Bro. O. J. Harvey, and, after some amendment by Bro. O. G. Smith, it was passed. The following is the preamble and resolution referred to:—

Whereas there is a difference of views among us, as ministers of this conference, on the doctrines of man's intermediate state and final end of the wicked,—the pre-existence and divinity of Christ, Therefore, Resolved, That hereafter, in preaching on these doctrines, we will either use Bible language, or language in perfect harmony with christian kindness and christian courtesy.

Voted, that minutes of conference be published in the Herald and Crisis.

Adjourned to the call of the clerk, to meet on Friday, nearest the 20th of October, 1862. Preaching in the afternoon and evening.

Sabbath 23d, we held our meetings in the Freewill Baptist meeting-house, it having been generously offered us by that liberal people. Our meetings were well attended, and especially on the Sabbath, a very large audience being in attendance. It is hoped that some good seed was sown that will bring forth fruit unto eternal life.

May the Lord abundantly bless our brethren of Lake Village for their liberality in sustaining the conference, and Freewill Baptist brethren for their generosity in tendering the free use of their spacious house for our accommodation on the Sabbath.

Who will Live Again?

Bro. Wendell:—I notice in the last Crisis that Bro. J. T. Curry desires some one to show him how the doctrine of the "re-living of the wicked" can be maintained, without affirming "universal salvation?" etc. In answer to Bro. C. I would just say, I think, on reflection, it will appear evident to all that universal salvation is clearly taught in the Scriptures. See John 5: 28, 29; Acts 24: 15; 1 Cor. 15: 22. This last text shows that as "all die" in Adam, i. e., in consequence or by means of Adam, so will "all be made alive" in Christ, i. e., in consequence or by means of Christ. Thus we see all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the "resurrection of life," and they that have done evil unto the "resurrection of damnation?"—John 5: 28, 29. This makes Christ the "Savior of all men, especially of them that believe"; (1 Tim. 4: 10,) i. e., he saves all from the first "literal death," or Adamic death, and will "especially" save all that "obey him," as we read, "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.) On such the "second death" (literal death) has no power. Rev. 20: 6. Does not this prove the "universal salvation" of all men from the first literal death? But it does not prove the universal salvation of all men to holiness and life! (as will be the case with those who "have done good" in this life); for the wicked must "come forth unto the resurrection of damnation"!—mark this; damned, after they have been raised from the dead; as we find also in Rev. 20: 13, 14; they are raised from hades ("the region of the dead; the invisible world, or the grave";—Webster,) and then "cast into the lake of fire," after they have been resurrected from hades; and thus, in "gehenna fire," they will die a second "literal death," by being destroyed "both soul and body, in hell," or gehenna fire. Matt. 10: 28. I do not understand how any one can die a "second death," without being made alive from the first death!

T. M. Preble.

Concord, N. H., July 6, 1861.

Note.—The article of Bro. Curry's, referred to by Bro. Preble, was inserted in the Crisis in the absence of Bro. Wendell. It was not published because it agreed with my sentiments, for I differ with him as to the question under consideration; nor was it inserted to provoke controversy, but for the following reasons:—

1st. It was written by one of the subscribers of the Crisis.

2d. It is a well written article; it shows that its author has studied the subject upon which he writes.

3d. The view taken, though not the general view of Adventists, represents the sentiments of quite a large class of brethren, who, so far as talent and piety are concerned, are second to none in the ranks.

4th. There is no reason why brethren differing in sentiment should not have the privilege of expressing their sentiments in a christian-like manner.

5th. It is too late in the day to undertake to stifle conviction, or prevent investigation.

6th. It is not a sufficient reason why I should reject an article simply because I believe the writer is advocating error; to do this, would not only inflict a wrong upon such person, by depriving him of his right to a hearing, but it would be equally a hardship upon community, who have the same right to hear and liberty to judge that I exercise.

7th. When persons get so wide of the mark that they cannot treat persons who differ from them with christian courtesy, it is time such persons should be looked after. And when articles or letters contained hard sayings, misrepresentations of others, or reflections on the honesty of those who differ from them, it is both the privilege and the duty of the editor either to reject them altogether, or to modify them to that extent that they shall not be repugnant to christian courtesy.

Finally, nothing of the above is to be construed as reflecting on the spirit evinced in the article of Bro. Preble. F. H. B.

The Signs.

Bro. Wendell:—I see there is considerable speculation respecting the first sign of the coming of Christ—the darkening of the sun. Some endeavor to locate it in the future. There are in my mind decided arguments that it has long since passed. 1. It was to be immediately after the great tribulation upon the church. 2. If it is in the future, none of the other signs which were to follow have been seen, as all the signs will undoubtedly occur in the order laid down. 3. The signs in the stars have been seen, and we believe the distress of nations with perplexity is now being fulfilled.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 10, 1861.

Away from Home.

On the evening of 26th ult. a telegram brought me the sad tidings that my brother Harvey Wendell's wife was "dangerously ill."

The next morning my wife and daughter left for Albany, reaching that place in time to spend with our much loved sister the last night of her mortal existence. She died on the morning of June 28th, in the 29th year of her age, leaving three children, the youngest being a daughter one week old. I was immediately informed by telegraph, and reached Albany that evening. On Saturday we left for my father's, sixty miles west of A., in the Mohawk valley, to bury our dead. The funeral took place on Sunday, and drew together a large concourse of people, among whom were many kind and sympathizing riends. My dear parents have eight children living, the eldest being my only sister, and I the oldest of the seven sons. Only the two youngest children are unmarried. Though my parents had buried five of their offspring before, we were now brought together for the first time to pay the last tribute of affection to an adult person taken by the Destroyer from our family circle. This sudden departure of one so fondly loved carried grief to many hearts, but we sorrow not without hope. We believe Lizzie sleeps in Jesus, and that when he who is the resurrection and the life shall return from heaven, she will awake to an incorruptible life and [illegible] dwell forever in the kingdom of God. For about eight years she had been striving to follow Christ. As her end approached, she expressed a desire to live, if it should please the Lord to spare her, but also a willingness to die if that was her heavenly Father's will. It was the remark of many friends in Albany who saw her in the embrace of Death, that never before had they beheld so much loveliness in a corpse. This, too, was my first thought when I gazed upon her lifeless form. But, alas, this beauty was transient, and though asleep in Jesus, she is held in "the bondage of corruption." Where, then, is our hope—our comfort? In "Jesus and the resurrection," for "we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." My bereaved brother has for many years (yes, from his childhood) known the power of divine grace, and enjoys its sustaining and comforting influence in his present deep affliction. He believes as firmly as I do that departed saints are "asleep," and that they will enter upon their reward, their "eternal weight of glory," when Jesus comes again to receive to himself those who have believed in him, that where he is they may be also. May this tangible, Bible faith—embracing, as its cardinal feature, the much-neglected doctrine of the resurrection—be increasingly precious to his stricken heart, as it points him to the morning of joy beyond the far-spent night of weeping and sorrow.

The morning after my arrival in Albany, I enjoyed a brief interview with Bro. George Storrs, at Bro. I. L. Allen's house, which is one of the resting places where pilgrims find a hearty welcome. Bro. S. preached twice in A., on the 30th ult., to such congregations as he rarely fails to call out when he visits that city; and I was informed by the brethren that he never left behind him a better impression than on this occasion. His morning discourse was on "Unbelief," from Paul's words, (Heb. 3: 12,) "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." In the evening his subject was "the inheritance of the saints," from Psa. 37: 11—"The meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

On the evening of the 3d inst., having returned to Albany en route for Boston, it was my privilege to meet with the brethren and sisters in prayer meeting at Rechabite Hall. At my suggestion, they met on Tuesday instead of Wednesday evening, that I might have an opportunity to see them. It did my heart good to greet the loved ones who were at the meeting, and my thoughts went after those who were not there but were equally dear. I love them all, and towards not one of them am I conscious of having ever cherished an unkind feeling in the four years during which "we have taken sweet counsel together." My hope is that, though separated from them "in presence, not in heart," through God's mercy and grace I shall meet them in the kingdom.

Bro. Jefferson Mayell, I was pained to learn, is, through failing health, unable to meet with the church; and the fear was expressed that he might not be with them again. His soul-stirring and heart-cheering utterances have often gladdened my spirit. If I may not hear them any more, on account of increasing infirmities, I expect, "when the King comes," to hear him sing the song of redemption, "Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen." F. H. B.

Hudson's New Tract.

"Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment." A tract with this title, to be published when $25 is raised, will be furnished to subscribers at $2 per hundred The enterprise now stands as follows:—

1. Pledges. I. C. Welloome, $1.00; Jacob Blain $8.00; R. E. Ladd, $1.00; William Lucas, $1.00.

2. Payments. Hachaliah Bailey, $1.00; C. S. Sherman, $1.00.

We want $17 more. Shall the amount be forthcoming without delay? Bro. Hudson intends to be ready with the MS. by the time the required sum is secured. The proposed tract is a desideratum in our literature on the Life and Death theme, and we are glad Bro. H. has it in his heart to meet the want. By the way, our last letter from Bro. H. was dated "Meadville, Pa., June 25th," but he is now we presume in Ohio, as he was moving thitherward when he wrote. Our best wishes attend him in his mission of "carpet-bag reform," and we shall be glad to learn by and by that he has compassed the aphelion of his somewhat eccentric orbit and set his face once more in the direction of Boston.

Appreciative Criticism.

The Sunday School Times, of Philadelphia, gives a long notice of Bro. Hudson's "Debt and Grace," copying in full the passage from Albert Barnes, which appeared in our editorial columns a few weeks since. The following remarks will be read with interest:—

"Without any reference to the character of his opinions, his book is almost a model of theological controversy. It is learned without pedantry, it is exhaustive in its analysis of the subject, it is transparently candid, and while it searches with penetrating acumen the opinions to which it is opposed, it contains not a word of bitterness, not a sarcasm, or a sneer, or syllable of harsh invective."

The Church Monthly, of this city, speaks as follows:—

"It is, however, an important service that is rendered to theological science, when a brain like Mr. Hudson's is set apart, through the patient application of years, to the thorough investigation and exposition of a theme like this. The result places the whole subject before the mind of the church in its most comprehensive and plausible form, where it can be brought into easy comparison with the orthodox standards, and subjected to a simple and decisive analysis. If heresy is ever to be exterminated, it is desirable that its vitality should be concentrated in as few seats, or nuclei, as possible. Neander once said that Strauss had rendered the same service to the cause of christian truth which Nero desired somebody would render him; he had collected the heads of all its enemies into one, that they might be conveniently decapitated at a single blow. It is not too much to say, that Mr. Hudson's works furnish a kind of monograph on the topic he has treated. He has pursued it with intellectual and religious enthusiasm, through obloquy and sectarian persecution, through sharp controversy, through oral discussion, through the alcoves of libraries, through volumes that few men's fingers ever touch. He has fully set forth whatever historical, rational, and scriptural grounds it can be supposed to rest upon. He has arrayed all the testimonies that exist, of any moment, probably, in its favor. And he has done all this with a simplicity of character, and a genuineness of piety, which deserve unqualified esteem. If, therefore, he fails to establish his thesis in the belief of the christian world,—as we candidly confess we expect he will fail,—the failure may be said to be, for this generation at least, final."

In connection with the foregoing we wish to remind our friends that the latest edition of "Debt and Grace" is enriched with an "Index" of twenty closely printed pages—invaluable for the purpose of ready reference. The Index can be procured separately by those who have the earliest editions of the work.

"The Day of Rest."

This article, the first part of which we transfer to our fourth page, will be given entire to our readers—running through two or three numbers more of the Crisis. In the Examiner we find appended to it the following note by the Editor:—

"The foregoing article, by Mr. Dobney, so nearly expresses our views on "The Sabbath Question," that we do not think it worth while to make any exceptions to it, but commend it to the careful study of all. There has been much disputation on the subject to no profit. A legal and superstitious observance of a Sabbath on the one hand, and a licentious neglect of all claims to observe a Rest on the other, are alike unscriptural and unnatural."

Rare but Merited Praise.

"It contains not a word of bitterness, not a sarcasm, or a sneer, or syllable of harsh invective."

This is what the S. S. Times says of "Debt and Grace." We commend the remark to the attention of those who write for the Crisis. If we ever find Bro. Hudson's writings disparaged by the critics on account of their entire freedom from bitterness, sarcasm, and harsh invective, we shall not fail to inform our readers. But we have no idea of ever seeing fault found in that direction. The work of Mr. Landis on "The Immortality of the Soul" abounds in the qualities enumerated above, but even he, if our memory serves us correctly, speaks highly of the spirit of Hudson's work! "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Journeying.—Our cotemporary of the Harbinger is on a preaching tour into Ohio. We doubt not the release from office toil will invigorate his health, and we hope his trip will tell favorably on his subscription list, and secure him many new friends in the West. Bro. Frank Burr discharges the editorial duties during Bro. Newman's absence.

Erratum.—In the article, "The Coming Struggle," in our paper last week, reference is made in the second paragraph to Rev. 9: 19. It should be 11: 19. The mistake was in the copy.

"The Last Vials."—Bro. Grant informs us that Bro. A. F. Porter, 726 Erie Street, Philadelphia, is the agent for this publication. Price $1.00 per year—published monthly.

"The Fourth."—We spent this anniversary quite happily at the Grove Meeting in Palmer, but have not room to speak of it this week.

☞ Your particular attention is called to the fact that at our Wilbraham Camp Meeting last fall, it was voted to purchase, of Bro.'s Munger and Ladd, the cooking apparatus, crockery and boarding utensils. To effect this, it was thought best to raise a fund, and hence a subscription list was opened, and many of the friends subscribed toward this object. Some of the subscribers paid their pledges, but the most of what was subscribed is still unpaid. Our object at this time is to call attention to this matter, and earnestly request the brethren and sisters to send their subscriptions immediately to Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., so that there may be nothing lacking which will conduce to the comfort and convenience of those who shall go up to our contemplated feast of tabernacles. Let every one respond promptly. F. H. B.

For the Crisis.

A Wise Answer.

A good brother in Christ, who has passed his threescore years, and has been a devoted christian for more than fifty years, also been looking for the return of our Lord for a long time, and life only through Christ, was asked this question: "If you were a young man, would you take up arms to defend our country?" He replied, "Our government is the best in the world, and its general principles are based on the Bible. The rights, liberty and happiness of man, and all sacred institutions and free speech are sustained by our government. All that is dear to us in this life is threatened by lawless men, and the only course government can pursue is to put down this rebellion, or all the rights of men will be destroyed. Now it is evident some must go and stop this rebellion: now if there are not enough to go, I would answer the question at once; but as there has always been men enough to fight since Cain killed Abel, I don't think it necessary for me to answer that question until the time come when there are not men enough ready to go."

This I think a very wise answer. It clearly develops a reflective mind, and one that looks things in the face and weighs both sides carefully. Rashness is no part of christian graces, and when a man says he has no sympathy for the governments of this world, nor don't care a fig about them, he speaks rashly and develops a very narrow mind and a very selfish principle. Right is right, whether in Church or State. Wrong is wrong, wherever it may exist. Good things, good principles, good laws, good government should have the sympathy of all christians. And every christian should lend his influence in the direction of good and right. Truth is not tarnished or its power lost by wicked men holding it. Neither are good principles destroyed or should be abandoned because they exist among wicked men.

Let Christians be eclectic as a sect; like the bee, gather honey wherever it may be found, and leave the poisonous element for those that want it. Christianity is the embodiment of all that is good, right, truthful, every where and in every thing. Let your sympathy reach far, your principles divine permeating every element, and, like the magnet, attracting every affinity. With clear perception, careful investigation, a heart Christ-like, attracting all good; with a devoted life, strong love for truth, and an eye single for the glory of God; with the blessed hope alive, until our Lord takes the reins of government.

Inquiries.

If the great image spoken of in Daniel is extant, considering where it is to be smitten, should we not expect that process to commence here? See Jer. 50: 12, 13. I would refer the reader to Ps. 110: 27, taken in connection with the whole chapter; likewise from the 10th to the 24th verses of the 21st chapter of Jer. What does the Savior mean by having authority over ten cities? Likewise, he that overcometh I will give power over the nations? Rev. 2: 26, 27.

Inquiries.

Will some one please give, through the Crisis, an explanation of Revelation 22: 9? Also, who was the angel that talked with John on the Isle of Patmos?

Pine Swamp Grove Meeting.

This meeting was thinly attended at first on account of hoeing, which had been delayed by reason of the wet weather. Saturday and Sunday especially the gathering was large; and though we were interrupted by showers, we trust that some good was accomplished. A special interest was manifest among the brethren for purification both of flesh and spirit. Bro. J. K. Bellows saw the necessity of ministers being ensamples to the flock, and indulging in no practice that was injurious or filthy; hence he promised before God and man to give up the use of tobacco forever. Bro. I. Ackerman also seceded in the same direction. Then followed Bro. Hart, Bro. Terf, the sweet singer, Brs. Wartrom and Bishop. We left them Monday morning undecided what to do with the unsmoked and unchewed thing; but as we reached Plainfield meeting we learned, by letter from Bro. Goodrich, that they had concluded to make a burnt offering of their Dagon. So the smoke of about one hundred and fifty pounds went up, and though it might not have been a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savor, still it may have been quite acceptable to God. I mention this by their request. God bless them, is my prayer; and pity all others that cannot live without it. [Amen. Ed. Crisis.]

PLAINFIELD MEETING.

A larger gathering than formerly, and in some respects the best. One prayer and conference meeting continued to increase in interest for four hours. I think I never saw the mountain children work or feel better. If Bro. Hastings wants to see a "model church," he had better go upon the Mountains, rather than to Thessalonica.

And now, after three weeks' out-door labor, I am bending homeward. The Holyoke is lifting itself up against the rising cloud in the west. The big chestnut is lending her aid in staying the rays of the meridian sun. The cakes, cheese and apples from among that hundred fold of mothers, brothers and sisters, having satisfactorily accomplished their work of refreshing, I lay me down to rest. But O, how brief is rest here! Yet there remaineth a rest for the people of God, for which I labor and suffer reproach.

Correspondence.

From Bro. D. Edson Smith.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed please find one dollar for the World's Crisis for the coming six months. I received the sample copies you so kindly sent me one week ago, and have perused part of them. They have done me much good; and that you may understand how that is, I will relate briefly my past experience. Seven years ago I trust God, for Christ's sake, forgave my past sins. I was baptized and became a member of the Baptist church. But, although I tried hard, yet I never could believe in the eternal misery theory.

Two years ago, while traveling in this State for the Am. S. S. Un., I one day met a man, who, during my conversation with him, made the remark that he did not believe that man possessed an immortal soul. I was astonished and thought, here is an infidel, surely, for the Bible teaches the immortality of the soul. But I never was one of those who knew they were right, and would not be convinced that they were not, so I asked his reasons. He gave them to me, briefly, together with an old copy of the Bible Examiner, and told me of a man in the town, where I was to spend the night, of the same faith. I saw him, and he gave me some of George Storrs' works. I read them, together with my Bible, and, thanks to the Holy Spirit, my eyes were opened. I continued studying my Bible and asking the God of truth to lead me aright, and at the end of four months came to the conclusion that it was my duty to state to the church my views. I did so frankly. They took no action on the matter, but intimated that, as I became older, I would see my error. (I was twenty years old.) My father was a Baptist minister and wished me to become one. I wanted to be a servant of Christ, but not a Baptist, with my views. He sent me to Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y., hoping I would be convinced of what he believed an error. I remained there one year, meeting with much persecution and having one hundred and fifty students to argue against. But neither they, nor any one else, minister or laymen, have ever been able to bring sufficient Bible proof to convince me that I am in error, and to-day I am firmer than ever. I trust that I have been the means in God's hands of leading others out of the old doctrine of going to heaven at death, or at any other time, and the eternal life of misery of the lost, into the belief that "the meek shall inherit the earth," that "all the wicked will God destroy," etc. I have been taught to shun "Millerites" as other extreme fanatics. I believe Christ's second coming is near, but am not able to boldly advocate and defend the belief, having not been able to obtain works on that topic. I was obliged to leave school last fall on account of my belief.

I am now married, and settled on a farm as a tenant, intending to scatter tracts throughout this great field, and to speak for Jesus now and then. I am totally alone in my belief. All oppose me. I know of no one within twenty-five miles believing as I do. I never have seen but one other man besides the two spoken of who held the same views. At times I seem ready to faint. I have taken the Bible Examiner since it last commenced, but it is only monthly. I have purchased a few books; these, with Jesus, are my only friends. Thus you can imagine how great a gift these papers were. I would like some work on Christ's second coming.

Yours, in hope of life through Christ alone, D. Edson Smith.

Iowa City, Iowa, July 1, 1861.

Note by the Editor.—Experience has taught us how to sympathize with you, dear brother, in your isolation. Be faithful to God and his truth, and when you "seem ready to faint," think of "the recompense of the reward" which will crown fidelity in the Master's service. "In due season we shall reap, if we faint not." We trust the Crisis will aid you in your researches after truth, but we counsel you to test every sentiment you find in it by the infallible standard of God's word. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. Religious books and newspapers should not have the effect to diminish our interest in the diligent study of the Bible. When we can substantiate our opinions with a positive "thus saith the Lord," it is of precious little consequence whether we are backed up by human authority or not.

In answer to your inquiry, we would say that James T. Robinson of Iowa City takes our paper. Find him out and rejoice together in the "blessed hope."

From Bro. James Watkins.

Bro. Wendell:—Do the meek inherit the earth? If they do, there is no reason why mankind desire to go at death away beyond the bounds of time and space. If the meek are to inherit the earth in its renovated and purified state, when the curse is removed, and the land brought back to its Eden state, there is no cause why the human family should have a desire to leave it and go to a place which no mind can conceive of, and where they would be deprived of all that is calculated to make man happy. Were the question propounded to me, whether I would rather live on this earth with the curse upon it, or in such a place as that, I would say, let me still live on this earth, and struggle on in a state of mortality, and contend with all the ills that mortal man is heir to. But, thanks be to God, I have found in the word of God a better hope—one which reaches beyond this present state of things, and enables me to look forward to the time when all evil shall be removed from the earth and it shall be brought back to its Eden state. Then it will be just the place in which to enjoy eternal life. We who are faithful and found worthy at the coming of our Master, will inherit the earth and enjoy our final inheritance. There is no place that I can conceive of so well adapted to the human family as the earth. For this let us live—for this let us pray, that when he who is our life shall appear, we may appear with him in glory. Then there will be none to scoff and sneer at us because we believe that Christ is soon coming to redeem his people and give them immortal glory. This hope is worth living for, yea, and worth praying for; and every one that hath this hope of the Bible, will purify himself and wait with patience the coming of the Lord.

Liberty Mills, Ind., June 12, 1861.

From Bro. Ali Andrews.

Bro. Wendell:—I am very sorry to hear so much said against the defence of our government, which is the best that man was ever blessed with, and I think the best that man will ever have before He whose right it is shall take the kingdom and give it to the saints of the Most High. I feel thankful for the blessings of good government. I have visited Austria and Spain, with other countries, and have visited their prisons, and know how christians have to suffer under a bad government; and my prayer is that God will bless our rulers, and guide our armies to victory, and to the punishing of "truce breakers" and traitors, until there is not one left in our land, whether they be in the Advent church or out of it, as I look for his Son from heaven to punish evil doers. I dare not support a paper that stands aloof from the defence of our country's liberties.

Bridgeport, Ct., July 1st, 1861.

From Sister C. H. Cotton.

Dear Brother:—We welcome you to your responsible station. Although a stranger, save one friendly greeting at the Wilbraham Camp, yet we feel interested in your welfare; and our prayer is that your labors may be crowned with success, and that the paper may continue to be, as it has been, a source of light and comfort to its many readers, and the hearts of the weary pilgrims be gladdened by its weekly visits until the Master appears. To this end may you have wisdom from God to guide you in all your labors of love; and while you feed the flock of God with meat in due season, may you also be fed with rich dainties from the Master's table.

Yours, in hope.

From Eld. W. Sheldon.

Bro. Wendell:—Our West Point Grove meeting was a good meeting. The scattered saints were refreshed. The following ministers were in attendance:—C. W. Smith, G. W. Barnes, W. S. Shears, G. W. Turner, and myself. The preaching was timely, the prayer-meetings were spirited, the love feast on Sunday morning was refreshing, and the eating of the Lord's Supper at the large table on the Grove ground, at the close of the Sunday evening meeting, was a solemn and impressive season.

This meeting, in its spirit and result, was materially different from a Methodist camp-meeting which I attended a short time before, at which I listened to three sermons. I there found myself a personage of extensive notoriety. I appeared to be the mark to be fired at. Soon after getting on to the ground, a self-conceited priest, strutting up with lordly pomposity, said to me, "Well, sir, I suppose you don't like our way of doing business." To this I replied, "I have no fault to find with your practical arrangement; if we differed, it would probably be on points of doctrine." He tauntingly added, "I had rather labor to save a man who has got a soul, than one who has not got one." "So had I," was my reply, "for I should not think a man without a soul worth saving." Seeing he had not been rightly informed concerning my belief about the soul, and feeling ashamed to question me concerning my faith upon this topic, after such a random shot, the conversation ended; but the pop-gun artillery from the stand roared forth their pent-up vengeance at me, in the same random style, to all of which I listened with unruffled pleasure; for it is a pleasure to me to contrast the weakness of their puny arguments with the strength of truth. The last sermon to which I listened was from a presiding elder. He took for his text "Refuse profane and old wives' fables." He boldly took the position that when these new doctrines came up and claimed an investigation, we were under obligation to "refuse them, without investigation," illustrating the danger of investigation by a little boy chasing a butterfly till lost.

Doubtless this is the strongest argument they can produce for the preservation of their craft. This is fully endorsing the principle couched in a poem attributed to the British after a defeat by the Americans, from whom they fled in hot haste,—

"We beat as well as they,
We beat in running, and got away."

They feel confident that they can "beat" if they can only induce their people to keep out of the reach of the artillery of truth.

P. S.—A Grove meeting will be held near this place, (Ironton, Wis.,) commencing on the 12th of July, and holding over Lord's day following. W. S.

☞ [We subjoin the following, which was received after the above was put in type.—Ed.]

Bro. Wendell:—Our Baraboo Grove meeting is over. It was well attended, and left a deep impression upon many minds. Brethren Barnes, Smith and Shears were present to assist in preaching the word. The preaching took effect, and the prayer meetings were good. On Sunday night, between forty and fifty persons sat down to the Lord's table. This is cheering for this new field. May the good work still go on. We are not troubled in this region with that religion-killing theory, which denies the work of the holy Spirit on the heart, which has spread death in its wake in other parts of the west. We pity those who have fallen into this trap of the devil. We can as easily deny God as to deny his Spirit. May the Lord keep us.

W. Sheldon.

From Bro. James M. Weston.

Bro. Wendell:—We have but a few names of us in Keeseville who are waiting the coming of the Lord and trying to be ready to meet him with joy, and have a right to enter in to his kingdom. We have never had any preaching except what our dear Bro. Grant has labored with us last winter and this spring; still, we feel strong in the Lord and his truth. Praise the Lord for the light of his truth that he has revealed to us by his Spirit, that we need walk no longer in darkness, but now we rejoice in the light of life. We wish to be remembered by all of God's people in prayer that we may continue in his love and gain eternal life, and that numbers may be added to us of such as will be saved. Now, brother, you will of course see of how much importance the Crisis is to us; it is all the preaching we have. May God bless you and assist you to feed the flock of God, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

Keeseville, N. Y., June 18.

From Bro. Jer'h. Carr.

Bro. Wendell:—I will do what I can to extend the circulation of the Crisis. I like it very much, and wish it might be in the hands of thousands more; we will do what we can and leave the result with the Lord. I am trying to hold up the truth as best I can, proclaiming the Lord at hand. May the Lord direct in all things. May the Lord bless you in your labors. I hope you have much of his grace to sustain you until the Master comes to give us immortality. O, blessed day! it will soon be here! May we be ready to say, "lo this is our God." Yours in the blessed hope.

South Albion, Me., June 9.

From Eld. R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Wendell:—I bid you a hearty welcome to the Editorial chair. Remember that you occupy a responsible position! God grant that you may be valiant for the truth—the whole truth, as revealed in the living oracles. Brother, you need the boldness and decision of a Luther, coupled with all the meekness of a Melancthon, in order that you may be successful in turning men to Jesus, by presenting the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus.

But I took my pen to inform the readers of the Crisis that truth has not lost its power. In some hearts it finds a warm reception. It is easy to preach when you can see the falling tear freely dropping from the eye, and a heavenly smile resting upon the faces of Our Father's family, as the words of life fall from the lips of the heralds of the good news;—easy to preach when the place of worship is full and running over with human beings, who will listen with breathless attention to the strange doctrine, (as some call it) which I present. My heart is full while I write—mercy lingers—Heaven is waiting, and souls may be brought into a saveable state, and at last reach the glory-capped hills of our Eden home!

Since my last for the Crisis, I have baptized nine mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins; and, on their way rejoicing, they are journeying for the fair fields of Eden! while I am on my way to preach the good news to both families who shall assemble at Adams' Mills.

On board the Bay Quinte, June 27, '61.

From Sister S. S. Craft.

Dear Bro.:—I have no other preaching but the Harbinger and Crisis. I could not do without them on any account. I would rather do with one less meal per day, for I am away so far from any of my dear brethren and sisters—out of the range of any of them. Bear Brother, if any of my brethren should visit Cincinnati, do come twenty-two miles below. You will find the poor lonely one here ready to receive you, and you shall not go away empty handed. If I say God bless you, I will do as well as say. And I must say I am well pleased with the Crisis; I read its pages with joy, and when I am lonely and sorrowful, I find something there to console and comfort me. I love what I read there next to my Bible. I ask an interest in the prayers of my brethren, that I may not fall by the way, but that I may watch and pray, and be found ready to meet my Savior with joy. Your Sister in hope.

Lawrenceburgh, Dearborn Co., Ind.

From Bro. T. Ongley.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—For the first time I use your name in writing to the Crisis. I hope that you will be able to present to the household of faith, from time to time, that portion of meat that will be in due season; also, to stir up the watchmen to their duty, that the trumpet may be made to give a certain sound, and the people be ready when the change shall take place in the kingdoms of the world. I am satisfied that the rightful heir is soon coming to reign. Let us be ready to hail him with joy, is the prayer of your brother in Christ Jesus.

Blooming Valley, Pa., June 26.

Obituary Notices.

Sister Sarah R., wife of Bro. Wm. Shapley, fell asleep in Jesus June 11th, 1861, aged forty-one years.

This beloved sister gave her heart to the Lord in 1837, and joined the Methodist church. She, with her husband, remained with that body in good standing until 1842, when the proclamation, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" was proclaimed in this city (Portsmouth), which they gladly received and proclaimed to others. They, with others, had to withdraw from the church, as they had embraced views that were not considered Methodistical. Nevertheless they,—being satisfied their faith was Biblical,—continued in well doing, rejoicing in the blessed hope. Their house was always a pilgrim's home, as our preacher's know, and the subject of this notice a devoted Martha, ready to administer to their wants.

For some three years Sister S. has had her constitution much impaired by sickness at different times. Last fall she was deprived of the use of her limbs by paralysis, from which she only partially recovered. Combinations of diseases seemed to develop themselves at this time, and gradually wasted her system until the dropsy terminated her life. She did not believe death was an angel of mercy, nor the voice of Jesus to call her to his arms. Yet she had no fear of death. She was satisfied God's grace was sufficient in all emergencies. She frequently said to her husband, "don't hold me! let me go!" And often said to me she would like to live until our Savior comes, if she could only do good; but if not, she preferred to fall asleep than to live and suffer. She looked to the resurrection with deep interest, expecting to greet the saints, and her lovely and only daughter, who died some three years ago.

Her husband feels deeply his loss. The affectionate and only son expressed his deep grief in this touching sentence: "What can we do without mother? It would be better if it were me." Three sisters, who are lone widows, and one brother, with many others, (our church not excepted) are mourning. May our Heavenly Father sustain our dear brother and son, and give us all the consolation we need in this hour of affliction. By grace aiding, let us all meet our Sister in the coming kingdom. Funeral attended by the writer.

W. Pratt.

Died, in Grant County, Indiana, May 23d, 1861, of typhoid fever, Bro. Jesse Graham, in the sixty-ninth year of his life.

Bro. Graham was a resident of Springville, Wis., but was on a visit to Indiana when he closed his earthly career. He was born within five miles of Harper's Ferry, Va., and united with the Presbyterian church about thirty-six years ago. About thirty years ago he became a believer in the non-immortality of man. He was firm in the belief that the coming of Christ is near. He leaves a wife and thirteen children to mourn.

Father Graham will be greatly missed in the vicinity of his home, as he was extensively known, and never backward in defending the truth. He will not be soon forgotten. He testified on his death bed that he was ready to sleep in Jesus.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

Long will Father Graham live in the memory of the writer for his deeds of benevolence. But he has passed away; he sleeps in the enemy's land for a little while. Soon he will live again to die no more. W. Sheldon.

Died, at Winchester, Conn., May 25th, 1861, of scarlet fever, Frank Amos, only son of Lewis and Caroline P. Andrews, aged nine years.

Our hearts are sad, but we mourn not as those without hope. We know we shall see him again, where sorrow's tears shall not be shed nor hearts be sad. Frank was one of the good boys, always obedient to his parents, and loved to read his Bible in the long winter evenings that are past. He would sit from early candlelight until nine o'clock and read from the sacred pages; and when told that it was bed time, would say, "let me read this chapter first." He was a thoughtful child; selected for his reading books on religious subjects; when other children were at play, Frank might often be seen sitting under some tree, or on the fence top, in deep study. But, dear one, he is gone from our embrace, we bade him the last farewell on earth, and kissed him for the last time until we meet in the kingdom. The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. Praise the Lord, O my soul. Lewis Andrews.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Lord Chancellor Campbell was found dead in his bed-room on the morning of the 23d. He retired in the evening previous in good health. His death was caused by the rupture of a blood-vessel.

The Times continues to maintain that Americans have no ground for abusing England, beyond mortification at England's lack of appreciation, and says the Northerners have thrown themselves into a passion, and must be left to recover.

Sir Archibald Allison, in a letter to Cassius M. Clay, contends that the American Constitution is a failure, and recommends a national church and a monarchy as a remedy.

The conflagration in London, briefly telegraphed by the Persia, was the most disastrous that has occurred for generations. Immense piles of warehouses, on the Surrey side of London bridge, filled with all kinds of produce, were destroyed. The loss exceeded two millions sterling. Some of the estimates make the extent of the loss from three to four millions sterling.

The Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia had arrived in England on a visit to the Queen.

Mr. Cobden addressed his constituents at Rockdale on the 26th. He eulogized the French Government and the commercial treaty with that country denounced the volunteer movement in England, and ridiculed the bugbear idea of a French invasion.

The recognition of Italy by France has been formally announced in the Moniteur by Ricasoli in the Italian Parliament. The latter said the diplomatic relations of the two countries would soon be re-established.

The Roman question is still pending, and a favorable solution is hoped for.

A party of Bourbonists who landed near Syracuse were arrested by the troops, and 23 were afterward shot.

The new treaty of commerce between France and Brazil is confirmed. It will involve a general remodelling of tariff duties.

HUNGARY.

The agitation in Hungary is reported to be increasing.

Funeral services at Pesth in honor of Cavour were interdicted by telegraphic orders from Vienna.

It is reported that additional troops are under orders for Hungary.

Reports had been current that the English Ambassador at Vienna had insisted on the solution of the Hungarian question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says Ricasoli's note, in reply to the French recognition, is firm and uncompromising. He does not admit of reservations and declines entering into any engagement as to the future, which would interfere with the completeness of the new kingdom.

Abdul Medjid, Sultan of Turkey, whose death was announced by the last steamer, was thirty-nine years old at his death. He ascended the throne in 1839. The empire was in a disturbed condition, and his reign would have been short but for the intervention of England and Germany. Since the treaties of 1840 and 1841, the Sultan has been but an instrument in the hands of others. He had the good sense, however, to follow the advice of so liberal a minister as Reschid Pacha, in authorizing many important reforms. His conduct, also, toward the Hungarian refugees will be remembered to his honor. His death had been expected for some time.—Boston Jour.

Christianity Down South.

[We are permitted to make the following extract from a private letter recently written by a clergyman of Cincinnati.—Hartford Press.]

Yesterday I attended the daily prayer-meeting, where the following remarks were made by the Rev. Mr. Cooper, late of Brownsville, Tenn. I repeat his words as nearly as I can remember:

"My brethren and sisters, I thank God that I once more breathe the air of Liberty. Help me to bless the Lord that I have reached a place where christians meet to pray. For months I have heard no prayer but for strength to kill the Yankees. They only thirst for blood. Even the religious women of my church spend their time in target shooting, and wear revolvers at their waist; and one of them, whom I always esteemed a most pious woman, declared she was perfectly willing to go to hell if she could first kill one Yankee. Smiths are constantly employed in manufacturing knives, for they expect a hand to hand fight, and their only cry is blood, blood. They will listen to no reason and regard no truth. God has evidently sent them strong delusions to believe a lie. I have been many years a pastor of a church in B., and have never spoken on the subject of politics. At a public meeting, a few nights since, it was resolved that I should leave the state or be hanged. A friend informed me of the fact, and by his assistance I escaped with my family, leaving everything I possessed in the hands of my enemies. Oh! praise the Lord with me for my deliverance."

Mr. C. is a minister of the Old School, Presbyterian church, and I suppose the foregoing fairly represents the spirit of secession.

The Object of the War.—Gerrit Smith, the well known abolitionist, in a published letter, expresses the belief that the war is sure to end in emancipation, but even he says of the conflict on its present basis:

"Some speak as if the abolition of slavery were the object. But the putting down of the gigantic conspiracy against the Government is it. That and nothing else is it. In other words, the one object of the uprising is to save the nation from being broken up into thirty or forty nations—the doctrine of its assailants being that each State is a sovereignty, is a nation. We confess that we are all the more eager to preserve our Government because of the infamous pro-slavery character of that which is thrust forward to take its place. But no government can be so good as to reconcile us to the fraudulent and forcible displacing of our own by it."

Compromise on the Other Side.

A letter from Richmond, June 26, published in the Charleston Mercury—and from which we make an extract elsewhere—throws out some things which may possibly afford light on the compromise rumors which were so prevalent a fortnight ago. It seems the same rumors were then flying about the rebel camp, and had taken so confident a shape that the end of the war was predicted by Christmas.

This confirms the idea which we expressed at the time, that these reports were put out as feelers of the public sentiment, and had their origin among the rebels. The writer to the Mercury does not appear to discredit the existence or the success of the compromise attempts, although he foresees the bitter disappointment which will be entailed upon the Southern people. He hopes, therefore, that the end of the war will not come until a brilliant and effective blow shall have been struck which will abash and humiliate the North.

All this looks as if the conviction were spreading among the rebels that they have got to back down from their position sooner or later, but they hope in some way to maintain their prestige still undiminished, if not actually enhanced. But here is their great mistake. No matter how or when the war may end, as overweening pride began it, that pride must have its fall. The political domination of slavery, of the sectional South, is gone forever. The taint of disloyalty will stick to it like the poisoned shirt of mythology. The discredit which broke down the old Federalists on account of the Hartford Convention, will be but a drop in the bucket compared to that which will weigh for generations upon the slave power, even admitting its full return to all the legal privileges and securities of the past. Its defenders will know better than ever to menace disunion again, or to calculate upon a "divided North," or to whisper a syllable about the omnipotence of cotton. They have torn away the veil of delusion which screened their idol, and now they must be content with the impression of repulsiveness which it makes on all. As to allowing this great vantage-ground to be lost to the loyal masses, by any diplomatic or military exploit, it will not be done. We will risk anything on that prediction.—Boston Journal.

Washington, July 8.—About one hundred Garibaldians who went over into Virginia to-day, owing to some disaffection, mutinied, and returned to Washington this evening in a state of great excitement. Troops are now being turned out to apprehend them. They will be shot down if they do not yield.

Married.

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to George T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick,
Miles Grant,
Geo. T. Adams, } Committee.

Special Notice.

Eld. Miles Grant was appointed by the Christian Publication Society to act as Travelling Agent for the Crisis. Monies on subscription, for publications, and on account may, therefore, be paid to him and he will account to the office. Payments made in this way to Bro. Grant will be acknowledged in the Crisis the same as if remitted to the undersigned. Rufus Wendell,
Business Agent.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

H. L. HASTINGS, [illegible]
January, 1861.

From Eld. W. Sheldon.

Bro. Wendell:—Our West Point Grove meeting was a good meeting. The scattered saints were refreshed. The following ministers were in attendance:—C. W. Smith, G. W. Barnes, W. S. Shears, G. W. Turner, and myself. The preaching was timely, the prayer-meetings were spirited, the love feast on Sunday morning was refreshing, and the eating of the Lord's Supper at the large table on the Grove ground, at the close of the Sunday evening meeting, was a solemn and impressive season.

This meeting, in its spirit and result, was materially different from a Methodist camp-meeting which I attended a short time before, at which I listened to three sermons. I there found myself a personage of extensive notoriety. I appeared to be the mark to be fired at. Soon after getting on to the ground, a self-conceited priest, strutting up with lordly pomposity, said to me, "Well, sir, I suppose you don't like our way of doing business." To this I replied, "I have no fault to find with your practical arrangement; if we differed, it would probably be on points of doctrine." He tauntingly added, "I had rather labor to save a man who has got a soul, than one who has not got one." "So had I," was my reply, "for I should not think a man without a soul worth saving." Seeing he had not been rightly informed concerning my belief about the soul, and feeling ashamed to question me concerning my faith upon this topic, after such a random shot, the conversation ended; but the pop-gun artillery from the stand roared forth their pent-up vengeance at me, in the same random style, to all of which I listened with unruffled pleasure; for it is a pleasure to me to contrast the weakness of their puny arguments with the strength of truth. The last sermon to which I listened was from a presiding elder. He took for his text "Refuse profane and old wives' fables." He boldly took the position that when these new doctrines came up and claimed an investigation, we were under obligation to "refuse them, without investigation," illustrating the danger of investigation by a little boy chasing a butterfly till lost.

Doubtless this is the strongest argument they can produce for the preservation of their craft. This is fully endorsing the principle couched in a poem attributed to the British after a defeat by the Americans, from whom they fled in hot haste,—

"We beat as well as they,
We beat in running, and got away."

They feel confident that they can "beat" if they can only induce their people to keep out of the reach of the artillery of truth.

P. S.—A Grove meeting will be held near this place, (Ironton, Wis.,) commencing on the 12th of July, and holding over Lord's day following. W. S.

☞ [We subjoin the following, which was received after the above was put in type.—Ed.]

Bro. Wendell:—Our Baraboo Grove meeting is over. It was well attended, and left a deep impression upon many minds. Brethren Barnes, Smith and Shears were present to assist in preaching the word. The preaching took effect, and the prayer meetings were good. On Sunday night, between forty and fifty persons sat down to the Lord's table. This is cheering for this new field. May the good work still go on. We are not troubled in this region with that religion-killing theory, which denies the work of the holy Spirit on the heart, which has spread death in its wake in other parts of the west. We pity those who have fallen into this trap of the devil. We can as easily deny God as to deny his Spirit. May the Lord keep us.

W. Sheldon.

From Bro. James M. Weston.

Bro. Wendell:—We have but a few names of us in Keeseville who are waiting the coming of the Lord and trying to be ready to meet him with joy, and have a right to enter in to his kingdom. We have never had any preaching except what our dear Bro. Grant has labored with us last winter and this spring; still, we feel strong in the Lord and his truth. Praise the Lord for the light of his truth that he has revealed to us by his Spirit, that we need walk no longer in darkness, but now we rejoice in the light of life. We wish to be remembered by all of God's people in prayer that we may continue in his love and gain eternal life, and that numbers may be added to us of such as will be saved. Now, brother, you will of course see of how much importance the Crisis is to us; it is all the preaching we have. May God bless you and assist you to feed the flock of God, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

Keeseville, N. Y., June 18.

From Bro. Jer'h. Carr.

Bro. Wendell:—I will do what I can to extend the circulation of the Crisis. I like it very much, and wish it might be in the hands of thousands more; we will do what we can and leave the result with the Lord. I am trying to hold up the truth as best I can, proclaiming the Lord at hand. May the Lord direct in all things. May the Lord bless you in your labors. I hope you have much of his grace to sustain you until the Master comes to give us immortality. O, blessed day! it will soon be here! May we be ready to say, "lo this is our God." Yours in the blessed hope.

South Albion, Me., June 8.

From Eld. R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Wendell:—I bid you a hearty welcome to the Editorial chair. Remember that you occupy a responsible position! God grant that you may be valiant for the truth—the whole truth, as revealed in the living oracles. Brother, you need the boldness and decision of a Luther, coupled with all the meekness of a Melancthon, in order that you may be successful in turning men to Jesus, by presenting the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus.

But I took my pen to inform the readers of the Crisis that truth has not lost its power. In some hearts it finds a warm reception. It is easy to preach when you can see the falling tear freely dropping from the eye, and a heavenly smile resting upon the faces of Our Father's family, as the words of life fall from the lips of the heralds of the good news;—easy to preach when the place of worship is full and running over with human beings, who will listen with breathless attention to the strange doctrine, (as some call it) which I present. My heart is full while I write—mercy lingers—Heaven is waiting, and souls may be brought into a saveable state, and at last reach the glory-capped hills of our Eden home!

Since my last for the Crisis, I have baptized nine mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins; and, on their way rejoicing, they are journeying for the fair fields of Eden! while I am on my way to preach the good news to both families who shall assemble at Adams' Mills.

On board the Bay Quinte, June 27, '61.

From Sister S. S. Craft.

Dear Bro.:—I have no other preaching but the Harbinger and Crisis. I could not do without them on any account. I would rather do with one less meal per day, for I am away so far from any of my dear brethren and sisters—out of the range of any of them. Dear Brother, if any of my brethren should visit Cincinnati, do come twenty-two miles below. You will find the poor lonely one here ready to receive you, and you shall not go away empty handed. If I say God bless you, I will do as well as say. And I must say I am well pleased with the Crisis; I read its pages with joy, and when I am lonely and sorrowful, I find something there to console and comfort me. I love what I read there next to my Bible. I ask an interest in the prayers of my brethren, that I may not fall by the way, but that I may watch and pray, and be found ready to meet my Savior with joy. Your Sister in hope.

Lawrenceburgh, Dearborn Co., Ind.

From Bro. T. Ongley.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—For the first time I use your name in writing to the Crisis. I hope that you will be able to present to the household of faith, from time to time, that portion of meat that will be in due season; also, to stir up the watchmen to their duty, that the trumpet may be made to give a certain sound, and the people be ready when the change shall take place in the kingdoms of the world. I am satisfied that the rightful heir is soon coming to reign. Let us be ready to hail him with joy, is the prayer of your brother in Christ Jesus.

Blooming Valley, Pa., June 26.

Obituary Notices.

Sister Sarah R., wife of Bro. Wm Shapley, fell asleep in Jesus June 11th, 1861, aged forty-one years.

This beloved sister gave her heart to the Lord in 1837, and joined the Methodist church. She, with her husband, remained with that body in good standing until 1842, when the proclamation, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" was proclaimed in this city (Portsmouth), which they gladly received and proclaimed to others. They, with others, had to withdraw from the church, as they had embraced views that were not considered Methodistical. Nevertheless they,—being satisfied their faith was Biblical,—continued in well doing, rejoicing in the blessed hope. Their house was always a pilgrim's home, as our preacher's know, and the subject of this notice a devoted Martha, ready to administer to their wants.

For some three years Sister S has had her constitution much impaired by sickness at different times. Last fall she was deprived of the use of her limbs by paralysis, from which she only partially recovered. Combinations of diseases seemed to develop themselves at this time, and gradually wasted her system until the dropsy terminated her life. She did not believe death was an angel of mercy, nor the voice of Jesus to call her to his arms. Yet she had no fear of death. She was satisfied God's grace was sufficient in all emergencies. She frequently said to her husband, "don't hold me! let me go!" And often said to me she would like to live until our Savior comes, if she could only do good; but if not, she preferred to fall asleep than to live and suffer. She looked to the resurrection with deep interest, expecting to greet the saints, and her lovely and only daughter, who died some three years ago.

Her husband feels deeply his loss. The affectionate and only son expressed his deep grief in this touching sentence: "What can we do without mother? It would be better if it were me." Three sisters, who are lone widows, and one brother, with many others, (our church not excepted) are mourning. May our Heavenly Father sustain our dear brother and son, and give us all the consolation we need in this hour of affliction. By grace aiding, let us all meet our Sister in the coming kingdom. Funeral attended by the writer.

W. Pratt.

Died, in [illegible], May 23d, 1861, of typhoid fever, Bro. John Graham, in the sixty-sixth year of his life.

Bro. Graham was a resident of Springville, Wis., but was on a visit to Indiana when he closed his earthly career. He was born within five miles of Harper's Ferry, Va., and united with the Presbyterian church about thirty-six years ago. About thirty years ago he became a believer in the non-immortality of man. He was firm in the belief that the coming of Christ is near. He leaves a wife and thirteen children to mourn.

Father Graham will be greatly missed in the vicinity of his home, as he was extensively known, and never backward in defending the truth. He will not be soon forgotten. He testified on his death bed that he was ready to sleep in Jesus.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

Long will Father Graham live in the memory of the writer for his deeds of benevolence. But he has passed away; he sleeps in the enemy's land for a little while. Soon he will live again to die no more. W. Sheldon.

Died, at Winchester, Conn., May 25th, 1861, of scarlet fever, Frank Amos, only son of Lewis and Caroline P. Andrews, aged nine years.

Our hearts are sad, but we mourn not as those without hope. We know we shall see him again, where sorrow's tears shall not be shed nor hearts be sad. Frank was one of the good boys, always obedient to his parents, and loved to read his Bible in the long winter evenings that are past. He would sit from early candlelight until nine o'clock and read from the sacred pages; and when told that it was bed time, would say, "let me read this chapter first." He was a thoughtful child; selected for his reading books on religious subjects; when other children were at play, Frank might often be seen sitting under some tree, or on the fence top, in deep study. But, dear one, he is gone from our embrace, we bade him the last farewell on earth, and kissed him for the last time until we meet in the kingdom. The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. Praise the Lord, O my soul. Lewis Andrews.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Lord Chancellor Campbell was found dead in his bed-room on the morning of the 23d. He retired in the evening previous in good health. His death was caused by the rupture of a blood-vessel.

The Times continues to maintain that Americans have no ground for abusing England, beyond mortification at England's lack of appreciation, and says the Northerners have thrown themselves into a passion, and must be left to recover.

Sir Archibald Allison, in a letter to Cassius M. Clay, contends that the American Constitution is a failure, and recommends a national church and a monarchy as a remedy.

The conflagration in London, briefly telegraphed by the Persia, was the most disastrous that has occurred for generations. Immense piles of warehouses, on the Surrey side of London bridge, filled with all kinds of produce, were destroyed. The loss exceeded two millions sterling. Some of the estimates make the extent of the loss from three to four millions sterling.

The Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia had arrived in England on a visit to the Queen.

Mr. Cobden addressed his constituents at Rockdale on the 26th. He eulogized the French Government and the commercial treaty with that country denounced the volunteer movement in England, and ridiculed the bugbear idea of a French invasion.

The recognition of Italy by France has been formally announced in the Moniteur by Ricasoli in the Italian Parliament. The latter said the diplomatic relations of the two countries would soon be re-established.

The Roman question is still pending, and a favorable solution is hoped for.

A party of Bourbonists who landed near Syracuse were arrested by the troops, and 23 were afterward shot.

The new treaty of commerce between France and Brazil is confirmed. It will involve a general remodelling of tariff duties.

HUNGARY.

The agitation in Hungary is reported to be increasing.

Funeral services at Pesth in honor of Cavour were interdicted by telegraphic orders from Vienna.

It is reported that additional troops are under orders for Hungary.

Reports had been current that the English Ambassador at Vienna had insisted on the solution of the Hungarian question.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says Ricasoli's note, in reply to the French recognition, is firm and uncompromising. He does not admit of reservations and declines entering into any engagement as to the future, which would interfere with the completeness of the new kingdom.

Abdul Medjid, Sultan of Turkey, whose death was announced by the last steamer, was thirty-nine years old at his death. He ascended the throne in 1839. The empire was in a disturbed condition, and his reign would have been short but for the intervention of England and Germany. Since the treaties of 1840 and 1841, the Sultan has been but an instrument in the hands of others. He had the good sense, however, to follow the advice of so liberal a minister as Reschid Pacha, in authorizing many important reforms. His conduct, also, toward the Hungarian refugees will be remembered to his honor. His death had been expected for some time.—Boston Jour.

Christianity Down South.

[We are permitted to make the following extract from a private letter recently written by a clergyman of Cincinnati.—Hartford Press.]

Yesterday I attended the daily prayer-meeting, where the following remarks were made by the Rev. Mr. Cooper, late of Brownsville, Tenn. I repeat his words as nearly as I can remember:

"My brethren and sisters, I thank God that I once more breathe the air of Liberty. Help me to bless the Lord that I have reached a place where christians meet to pray. For months I have heard no prayer but for strength to kill the Yankees. They only thirst for blood. Even the religious women of my church spend their time in target shooting, and wear revolvers at their waist; and one of them, whom I always esteemed a most pious woman, declared she was perfectly willing to go to hell if she could first kill one Yankee. Smiths are constantly employed in manufacturing knives, for they expect a hand to hand fight, and their only cry is blood, blood. They will listen to no reason and regard no truth. God has evidently sent them strong delusions to believe a lie. I have been many years a pastor of a church in B., and have never spoken on the subject of politics. At a public meeting, a few nights since, it was resolved that I should leave the state or be hanged. A friend informed me of the fact, and by his assistance I escaped with my family, leaving everything I possessed in the hands of my enemies. Oh! praise the Lord with me for my deliverance."

Mr. C. is a minister of the Old School, Presbyterian church, and I suppose the foregoing fairly represents the spirit of secession.

The Object of the War.—Gerrit Smith, the well known abolitionist, in a published letter, expresses the belief that the war is sure to end in emancipation, but even he says of the conflict on its present basis:

"Some speak as if the abolition of slavery were the object. But the putting down of the gigantic conspiracy against the Government is it. That and nothing else is it. In other words, the one object of the uprising is to save the nation from being broken up into thirty or forty nations—the doctrine of its assailants being that each State is a sovereignty, is a nation. We confess that we are all the more eager to preserve our Government because of the infamous pro-slavery character of that which is thrust forward to take its place. But no government can be so good as to reconcile us to the fraudulent and forcible displacing of our own by it."

Compromise on the Other Side.

A letter from Richmond, June 26, published in the Charleston Mercury—and from which we make an extract elsewhere—throws out some things which may possibly afford light on the compromise rumors which were so prevalent a fortnight ago. It seems the same rumors were then flying about the rebel camp, and had taken so confident a shape that the end of the war was predicted by Christmas.

This confirms the idea which we expressed at the time, that these reports were put out as feelers of the public sentiment, and had their origin among the rebels. The writer to the Mercury does not appear to discredit the existence or the success of the compromise attempts, although he foresees the bitter disappointment which will be entailed upon the Southern people. He hopes, therefore, that the end of the war will not come until a brilliant and effective blow shall have been struck which will abash and humiliate the North.

All this looks as if the conviction were spreading among the rebels that they have got to back down from their position sooner or later, but they hope in some way to maintain their prestige still undiminished, if not actually enhanced. But here is their great mistake. No matter how or when the war may end, as overweening pride began it, that pride must have its fall. The political domination of slavery, of the sectional South, is gone forever. The taint of disloyalty will stick to it like the poisoned shirt of mythology. The discredit which broke down the old Federalists on account of the Hartford Convention, will be but a drop in the bucket compared to that which will weigh for generations upon the slave power, even admitting its full return to all the legal privileges and securities of the past. Its defenders will know better than ever to menace disunion again, or to calculate upon a "divided North," or to whisper a syllable about the omnipotence of cotton. They have torn away the veil of delusion which screened their idol, and now they must be content with the impression of repulsiveness which it makes on all. As to allowing this great vantage-ground to be lost to the loyal masses, by any diplomatic or military exploit, it will not be done. We will risk anything on that prediction.—Boston Journal.

Washington, July 8.—About one hundred Garibaldians who went over into Virginia to-day, owing to some disaffection, mutinied, and returned to Washington this evening in a state of great excitement. Troops are now being turned out to apprehend them. They will be shot down if they do not yield.

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to George T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick,
Miles Grant, } Committee.
Geo. T. Adams,

Special Notice.

Eld. Miles Grant was appointed by the Christian Publication Society to act as Travelling Agent for the Crisis. Monies on subscription, for publications, and on account may, therefore, be paid to him and he will account to the office. Payments made in this way to Eld. Grant will be acknowledged in the Crisis the same as if remitted to the undersigned. Rufus Wendell, Business Agent.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we got them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.62; postage 15 cts.

Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. Wendell, per order of Publishing Committee.

To-Day.

A sound of tumult troubles all the air,
Like the low thunders of a sultry sky,
Far-rolling ere the downright lightning's glare;
The hills are blaze red with warning; foes draw nigh,
Treading the dark with challenge and reply.
Behold the burden of the prophet's vision—
The gathering hosts—the Valley of Decision,
Dusk with the wings of eagles wheeling o'er.
Day of the Lord, of darkness, and not light!
It breaks in thunder and the whirlwind's roar!
Even so, Father! Let thy will be done—
Turn and o'erturn, end what thou hast begun
In judgment or in mercy; and as for me,
If but the least and frailest, let me be
Evermore numbered with the truly free,
Who find thy service perfect liberty!
I fain would thank Thee that my mortal life
Has reached the hour (albeit through care and pain,)
When Good and Evil, as for final strife,
Close dim and vast on Armageddon's plain;
And Michael and his angels once again
Drive howling back the spirits of the night.
O! for the faith to read the signs aright,
And from the angle of thy perfect sight
See Truth's white banner floating on before;
And the good cause, despite of venal friends
And base expedients, move to noble ends;
See Peace with Freedom make to Time amends,
And, through its clouds of dust, the threshing-floor,
Flailed by thy thunder, heaped with chaffless grain.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 4.

When announcing to Mary the strange fact that she was to be the mother of the promised Messiah, the angel Gabriel said of him, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

I suppose if it were announced that Louis Napoleon's eldest son should succeed him on the throne, and reign during his lifetime over the empire of the French, no one would say, "that means that he will exercise a spiritual dominion over the hearts of his countrymen!" If we were to read that Queen Victoria had abdicated her throne to the Prince of Wales, none of us would be disposed to say, "she does not mean that she is literally to relinquish her rule on the throne of England to her eldest son, but he is going to China, and there exercise dominion over the hearts of men universally!" How foolish such an idea would seem to every one. It would be well understood that if the heir of Louis Napoleon succeeded to his throne, and ruled over the French people, he would occupy the seat of government now occupied by its present Emperor, and rule over the same nation. The successor to the throne of the Queen of England would have his seat at the capital of that realm, and reign over [illegible] The learned commentators, when criticizing this prediction respecting Christ, instead of acting by this rule, and locating the throne of David where it was located prior to its overthrow, and accepting the reign as literal, over a literal people, they say Christ's throne is in heaven, and his kingdom is a mediatorial kingdom; his reign a spiritual reign; and the kingdom is set up in the heart of every true believer, and Christ reigns over him, bringing all he is and has into obedience to himself.

"The kingdom of Christ," says Mr. Longking, in his Notes on this passage, "is two-fold. 1st. It consists in a spiritual dominion over the wills and affections of men by moral influences, by which they subject themselves to his laws and authority. This may be termed an inward spiritual kingdom. 2d. It consists in that exercise of external government over the world, as Head of the church, and for her benefit, by which his truth, in all its righteous and peaceful influences, shall be established. This government embraces all these discoveries, improvements, and changes that are taking place in the earth, and which will ultimately subserve the moral recovery of mankind, through the overruling providence of Christ as mediator. This distinction (of a two-fold kingdom) removes the discrepancy which might otherwise be supposed to exist between the declaration that the kingdom of Jesus should 'have no end,' and the statement made in 1 Cor. 15 : 28, where it is said that, after the world is judged, he shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father. Christ's mediatorial kingdom will end with the present world, as there will then be no longer need for it; but his spiritual dominion in the minds and affections of holy, reasonable beings, will continue to all eternity; and Jesus will still preside as Head over the redeemed in heaven, and perform such acts of government as their condition may allow, and circumstances require."—Macknight.—Benson. Is not that sound logic? How will it do to examine it by the light of God's word?

"The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." Was that ever in heaven? We do not read of its ever being removed from its locality, "Mt. Zion, in Jerusalem," to heaven; and, until we have evidence of the fact, we shall not believe it. The commentator assigns to Christ a throne and kingdom now, during the gospel age. The scripture tells us that Christ has sat down on his Father's throne, and does not place him on his own throne until he appears in his glory, with all the holy angels, to judge the assembled nations. "When the Son of man shall appear in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. 25 : 31. Those who overcome, have the promise of sitting with Christ on his throne; "even as I," he says, "have overcome, and am set down with my Father on his throne." Rev. 3 : 21. The disciples who followed Jesus during his earthly sojourn, were taught by him that "in the regeneration, when the Son of man should sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19 : 28. The time when Christ shall sit upon his throne of glory is here connected with the regeneration, re-creation, or times of restitution, restoring back of the earth, and all things lost through Adam; and Peter tells us that the heavens must receive Jesus Christ until this time of restitution arrives, and then he will be sent forth for the accomplishment of that long predicted work; and the throne of his glory will not be in heaven, but at Mount Zion in Jerusalem, where his father David reigned.

The Favorite Hymn.

"What is your favorite hymn, Emma?" said little Kate to her friend, one Sabbath evening, as they were sitting on the front steps of a lovely cottage, not far from Boston.

"They sang my hymn in school this morning," replied Emma. "I like it so much—'I want to be an angel.'"

"It sounds well enough, to be sure; but then, I love those hymns best that are true," said Kate, thoughtfully.

"Why, Kate, I thought all hymns were true. What do you mean? Would'nt you like to be an angel, and wear a golden crown, and live in heaven where there is no night, or sickness? To have all our friends with us, and be so happy? Then there will be such nice music on harps of gold!"

"Yes, I should like all that, Emma, but I don't know how to think of a spirit doing such things, and I do not feel as if I should enjoy anything till my body is raised from the grave. Mother says she thinks our resurrection bodies will be in the likeness of Christ's glorified body, such as he appeared to the disciples on the Mount of transfiguration. I know many people believe that their friends, when they die, become angels, but I do not read of this in my Bible. It speaks of 'death as a sleep.' It seems to me that christians must be dearer to the Savior, who died for them, than angels can be."

"I wish you could see the picture of an angel in brother Fred's Sunday School paper," said Emma.

"Why! is it as you wish to look?"

"No, indeed," she said, laughing. "Why do they always make them so silly looking, I wonder? I can think of nothing but a man-butterfly. But I must go home after we have sung your hymn."

Their hearts and voices both blended in the sweet lines, so familiar to all children,—"I think when I read that sweet story of old."

For the Crisis.

This World One Vast Scene of Sorrow.

Let us for one moment glance at the world as it now exists, and what a gloomy spectacle is presented to the mind! The blasted schemes of youth, the anxious cares of riper years, and the deep groans of wrinkled, decrepit, tottering old age! Fix your attention on family trials. Here a prodigal father ruins his children, and undutiful children break the hearts of fond parents; there an unkind husband embitters the life of a fond and loving wife, or an imprudent wife stains the honor of her husband; a servant disobeys; a relation misbehaves; a son lies ill; a tenant breaks; a neighbor provokes; a rival supplants; a friend betrays; an enemy triumphs;—peace seldom continues one day. Listen to the wail of the afflicted, the moans of the disconsolate, the complaints of the oppressed, and shrieks of the tortured. Consider the deformity of the faces of some, and the distortion or mutilation of the limbs of others. To awaken your compassion, here a beggar holds out the stump of an arm or a thigh; there a ragged wretch hops after you upon one leg and two crutches; and a little further you meet with a poor creature using his hands instead of feet, and dragging through the mire the cumbrous weight of a body without limbs. Imagine, if you can, the hardship of those who are destitute of one or more of their senses. Here the blind is guided by a dog, or gropes for his way in the blaze of noon; there the deaf lies unconscious on the brink of ruin, inattentive to the loudest calls; here sits the dumb, sentenced to eternal silence; there the idiot, doomed to perpetual childhood; and yonder the paralytic shakes without intermission, or lies senseless, the frightful image of a living corpse. Add to these the tears of the disappointed, the sorrows of the captives, the anxieties of the accused, the fear of the guilty, and terrors of the condemned. Take a tour through jails, inquisitions, houses of correction, and places of execution; proceed to the mournful rooms of the languishing, wearisome beds of the sick, and let us glance at the multiform ways in which poor, sorrowing man is made to feel the chastening rod.

Let us contemplate the world as it now exists: the ruins of cities and kingdoms, the calamities of wrecks and sieges, the horrors of sea fights and fields of battle, with all the crimes of devastation and cruelties that accompany revenge, contention and war,—and you will fain exclaim, in the language of Job, that "man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upwards."

Is there, then, to be no change in this gloomy scene? O! yes. Bright visions which awakened those prophets of old are about to commence; war and rapine are sweeping over earth; the sighs and groans of earth are nearly complete. Poor pilgrim! cheer up; beyond this arid desert lie the sweet fields of Eden, all clothed in unfading verdure. No sorrow—no graveyards; the great foe of happiness here—Death—will be destroyed. Then press on, give not o'er the struggle, but look beyond the dark clouds and see the smiling face of a friend—a Savior, who stands with outstretched arms to receive you to his home in those mansions of everlasting peace and quiet.

Notes by Railroad.

I suppose the object of making notes, as we pass from point to point in the labors of the ministry, is to give information of the condition of the cause with us as a people, to the saints scattered abroad, for the confirmation of their faith and the encouragement of their hope, which, though it may not be necessarily and dependently, nevertheless, quite naturally, will refer to the general condition in respect to union of feeling, harmony of action, interest in the fulfillment of prophecy, engagedness in the work of God, and whatever features may exist by which to show the true position. A minister who travels, doing the work of an evangelist, may be compared to a faithful scout, who returns to give an account at head quarters of the state of the country, position of the enemy's forces, inroads upon the ground of the opposers of truth, whether the lines are broken or strong, and the passes and fortresses with the batteries manned. The advance guard or the picket may be of equal service with the main column; while the advance may have to dodge, advance and retreat, fly for shelter, and go to great extremes of self-denial and even experiment to succeed—even greater necessity may exist for such action than the shock of battle itself; the solid column, whose tread shakes the earth, marches to certain victory and glory where the light horse has scoured the plains and prepared for the action.

In some sense, to write notes is pleasing; to read them, when written by some persons, is gratifying. The real sensible and rational views, which we find in many accounts, are profitable; but to set down amusing circumstances, to gratify our disposition to tell stories to interest and promote the marvellousness of a class of readers, would, if nothing more were aimed at, be a waste of space, time, labor and money.

My first appointment on this tour was at Warehouse Point. Here we had a good meeting on Sunday; but it is necessary to say that a united state of feeling does not exist, and we are, no doubt, all sorry for it. I am. I love all the friends there. There are many friends of the Lord in that region. There is no very serious difficulty. I wish the causes of it were allayed. There is enough to interfere with the advancement of the cause, and a revival. We have some old and tried brethren, who have borne the burden and heat of the day. May God bless them. I always find a pleasant home and hearty sympathy with them.

I passed through Springfield, to hear again of the sad havoc made by the latest exhibition (in that place) of a wolf in sheep's clothing, and a pretty thin garment he had at that,—not much wool. The dear old travel-worn and battle-scarred friends of the cause and of Christ are filled with sorrow. They have bowed in grief under the prostrating blow. The church was beginning to be united, and was prepared to prosper, having a beautiful hall in which to worship; now broken in pieces, poor and disheartened, she can hardly be expected to take her position in that city. There was a position—a grand mission for an Advent church in Springfield. It may be too late now to recover and rise to the effort. I saw what that Adams was, and cautioned the people when he was in the crest,—but of what use? There were some at least taken, and to talk of moderation and carefulness, was to make one's self an "old fogy." Perhaps a good might have come out of what some call evil. We knew that he was a base, miserable counterfeit—a Mormon, with the excrescences of the system upon him! Let this case be a solemn warning to the Advent churches. It were better to have the old and tried, or the new that are accredited and known, if they do not blaze away so much upon the gifts, and talk of raising the dead, than to have these exotics that thrive in a hot bed, and make it with their own slime.

My next appointment to preach was at Holliston, Mass. Here I found the trial of the brethren and my own trials a subject of serious consideration. There are, as in many places, a few that love our doctrines, and occasionally get away to hear. They have no meeting. I think they might have—indeed, it is a duty. Let me assure the brethren there that I bear them love, and hope they may prosper. We did not accomplish any thing except visiting a few families. With proper arrangements, there might be a good interest secured in H. I was at fault myself (from ignorance) at first, in not making more decided efforts to advertise the meeting. I found some pleasant acquaintances in the faith.

My next Sunday was passed at South Reading. On my way down, I called upon Bro. Charles Perry, at Natic, who remains firm and waiting in hope of the kingdom of God; also stopped at Bro. Loker's. These two families are about all we can count in that place. It is always interesting to me to visit those who stand thus alone. At South Reading we had a good Sabbath meeting, but the number is reduced. Good and true they all appear to be who are left.

Preached once at Bro. Lock's, in Stoneham. Next, I should preach of an evening at Lawrence. After much difficulty I found Bro. Churchill, and had a very interesting meeting in the evening. There is salt at that city, and salt is good! The position of the waiting church is the seasoning to preserve the theological supplies at the present time. The theme mainly was the troubles of the times, as indicating the fulfillment of prophecy and the coming of the Lord.

With a heaviness that I could not well understand—but referred it to fatigue and the natural effect of a "poor look"—I started for Exeter. Well, my visit was exceeding pleasant to me, and, I trust, profitable to the church. I really felt that more faith prevailed there than I had supposed. I should be happy to visit them again.

At Portsmouth, N. H., I renewed my acquaintance with old and abiding friends of the cause. Spoke with freedom, and rejoiced with my old fellow laborer, Walter, who is in feeble health yet, and for whom I would bespeak the consideration of the friends in respect to his health. Beloved, as he is at P., and necessary as himself and family appear to be, is it not well to reflect that his constitution cannot bear the rigors of the climate so far east? I fear that another winter may be too much for him; but perhaps this should not be expected in my article. Health, to an Advent minister, must be the greatest considerable blessing. Sick and poor, without friends, health and youth gone, upon what shall we depend in the day of his decline and feebleness? Bro. Pratt should have rest, and a climate adapted to his health and constitution; must have a chance to go inland, where the climate is more uniform, or he will not remain long in the field. May the Lord bless him abundantly.

I returned to Salem, where I spent Sunday, the 16th. I was very kindly urged to occupy the desk, and had a refreshing season with the brethren, who seem to be in a good position. Bro. Berick is firm as a rock for the cause, and devoting his energies for its advancement. I shall ever feel grateful for the kind consideration of the brethren at S.

Returning to Portsmouth, I spent a day or two in recreation—visiting with Bro.'s Pratt, Munger, Burbank, and the beloved in the Lord at P.; in which we were entertained at the most beautifully located farm-house of Bro. Shannon, two or three miles up the noble Piscataqua. Went sailing, fishing, and feasting upon our piscatory acquisition; visited the Navy Yard at Kittery, and made bold to get a pass from Commodore Pearson himself to go anywhere. The grand, new, unfinished ship Franklin was the principal object of attraction. If you want to see one great place where they prepare for war, go to the Navy Yard, and tell me then if there is an immediate prospect of the world's conversion and the millennium!

By the way, in coming to Portsmouth, I met the train containing the second New Hampshire regiment. On the first engine was a large likeness of Washington; the stars and stripes in profusion; two muskets of ancient pattern, on one of which, fixed as a bayonet, was a scythe. Is a scythe a kind of pruning hook? It had been beaten at the heel, and made into a spear. I have heard that the steel of ploughshares has been wrought into swords in this country. In Collinsville, instead of making steel ploughs, as they did, they make sabre (sword) bayonets! Let any scarcity of iron or steel occur in the manufacture of arms, and we shall see the conversion of implements of husbandry into instruments of warfare. I see that a battallion from some Southern State is to be armed with scythes fixed to pike staffs. The rifled cannon, with the Sawyer projectile, seems now to present the culminating point of terror in the attack of armies. The mighty men of valor and of intellect are waked up. War now must battle with the very elements, and take the elements under control. I was with the company in Bro. Snow's boat which visited Fort Constitution, but are not all these things written in the chronicles of wo?

Saturday afternoon, on leaving Portsmouth, there was another opportunity for the feelings to run down to zero as I went east; but, as I stepped on the platform at Kennebunk station, Bro. W. H. Mitchell appeared, and my heart gladdened as we started for our appointment, fifteen miles. Never did I enjoy a ride better. It was seven o'clock, P. M., when we started. It was the time for a delightful ride, especially as I had one of those companions in the journey who could appreciate and who loves the great themes we dwell upon. We had a very interesting meeting. The people turned out well, and appeared to be interested in the truth. This is a part of Bro. Mitchell's field of labor. I did really feel that the brethren in Hollis were in the faith and hope of the gospel. We came down to Kennebunk Port in the evening, and here I preached two evenings, being much pleased with the disposition manifested to hear on the themes I had to present. They also gave me encouragement, for which I feel grateful indeed. In returning, I visited Lowell, where I found some old friends I was glad to meet, and with whom I enjoyed an excellent meeting.

The last Sabbath in the month I was with the church in Salem again. The services were interesting, and I hope profitable to the people. I admire the position of the church in Salem. There is a desire to observe gospel order, and attend to the ordinances of the house of the Lord. I found sympathy and encouragement while endeavoring to urge the important positions I had to substantiate, by which it appears that we are now in the last time, and even the time of trouble. I find a calm and firm looking for the kingdom in this city, which indicates a preparation for the Lord. May the Lord bless and keep the dear friends of our soon coming king to the day of his power. I have to express great obligations to our Father for health and strength.

The Day of Rest.

A LECTURE BY REV. H. H. DOBNEY, ENGLAND.

I feel a pleasure in concurring with those who are desirous of illustrating the importance and blessed privilege of a weekly rest. And what I propose is to give a sort of bird's eye view of the History and Idea of such a day, as treated of in Scripture. In doing which, it will be convenient if we distinguish between the three Periods into which such history naturally divides itself; for the common idea presents itself under three different and significant appellations; first, "The Seventh Day;" secondly, "The Sabbath;" thirdly, "The First Day of the Week," or "Lord's Day;" a three-fold form of one generic idea.

FIRST FORM.—Two sentences comprise all we have touching the original day of rest, viz., Gen. 2 : 2, 3 :—"And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work which he had created and made."

Time will not allow me to attempt any explanation of the account of the Creation, of which our text is the conclusion. A remark or two is all I may offer.

The Bible is a people's book. It is written popularly. Not, however, in the style of the English people of the nineteenth century, but, primarily, as adapted for those to whom it first came; to the Hebrew nation in its early ages, and to the meridian of Judea. It would, of course, have been absurd for Moses—even had he known them—to anticipate the discoveries of science in the far distant times of the future. For the truth scientifically put would have either been altogether unintelligible, or looked like falsehood. But, indeed, as long as the world stands, even the most scientific will continue to express themselves popularly, and to speak according to phenomenal rather than absolute or scientific truth, as when they say, The sun rises, or sets.

The first chapter of Genesis teaches us the mighty ground-truth that God is the creator of all things; and, further, gives us the order in which the different parts of creation were successively developed under the forming power of the Infinite Spirit. Possibly, as some have thought, the mysterious, and perhaps by us incomprehensible, processes of creation are represented as they would have appeared to a human spectator, if such a one could have beheld the long and gradual, though distinctly marked process. At all events, written for man, it is from a human standpoint that creation is looked at by its historian, and spoken of ad populum. And thus we understand how God is popularly represented as "resting from his work" and "refreshing" himself by repose: Ex. 31 : 17; although, looking at it from another point of view, and recognizing that preservation is a continuance of creation, we also understand the words of our Lord, "My Father worketh hitherto;" a remark which Christ made even in reference to the Sabbath itself.—(See John 5 : 17, in its connection.)

Further, in the account of the Creation, we have the idea of order and progression; and of the beauty of order as thus ultimately issuing. And now, when we are told that "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made," the idea of holy rest is not only suggested to us, but sanctioned and hallowed by the highest authority. And I, for one, feel glad at heart, and grateful, for a higher and happier idea given to me in this busy, restless, noisy world of work and care, than would have been set forth had Moses written as a man of science or a metaphysician, treating of the absolute and unconditioned. By representing rest as welcome even to God, it not only becomes legitimate to man, but is made doubly sweet to him. Wise rest after wise work is hallowed. And another grateful thought is, that work is not valuable for its own sake, but for its results, and that fair result is noble and Godlike repose.

Now it is true that in this first, and, for several ages, only mention of the day of rest, there is strictly speaking no command. It is a statement simply. But who does not perceive that such a statement is grander, more influential, and elevating than any bare injunction could possibly be? In his love God teaches as the mother does her child, as Christ the world, by example. Let man everywhere ponder it well, that God himself rested on the seventh day, and pronounced it blessed, and can he be wiser than his maker? Can he dispense with the rest which God found "refreshing?" Will he toil day after day in the field or in the shop, and keep no day of rest with his Maker? But since indolence is not rest, and the rest of the ox is not the proper rest for man, how shall he employ himself on this blessed day? If he rest, as I have said, with his Maker, there will be no need of specific instruction here. The day will somehow be "sanctified," the rest will be a holy rest. If his six days' work be good, I doubt not his rest will be good also. He who knows in what spirit and with what motives to work, will know how to render his repose dignified and holy. But as it would prevent my fulfilling the design I have intimated, to stop here in order to show how the day is sanctified, I pass on, suggesting one thing only, viz.: that as God's works are a manifestation of himself, the thoughtful contemplation of "the first volume God ever published," and the finding out how "good" are all his works and ways, would alone, and prior to all further revelations, beautifully employ a portion of the day which God especially "blessed and sanctified."

To proceed. Whether the seventh day was set apart even in Eden itself, as an ordinance for unfallen man; or whether it was thus hallowed in merciful anticipation of the time when for sinful man labor though irksome would be good, a severe kindness; as we are not told, so I do not undertake to decide. Though, seeing there is no more mention of a day of rest till the time of the Israelites, some thousands of years afterwards, some have thought, as the Book of Gen. was written by Moses, the reference here is by way of anticipation of the time when the Sabbath was "given to the Israelites," as "a sign and a covenant;" an opinion, however, which though I mention I do not indorse. And it has been deemed remarkable that there is not the slightest allusion to such an institution all through the times that succeeded; that it constituted no part of the covenant made with Noah, the second head of the human family; nor is it hinted at through the patriarchal ages; nor in the Book of Job. So that whether it was known to such as Abraham can only be matter of conjecture, or doubtful inference, and men will decide according to inclination and the general views they form of the day from other sources. But it should be observed that they who cherish the belief that the ordinance of the seventh day was known in those grand old times of simple patriarchal piety—when piety was not overlaid and oppressed by any cumbrous ceremonialism, nor made taskwork and a form, but was beautiful in its simplicity and naturalness, a striking contrast to later times when religion has too often been made irksome—lay stress on the known division of time into weeks. But as I do not think this argument can bear much stress, I simply name it. It is true, however, that the observance of the seventh day as one of holy rest may have constituted one of the signs of distinction between "the Sons of God," i. e. pious descendants of Seth, and the rest of mankind whose increasing viciousness at length incurred the judgment of the deluge. And there is nothing to forbid the supposition that the sacred recognition of the day by Noah was one of the ways by which he was a "preacher of righteousness" during the hundred and twenty years while the ark was preparing. And it may be that the omission of all reference to the day in the covenant with Noah, was that it was unnecessary, as having been always cordially observed by him. I say all this may well have been: but as the Scriptures are silent, we are perhaps most respectful to them when we leave that silence unbroken. And so I proceed to the second mention in Scripture of the day; and which will bring out THE SECOND FORM OF THE IDEA.

Exodus 16. The people of Israel have gone forth out of Egypt some six weeks; so that the signs and wonders wrought for them in the land of Ham, and their deliverance at the Red Sea, are still recent. They have turned towards the wilderness, and are between Elim and Sinai, and in want of food. The Lord provided a miraculous supply—the manna—of which the people were to prepare on the sixth day twice as much as they gathered daily. "And it came to pass that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much . . . and all the rulers came and told Moses. And he said unto them, This is what the Lord hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the Holy Sabbath unto the Lord," etc. "Six days shall ye gather it, but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none." "See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day. So the people rested on the seventh day." Is this the re-sanction of a well-known institution, or the first introduction of it to the Hebrew people? The question must remain an open one; but I confess that the impression it makes on my mind is, that God is teaching them a new thing, new to them, at least. "See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath." And the impression will be somewhat deepened, perhaps, by other circumstances, to be presently adverted to.

The next, or third mention of the Sabbath is—Ex. 20. The well-known word, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," etc. It thus forms one of those commandments which were audibly spoken to the children of Israel from Sinai; the fourth of the so-called ten commandments. And now, there is no possible room for doubt; all is unmistakably plain. Here there is positive command. This is law. The seventh day is to be kept sacredly free from all work. There was to be perfect rest throughout all the dwellings of Israel. As God had rested on the seventh day from all his work, the people that are separated from all nations to be his peculiar people, are to rest with their God, the poor servant and laborer, and the very cattle even, were to enjoy a welcome rest from all toil; and a holy calm like that of nature was to be the blessed portion of all alike.

And knowing how avarice, or the mere impatience even of some, would soon break in upon the precious boon, if there were not every precaution taken, the blessed privilege was given forth in the form of a duty, and fenced round by all the sanctions of law, and therefore guarded by penalty. For by how much the ordinance was wise, by so much must it be jealously maintained. Its full wisdom I may not pause to point out, but can mention only four things expressly specified as entering into the design. The institution was intended, first, to assist in keeping the people in fellowship with God, of which fellowship sympathy and imitation, if I may speak so, are part; thus, God rested on the seventh day, his people shall enjoy a holy rest also. Then, in addition to the magnificent idea of creation to be admiringly pondered, there was their own redemption from the hand of the oppressor to be gratefully remembered. "Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore, the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." Deut. 5 : 15.

Gregory of Nyssa.

Gregory of Nyssa, when he had returned from a journey to Jerusalem, thus writes: "Before I visited that spot, and since I have professed my faith in Christ as the true God, my faith has neither been increased nor diminished. I believed that the Son of God was born of a virgin before I saw Bethlehem. I believed in the resurrection of Christ before I saw his sepulchre. I confessed the reality of the Ascension without having seen the Mount of Olives. I have only gained thus much from that journey, to know, from actual comparison, that there is far more holiness near us than in foreign places. Hence I call on you who fear the Lord, to praise him in whatever place ye may happen to be. For no one comes nearer to God by a mere change of place. Wherever thou art, God will come to thee, if the habitation of thy soul is so prepared that the Lord can dwell in thee and walk in thee. But if in the inner man thou art full of evil thoughts, thou mayest be on Golgotha or the Mount of Olives, yet thou art as far from having received Christ into thy soul as those who have not yet made a profession of the christian faith. If the Spirit blows where he wills, then believers here become partakers of the work of grace according to their faith, not in consequence of a pilgrimage to Jerusalem."—Neander's "Memorials."

Eye-sight.

Milton's blindness was the result of over-work and dyspepsia.

One of the most eminent American divines having, for some time, been compelled to forego the pleasure of reading, has spent thousands of dollars in value, and lost years of time, in consequence of getting up several hours before day, and studying by artificial light. His eyes never got well.

Multitudes of men and women have made their eyes weak for life by the too free use of the eye-sight in reading small print and doing fine sewing. In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of eyes:

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never begin to read or write, or sew, for several minutes after coming from darkness to a bright light.

Never read by twilight or moonlight, or on a very cloudy day.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, or window, or door.

It is best to have the light fall from above, obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that, on the first waking, the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eye-sight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

Too much light creates a glare and pain, and confuses the sight. The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, that moment cease, and take a walk or ride.

As the sky is blue and the earth is green, it would seem that the ceiling should be a bluish tinge, and the carpet green, and the walls of some mellow tint.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.

If the eyelids are glued together on waking, do not forcibly open them, but apply the saliva with the fingers—then wash your eyes and face in warm water.

"I WILL NOT."—"I will not," said a little boy stoutly as I passed along. The tone of his voice struck me. "What won't you do?" I stopped and asked. "That boy wants me to 'make believe' something to my mother, and I won't," he answered, in the same stout tone. The little boy is on the right track. That is just one of the places to say "won't." I hope he will stick to it.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	21.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Rules for Correspondents.

Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all communications for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

All persons desiring to receive the Crisis, or any of the Publications on sale at this office, should always state distinctly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed, and direct their communications and remittances to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to PRE-PAY the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

To the Comet, visible July 1, 1861.

Hail, Comet! Heaven's bright meteor,
What is thy mission here?
All voiceless is thy language,
Yet nations bow in fear.

Dark superstition views thee
As messenger of ill;
Philosophers enshroud thee
In vapors cold and chill.

Though in eccentric orbit,
No human eye can trace,
The Hand that formed and holds thee,
Thy path appoints through space.

Methinks thou'rt like God's Spirit,
Sent forth to work his will;
None "knoweth whence he cometh"—
On whom His grace distill.

"In Christ shall all be made Alive."

Permit me to notice some points in Bro. Curry's recent article bearing the above caption. And 1st. He deems it an absurdity "to believe that the antediluvian world will be raised from the dead, after they have literally perished." If the application of the term "perished" is a proof of this, then can we prove conclusively that the "just," "good" and "righteous" man will never have a resurrection. "There is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness."—Eccl. 7: 15. "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart."—Isa. 57: 1. "The good man is perished out of the earth."—Micah 7: 2. Is it an "absurdity" to believe that such who have "perished" will live again?

He also refers to the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, who are set forth as an example suffering the vengeance of an eternal fire, which utterly precludes the idea that they can ever exist again." Is not our brother a little hasty in his conclusion? When our Savior pronounces a woe upon Chorazin, Bethsaida, and other cities which were visited by him and his disciples, because they rejected his gospel, though confirmed by "mighty works," he declares that it shall be more tolerable in the day of judgment for those cities of the plain, than for them. If their destination by eternal fire is their final end and punishment, how can it be more tolerable for them at the judgment than for Chorazin and Bethsaida? The death-penalty which befel those wicked cities was not the punishment due their own sins. They would all have died, if righteous. The death-penalty came through Adam, in whom all die; it was the manner and earlier visitation of that death that constituted the difference. The innocent babes suffered alike with the vilest sinner. There is a "second death" to be experienced by those who rise from the Adamic death, unforgiven of their own transgressions.

Bro. C. desires to know how the doctrine of "the re-living of the wicked dead can be maintained, without doing one of two things, viz., affirm universal salvation, or give up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death." We think that an article we published in a F. W. B. paper, three weeks since, clearly shows how it can be sustained, and we will therefore copy that in reply. We chose for our motto this passage: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

"This text has been quoted as one of the great proof texts of universal salvation. We purpose to examine it somewhat critically by the context, and in connection with other scriptures. The entire argument of the apostle in the 15th of Cor. is to establish, 1st, the resurrection of Jesus Christ; and 2d, the resurrection of all mankind. . . . The apostle in the text quoted is not arguing the distinctive characteristics of the resurrection—they are plainly stated elsewhere. But he declares that, as universal as is the death which comes through Adam the first, will be the redemption therefrom through Adam the second. All mankind fall in death, in consequence of Adam's disobedience—all will be made again alive, in consequence of the obedience of Christ. This is very clearly shown in the fifth chapter of Romans, which, by the way, is another stronghold unto which Universalists resort for defence. They claim, and that consistently, that as by the disobedience of one all were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall all be made righteous;—that as by the offence of one all men were condemned to death, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men, unto justification of life. This we must concede as being explicitly taught by the apostle.

The inquiry may perhaps arise in the minds of some, "If this be so, is not the doctrine of universal salvation true?" Yes, it is, to a certain extent. Christ is unquestionably "the Savior of all men, but especially of them that believe." By the transgression of Adam, sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, from the helpless, unoffending infant of days, to the grey-haired sire of fourscore. All are passive sufferers of the death-penalty. And thus it is with the free gift. It comes unconditionally upon all, through the obedience of the second Adam. All who die in Adam the first, i. e., through him, as the result of his disobedience, will be made alive in, by, or through Jesus Christ. As by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

But does this prove that all will be raised to eternal life? Does it necessarily follow that because the Adamic penalty is removed, and all are brought again from the dead, that all will therefore be made holy and happy forever? Certainly not. The entire argument of the apostle goes to prove nothing more than a complete and universal salvation from the condemnation and death derived from Adam. All were made, or considered sinners, and condemned to death, because of the disobedience of one; even so, by the righteousness of one, all are made righteous, and justified or made free from that condemnation, and, as a result, are made alive again from the dead. But are they made equally free from the condemnation incurred by their own personal transgressions? Has there not been a law given to those who have lived since Adam's fall?—and a law also having the death penalty? Greatly do those err who deem that the death passed upon all mankind, is the penalty due for their own transgressions. If this were so, why does the innocent babe fall a victim to the great destroyer? As before remarked, the first death comes unconditionally upon all, the sinner and the saint, the infant and the aged sire. From this there is a universal, an unconditional salvation. But beyond there is a second death, from which there will be no resurrection! This is for those who have not been pardoned their transgressions, and whose names are not written in the book of life. There is a life to which all will be raised, and there is a life to which those only which receive abundance of grace, and of 'the gift of righteousness' [illegible] by Jesus Christ. This is eternal life. There is a salvation which is unconditional and universal, and there is an eternal salvation promised only to such as believe and obey the gospel. Heb. 5: 9. This is the salvation which is "ready to be revealed in the last time," and those only who enjoy a present salvation from sin, who have been made free from the law of sin with its death-penalty, are heirs of this final and eternal salvation from all the evils incurred by sin. To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor and immortality, eternal life will be awarded; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon evey soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Greek."

I think if Bro. Curry will carefully examine the fifth chapter of Romans, he will be enabled to understand how all who die in Adam are made alive in Christ, and also see how all can be accounted righteous and receive the free gift unto justification of life, when you disconnect the penalty due to every man's own transgressions, from the condemnation and penalty unconditionally passed on all because of Adam's sin,—how all can be saved from the grave, and yet be punished for their own disobedience. What meaneth the second death? Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost. Life was lost by Adam's sin. Christ restores that life,—not a life beyond Adam's, higher and more exalted, but the natural life forfeited by disobedience. The eternal life bestowed on the saint is a free gift, above and beyond what Adam lost. Christ cannot effect a restitution of all things, unless all that was lost through Adam be restored. All mankind will be raised up from death, completely justified from all incurred by one man's disobedience; and each stands accountable for his own deeds at the judgment seat of Christ. If they have been forgiven their iniquities, they enjoy the blessedness and glories of the restored earth; but if guilty, they are consigned to the lake of fire, and there have their portion, which is the "second death." The innocent babe, who shared alike with the guilty the death-penalty, is raised to eternal life, for it had no sins to be forgiven. How strangely at variance with the great scheme of redemption, then, is the idea that infants and wicked persons have no resurrection! As universal as was the judgment to condemnation of death, must be the free gift unto justification of life. This the apostle demonstrates in the fifth of Romans, and the text you quote.

There are abundance of Scriptures which prove as conclusively the resurrection of the wicked as of the righteous. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." The evil doers, equally with the good, hear the voice, and come forth from the grave, to receive a reward according to their works. Paul taught a resurrection "both of the just and the unjust." When Christ comes to judgment, those who pierced him shall behold him. How could they, except they be raised from the dead? Christ told the high priest that he would see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Will he not then be raised? Says Paul, "we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." We might refer to many other passages, but let these suffice, for they are sufficient to convince every one who would be convinced at all. Every one will be raised in his own order, or appropriate band. At the head of the "first resurrection" stands Christ the first-fruits. The sheaf of grain, the first-fruit of the wheat harvest, was a type of Christ's resurrection. See Ex. 34: 22. He is not a first-fruit, or representation of the general harvest, the great and varied ingathering in the end of the year, but of the first, the choicest, the wheat harvest. Hence the frequent comparison of the saints to wheat. "He will gather his wheat into the garner." See also the parable of the tares and the wheat, the wheat representing the children of the kingdom. Corn, grapes and olives were gathered in the end of the year, when another feast, even the feast of tabernacles was observed. Did you ever observe that the harvesting of the wicked is compared to the gathering of grapes and olives? See Joel 3: 12, 13; Rev. 14: 18–20.

I have thrown out these last hints for examination; they may shed forth some light respecting the character and order of the two resurrections. May the Lord give us all a better understanding of his word, and grant us a "part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death will have no power."

For the Crisis.

Is War ever Right?

OR, HAVE CHRISTIANS THE PRIVILEGE OF DEFENDING THE COUNTRY?

IN TWO ARTICLES.—NO. 1.

Most certainly! Right! It is a duty as a part of the obligation we are under to the Son of God, who has called us to his service and heavenly kingdom. It is a permit given to every man to defend that which is right, good and true. If we value the blessings we receive and enjoy, we shall as a matter of gratitude and a benefit we would leave to others, contend for the continuance of them. The gospel has been a revolutionary force upon the world, intended to destroy the institutions and usages of heathenism—to overcome the barbarism of the past, and raise men from all the degrees of savage life to civilization, enlightenment and refinement; and hence Christ says, distinctly, "I came not to send peace, but a sword." He came, he announces, to cause "division" and "fire on earth," and was glad it was "kindled" in his day.

Now I say that the gospel, with all its design and successful attempts from the time of its initiation, to overthrow feudalism, slavery, tyranny, all despotic power, and every principle and usage antagonistic to the peace and happiness of man, in the national as well as individual capacity, has aimed at the establishment of permanent good, christian government and institutions—institutions which should give to man liberty, purity, advancement, and should thus, by preparing that man should be man, develope, enlarge and so establish his manhood—should secure to him the privileges of a christian—a christian in every respect—a servant of God, and as such that he should have hope of reward, (having been faithful to his calling and firm in his duty at his post) which the gospel presents to the faithful. Therefore, the divine power with the gospel makes a man a christian citizen, politician, statesman, ruler, soldier. Herein I discover the great reason for the joy of Christ that the work of fire (division and war) had begun.

The gospel must take the masses of men as they are, and do the best it can for them, that they may be fit at last for the kingdom of God; and it is manifest it does not wait till they have become all right, and are prepared for the full development of its power, before it works upon individuals, communities and nations. In the millennium, or kingdom of God, the preliminaries will not be required, and the circumstances will not exist which make the preparatory work necessary. Here they do exist, and hence the work must correspond. An army, to establish itself in a community, must throw forward outposts and camps, till, occupying the ground, it subdues and finally conquers. So with the gospel. It will keep up its struggle in the world till the divine kingdom is secured. Hence, we come to discuss—first, the question of the christian's relation to the kingdom of Christ, and what he may do in defence of his rights. The passage so often quoted in favor of non-resistance to usurpers, tyrants, rebels, insurgents, secessionists, pirates, brigands, murderers, slaveholders, and oppressors of every class, as well as those who break the peace, is this: "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." Now I discover that our friends take this, with several inferences in mind, as if they were all expressed. Jesus does not say that there is no other kingdom but his, and is very far from intimating that his servants might not, did not, belong to some other political organization. While we must concede that the kingdom of Christ is a real government, we must not conclude that, in all instances, the phrase kingdom of heaven, or the mention of it by any terms, means this literal kingdom. Here, no argument is needed.

So far from the inference being correct that the children of God do not belong to any government, and have nothing to do with any but the kingdom of heaven, Jesus and the apostles recognize the relation of disciples to the government of the world and their obedience to laws, with subjection to their rule. To be in subjection to the powers that be, is one of the standing requisitions of christianity. In the relation of Christ to the government, he did most certainly regard himself and disciples as a part of it, and on a given principle every man belongs to Cæsar. When Peter came to him in respect to taxes he said, "Of whom do the rulers of this world exact tribute, of thine own children, or of strangers?" "Of strangers"—"then are the children free."—"But lest we (the children) should offend them," etc. Children of whom? Children of the power or authority to exact tribute or taxes! That must have been, I am certain, a recognition of authority and relationship too, for he allows this paying of custom to be a matter of expediency. Still the expression of the text proves that he had a right, from his position, to be exempt from this custom. Then the paying it—which, of consequence, was by just so much to support the government, (the Roman government) and it would be applied for war or peace purposes, as the authorities should elect—shows its righteousness.

For the Crisis.

Our Necessities.

It is true that, as a people, our wants are many. Undoubtedly there needs to be a greater degree of faith, consecration to God, and deep-toned piety among those who preach the gospel; but, though we might have a ministry as zealous and devoted as Paul, and as pure and holy as the angels, we should still find a lack—the building would be incomplete—the body imperfect. While the church are, in a measure, dependent upon those who preach the word for instruction, so in like manner are the ministry dependent upon the church for sympathy, encouragement and support.

Individual responsibility is too much lost sight of, and the idea too far prevails that the ministry alone are to be the great burden-bearers, while it is left optional with the church whether they will engage in active service in the cause of their Master or not. The true office-work of the church seems, by many, to be but imperfectly understood. Although the time has not yet arrived when any member of the body can say to another, "I have no need of thee," yet it is to be feared that the eye, the tongue, or the hand, sometimes need to be reminded that their work would be very imperfectly accomplished, if indeed performed at all, without the aid of the little hidden, sensitive nerve, or [illegible] apparently inferior member. Says the apostle, "But God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked; that there should be no schism in the body, but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." That there is disease in the body is very evident, because there is suffering. That it might be eradicated from the system, by searching out the cause and applying gospel remedies, is also true. One reason why this is not accomplished is because, as a body, we are contented to live too far beneath our privileges—too well satisfied with a name, a form of doctrine, a profession, a shadow;—with the reality, the substance, how few are acquainted. Thus it is that there are so few to sigh and mourn over the low estate of the church, and who have a godly care and jealousy over the heritage of God—so few who are interested to labor for the building up and edification of the body for the perfecting of the saints. "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ," says Paul, "yet have ye not many fathers."

Nevertheless, there is a fearful responsibility resting upon the church, and it becometh us to stir each other up to a remembrance of those things which are written, and to exhort one another to obedience and good works. It is certainly the case in these last days, and has ever been thus, for aught I know to the contrary, that the healthy, active members of the body have been under the necessity of holding up and helping forward the weak and sickly ones, thereby weakening their own hands and retarding their progress. I know that we are taught to "bear one another's burdens," and that "the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak;" but I am not now speaking of those who are naturally weak, but of those who are made so by disease or neglect, and whose privilege it is to be strong and vigorous. Many are sensible of their condition, but there are very few who seem to have any idea of the real cause of their weakness. Probably much of it is the result of inactivity. As those who accustom themselves to exercise and labor generally possess the greatest amount of physical strength, so in spiritual things; the active laborer seems ever to be in a healthier condition than the inactive and slothful. If these could be made to realize their responsibility, it would be well; but such, alas! are not the ones to feel, (for sloth and indolence deaden the sensibilities,) and they seldom act from principle.

If all who do feel interested in this matter would assume and maintain their own proper position, an important point would be attained; and another equally as important is, to be able to recognize the right of others to fill their place, use their several gifts, and improve their talents with the same freedom as ourselves desire to enjoy, not measuring others by ourselves, or comparing ourselves with each other; not "thinking too highly of ourselves, but soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." "Having then gifts according to the grace given to us," let us cheerfully improve them, "in honor preferring one another."

This perhaps may cover nearly the whole ground, but there are special duties among the members, in regard to which my mind has been considerably stirred for some time, and of which I may speak at another time.

There are in the church weak and feeble members, made so by neglect and from want of sympathy; and there are those whose special work (as we learn from the word) is to help others. But such must stand, and be allowed to stand in the position they are designed to fill, in order to act efficiently, as indeed must all others. There are many in the church to-day, hidden and obscure as some of them may be, who, though unable to give instruction in regard to theory, are deeply learned in spiritual things, and would be able to instruct many professed teachers in the deep things of God. O how the living testimonies of these members are needed, and how many are withering up because of withholding to water others; and how many aching hearts there are, also, who are famishing for these very things. There are many of the dear scattered saints who will fully understand me as they read this, whose hearts will respond to the assertion. These things have been almost lost sight of and forgotten by those who once knew them, and they need to be reminded again; while others, and I fear not a few, have never yet learned even the first principles of the doctrine of Christ.

The time is near at hand when we shall need something more than theory to enable us to stand, and while I would exhort all to cling to the word of God, to "hold fast the form of sound doctrine," "to search the scriptures," "to grow in the knowledge of [illegible] as well as in grace, yet I would have you remember that truth unsanctified, not reduced to practice, will avail nothing. Truth held in unrighteousness will prove the condemnation of many. "Without the spirit of Christ, ye are none of his." "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

I feel like exhorting the children of God to pray much for one another, and especially for those in the church who are endowed with much natural wisdom, and have also the additional advantages of education. Their responsibility is much greater than others, for "to whom much is given, of the same will much be required." They are also in greater danger of trusting in themselves and not in the Lord, and consequently are liable to become less spiritually minded than some others; for the things which man's wisdom teacheth are unlike those which the holy Spirit teacheth. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him."

It is my earnest prayer that the church may be complete in Christ, and grow up unto him in all things, being found of him at his appearing "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing."

Feet Washing.

I find the following in a religious paper of Ohio on the washing of feet, and hope it may be of use to some who are troubled on the subject:—

"1. In the last commission, Jesus commanded the Apostles to teach all things whatsoever he had commanded them. As they never taught nor commanded this ordinance, it could not have been among the all things to be taught.

2. The feet washing mentioned in John 13th, did not take place in any church, or at a time of worship, or as a religious rite at all, of any sort; but in the family circle, as a necessary act of comfort and cleanliness, previous to retiring.

3. There is no account of such a practice, that we have seen, in the church during the first 300 years, in any history; while the Lord's supper and baptism are prominent.

4. There was nothing new in this practice, as they had been accustomed to it; but our Lord and Master did it to teach a lesson by example. They had been disputing who should be the greatest, and by this humble act Christ enforced his precept that the greatest among them should be servant of all."

I will add an inference which may be drawn from 1 Cor. 11, where Paul, in telling what he had "received of the Lord Jesus," about the supper, would have named washing of feet, had it been an ordinance in the church; for Christ attended to both at the same time, and so they had no rule only to observe them together. The Corinthians had abused one part of the command, and if both were attended to, Paul would have named both, in giving his directions and reproofs.

Phenomena in 1860.

The following graphic description of the characteristics of the year 1860, are from a writer in the Chicago Journal. He thinks the phenomena have been such as to be especially gratifying to a Millerite. While we admit this, it is also gratifying to notice the acknowledgment he hereby gives that these things are associated in the minds of the people with the belief and the preaching of those who are looking for the end of all things. It is thus that we, too, as the prophet has said, become signs and wonders to the people. We can also add that no Millerite would have any desire to describe the events of the past year in a more vivid and impressive manner than he has done. We accept the labors of our friend in compiling these facts, and thank him for the consolation.

"Regarding the year that has just closed, with an eye to its celestial as well as its planetary phenomena, it has been a remarkable one, and might well create in the mind of a Millerite an irrefragible conviction that he had at last the date for a final prophecy. Thunder and lightning storms have been more violent and disastrous than usual. Tornadoes, unprecedented in fury, have ravaged every part of the country. Our western frontiers have been parched and blighted by burning simoons. While one section reaped a bountiful harvest, another had its crops cut off by the lack of vivifying showers. Terrible storms and gales have swept our inland waters and seaboard. Freshets and inundations have ravaged the country in different quarters. Meteors of unusual splendor and size have burst in upper air. Comets have brandished their fiery tresses. The Aurora has flaunted its banners of crimson and pearl in the northern heavens with unusual brilliancy. We have had rain-storms and lightning, hail-storms, and gales of wind, sunshine, and a variation of 20° by the thermometer in a single day. The predictions of the weather-wise have been falsified, the astronomer dumfounded and the Almanack at fault. Is there not here a magnificent field for the man of science? Who shall explain these things? [illegible] secret agencies at work, and show the cause of the phenomena of 1860?"

The few closing sentences are worthy of attention. "Is not here a magnificent field for the man of science? Who shall explain these things?" Yes, who? Let science come on, as undoubtedly she will, and engage in fruitless efforts to explain by natural laws those things which the great Ruler brings about by a suspension of natural laws. Let her bring on her ingenious, but withal useless and absurd, speculations. Many, no doubt, will be comforted thereby and propped up in unbelief; but God's word will be fulfilled nevertheless. Pollok anticipated, and, in his "Course of Time," has well described, this state of things:

"Meanwhile the earth gave symptoms of her end;
And all the scenery above proclaimed
That the great last catastrophe was near.
• • • • • • •
The race of men, perplexed, but not reformed,
Flocking together, stood in earnest crowds,
Conversing of the awful state of things.
Some curious explanations gave, unlearned;
Some tried affectedly to laugh; and some
Gazed stupidly; but all were sad and pale,
And wished the comment of the wise. Nor less
These prodigies occurring night and day,
Perplexed philosophy; the magi tried—
Magi, a name not seldom given to fools
In the vocabulary of earthly speech—
They tried to trace them still to second causes,
But scarcely satisfied themselves; though round
Their deep deliberations crowding came,
And, wondering at their wisdom, went away,
Much quieted, and very much deceived.
The people, always glad to be deceived."

But if science is bound to explain all these things on natural principles, why wait till the events come to pass before commencing? The word of God tells us what shall take place; and the man of science may hence know what he will be called upon by the unbelieving world, to account for on natural principles. Let him therefore invent his theories and prepare inventions beforehand, and be all ready to hand them out when occasion shall require! The "magnificent field," which will soon open before him, and for which he might as well now prepare, is this: To explain from what cause, a strange and wonderful affection, in the form of a "noisome and grievous sore," seizes upon a certain class of men [see Rev. 16;] to tell why the sea suddenly becomes stagnant and putrid like the blood of a dead man; to tell why the rivers and fountains of waters all turn to blood; to explain from what cause unwonted power is given to the sun by which to scorch men as with fire; to account for the more than Egyptian darkness that shall settle down upon the seat and kingdom of the beast, and cause his subjects to gnaw their tongues for pain; to set forth the motives which will influence those European powers through whose sufferance the Ottoman empire now exists, to suddenly withdraw their [illegible] symbolical Euphrates dry up, that the avenues may be cleared that leads to the great battle ground of Armageddon; to give the philosophy of an all-pervading, disturbing, and infectious influence that shall seize upon the whole atmosphere, dealing out disease, commotion, and death, all over the earth; to give a scientific account of the formation of hail-stones of nearly sixty pounds weight each; to tell why they are formed at the particular time they are, and from what secret laboratory of nature they are hurled forth upon the earth; to account, finally, for an unusual disturbance among the heavenly bodies; to explain from what cause the sun and moon are darkened, and the stars withdraw their shining. See Joel 3: 9–16.

Over these signs, visitations and judgments, science will no doubt make many "magnificent" displays of its imbecility and folly. Patent medicines for the healing of the sores, and the staying of infection, will no doubt flood the land. But let the honest take warning in time. Let them know that these are visitations of judgment, often provoked, but long stayed; and they that fall upon those only who have become obnoxious to God's displeasure. And let the saints remember that righteousness and meekness [Zeph. 2: 3] are the only shields that will protect us in the day of his fierce anger.—Advent Review.

Select Thoughts.

Though Mary Magdalene was very near to Christ, yet she stands sighing, mourning and complaining, that they had taken away her Lord because she did not see him. Christians, though you may be very near and dear to Christ, yet till you come to see your assurance, you will spend days in doubting, mourning and complaining.

Cold prayers are as arrows without heads, as swords without edges, as birds without wings; they pierce not, they cut not, they fly not up to heaven. Cold prayers always freeze before they reach heaven.

It was a good saying of one to a great lord, upon his showing his stately house and pleasant gardens, "Sir, you had need make sure of heaven, or else when you die you will be a very great loser."

It is an honor to be good betimes. A young saint is like a [illegible] like a pearl in a gold ring. [illegible] the disciple John was the youngest, and the most and best beloved.

For the Crisis.

From a Thought Suggested at the Mercy-Seat.

"O! for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame;
A light to shine upon the road
That leads me to the Lamb!"

Who but the Christian has this light? The Israelites had light in their dwellings, when the darkness could be felt by all the Egyptians. The darkness of the world and the church can be felt now; but Christians who have this light should let it "shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in Heaven;" "seeking the honor which comes from God only," endeavor to spread his truth—his glorious truth, through which we are sanctified, for "we follow not cunningly devised fables when we make known unto them the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts."

Are we, who are looking for the bright and morning star, following the example of the "wise men from the east?" They waited for nothing—no anxious questions about their unworthiness—no doubtings if their gifts would be accepted; but, with their eyes fixed on the star rather than the difficulties in their path, they hastened on, and "lo! the star went before them till it came and stood over where the young child was." Rejoicing with exceeding great joy, they worshipped him, and presented their gifts. O, let us, who have been led by the Spirit of God to our Savior, keep our eyes fixed on him, for without him we can do nothing; and, by the mercies of God, present our bodies a living sacrifice, through Christ, holy and acceptable unto God, and "be not conformed to this world, but come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." What a command! What a precious promise! Glory to God! this promise is ours. We have come out from among them, and with His help we will be separate. Let us plead at the throne of grace for that meek and quiet spirit which in his sight is of so great price,—for that holiness, without which no man can see the Lord. Let us watch and pray, and pray and watch, doing with our might what our hands find to do, not wondering about the result, which belongs to the Master, not the servant whom he has commanded to work in his vineyard.

O! may our lives, by the help of the Lord, be lights, leading others who are groping their way through the clouds of Sectarianism, Spiritualism, and all others but the "true-ism," in this world of darkness, to that home where there shall be no night, "no need of light from the sun, for the glory of God shall lighten it, and the [illegible] thereof;" "the Lamb that was slain, yet liveth again to intercede for me." Yes, the Star that has gone before us is fitting up our mansion, which eternally shall stand. Then let our song be, O, for a closer walk with God here on earth; for that light to shine upon the road that leads us to the Lamb. And in the sweet fields of Eden may we all find that rest that remains for the people of God.

A Confession.

BRO. WENDELL:—The following letter, from Sister Elizabeth Given, of Newport, Me., to Eld. J. Billings, is sent to the Crisis for the purpose of giving many of our friends in Christ the privilege of its perusal. Sr. G. is one that gave all for Christ, and is well known in Maine as being one of the "blessed of the Lord," yet, like many, since the promulgation of the Advent doctrine, she embraced an error relative to the theory of conversion, etc., preached by Eld. J. Cummings and others, since the year 1854, and joined the community established by them at Providence, R. I., as a school teacher. By reading the letter, all will see her desire to have it known, "as far as her influence can effect," that she has renounced the error, having seen that "she had been trusting in her own works for salvation, without the true foundation to build upon." ***

"NEWPORT, Jan. 6th, 1861.

BROTHER BILLINGS:—I have for some time felt that I ought to make some confession to you; but, fearing I should be too hasty and move without due consideration, I have neglected it longer, I think, than has been for my good. I have had wrong feelings toward you, for a few years past, in consequence of the wrong views I have held. I thought you was almost wicked in using the influence you did against what I believed to be truth, and I did not want to converse with you, or hear you preach. I am satisfied that I was wrong, and it was the position I held that made me so. I am glad I have found out my wrong. I do most heartily repent, and believe I have forgiveness. I was honest in believing as I did, and zealously doing what I thought was right, and I do not know as any argument would have convinced me of the wrong till I had fully proved the position for myself. I feel willing now, and anxious, to have it known as far as I am known, or my influence can effect any thing, that I renounce the peculiar views that I, with others, have held for four years in the past relative to conversion—the process of obtaining it, and the whole theory growing out of those ideas, which you well understand. I believe it to be unscriptural, the cause of much evil, and a hindrance to much good. The experience I have had with the people embracing that theory, (more especially since their arrangement of communities) has fully convinced me that the position is an "evil." I have not known of one case of its producing good fruit, so I can, without hesitation, pronounce the tree evil. Some may think the tree is good, but the management has been wrong, the cause of its bearing evil fruit. I cannot think so. The tree itself is evil, consequently every thing growing from and connected with it has been wrong. I have not decided thus without reflection. It was not an easy matter for me to give up a position so dear as that was to me; I had risked all upon it; my entire being was there; and oh! what a bitter disappointment it was to me to have things work as they did—instead of caring one for the other and bearing one another's burdens, to see the reverse. There was less care one for another—less equality and heavier burdens than before we went into that arrangement. I saw that it was so soon after we came together, but I thought the position must be correct, so I toiled on, hoping to see the right come about some way; I did not know how, for it did seem to me that we were working further and further from it. Still I could not give up the position till I was driven to the very border of despair, and left without a hope, or one ray of light to cheer my desponding soul. I coveted the grave for a resting place, still I lived. Thank God there was something better for me, and O how cheering it was to again see light!

Your discourse on the subject of Faith helped me the most of any thing I ever heard. I began from that to take courage. I could again go to the book of God with confidence, believing its treasures were for me. I saw what I had been doing in the course I had taken. I had been trusting in my own works for salvation, without the true foundation to build upon. I was thankful to see my wrong, and then ready to give it up; and the more I consider and search, the more thankful I feel that I am saved from that error which many honest children are now in, for whom I feel anxious that they may see the error and be saved from death before it is too late. If these feeble lines can be of help to any one, they are submitted, with the earnest prayer of the writer. ELIZABETH GIVEN."

Bro. Pratt's Health.

BRO. WENDELL:—As allusions are made by some writers relative to my health, perhaps those that are interested may be glad to have the matter stated from my own pen. For years I have, at times, been troubled more or less with an affection of the heart. However, the times that I am affected are from over exertion, or after an extra effort—a long siege or tour of preaching. Any special protracted effort has been attended with more or less pain in the region of the heart, or severe palpitation. I have been able most of the time to attend to my duties. For some cause, perhaps over labor, last winter I found myself prostrated and unable to preach. My heart difficulty was very bad, and for three months I suffered much physically, and at times much mentally to think I could do no more. By care and much moderation, and the prayers of my good brethren—which I think have done more for me than all else—I have recovered to some extent. Can endure double the labor I could two months ago. Yet that is not saying much, for I cannot do now more than half the work I could two years ago. I feel very thankful that I am free from that sinking and death-like feeling in the region of the heart.

Doctors differ in relation to my disease. While some think it is organic—heart affected—others think it may result from indigestion. The most serious symptom I now have is the tendency to the lungs. I have some fears that my lungs are getting diseased. In consequence of these symptoms, I think I shall have to go to a warmer climate and get back from the salt water. The Lord direct in all things.

As the friends west often write to me and inquire why I do not come west, the above will explain the matter. However, if the way open, and I can raise funds, I shall go and do what I can with the few who are struggling to enlighten men and get them ready for the coming kingdom. I will go this fall, and bring on some young men, if the Lord will open the way.

WALTER PRATT.

Portsmouth, N. H., July 8, '61.

☞ An anti-tobacco organization is now forming throughout France, and the men that give tone to society there belong to it, such as physicians, lawyers, savans, academicians, state councillors—all resolved to wage unceasing warfare on that enemy to the health and pocket of man—the weed. If these reformers curtail its consumption, the result will be speedily felt in the public revenue, for the annual income from that source alone comes very near $40,000.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 17, 1861.

"The Fourth"—How We Spent it.

At five o'clock on the morning of our late National anniversary, we took the cars at Albany for Palmer Depot, where we arrived at 11 o'clock. The mail from Boston was just in, and we halted at the Post Office long enough to get the Crisis—feeling, quite naturally, some curiosity to know what kind of an entertainment Bro. Barick, who with equal kindness and promptness responded to our telegram requesting him to take our place, had provided for our readers. This desire being gratified, we hastened, in a conveyance that had been sent for us, to the house of Bro. and Sister Higgins, having an appointment to preach in their grove—"Union Grove" we remember it is called by Bro. Grant; and very appropriately is it thus named, if the appellation was suggested by the spirit of Christian harmony and love which animated the hearts of those who repaired to its quiet shade, on "the fourth" of last year and again this day, to worship God. Quite a company had already assembled at the house, among whom we were delighted to see Bro. and Sister Ladd from Springfield; also Bro. William Payne and wife, their black eyed children Lizzie and George, and Br'n Rice and Jenkins, all from the same place. We soon took up our march for the Grove, which was amply provided with seats for the congregation and a platform for the speakers. Religious services were begun at once. We read the 461st Hymn in the Christian Lyre, and presently the woods reverberated with glad voices united in singing

"O come, come away! for time's career is closing,
Let worldly care awhile forbear, O come, come away," and by the time we reached the closing words—

"O, come, my Lord, thy right maintain,
And take thy throne and on it reign;
Then earth shall bloom again"— our minds were in a frame to enjoy the reading, in Bro. Ladd's clear, distinct tones, of the last thirty-seven verses of the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians, and to unite with him in offering prayer and praise to our Heavenly Father. Before singing the second hymn, the writer invited all the children in the congregation to come and take seats together in front of the stand—telling them that we wished them to enjoy the day quite as much, and in a more rational way, than those children who devoted the day to burning fire crackers, following military companies, and the like. The suggestion met with a ready response by at least a score of bright-faced little boys and girls. We then, after singing, announced for our text the first two verses of the 2d chap. of 2 Thessalonians, and preached (the first time we had ever spoken in the open air) for about an hour and a quarter, just as well as we could, to an attentive and apparently interested congregation. It being then too late to devote any time to the children, they were informed that their entertainment was to be the first item on the programme in the afternoon services. By invitation we then repaired to the new barn of Bro. Higgins, where the tables were set and ample refreshments provided for all who had brought no refreshments with them.

THE CHILDREN.

Dinner over, we returned to the Grove. After singing and prayer, we addressed ourselves to the work of interesting the children for a while. A short introductory talk, adapted to their young hearts, was sufficient thoroughly to enlist their attention. This being secured, we began to read to them by installments [if we were using this last word in a talk to children, we should give them a clear idea of its import before proceeding] the last eight verses of the 9th chapter of Acts, and asked them questions as we went along. Well, they enjoyed it, and so did we; and, if the whole truth must be told, we children enjoyed the exercise not a whit better than the listening adult congregation!

We love children—we love to have the love of children—and we love to have children know and feel that we do love them. This fondness, naturally strong in our nature, was intensified by considerable experience, in early life, in teaching school; and the opportunity to talk to the little folks at Union Grove will live in our recollection when other incidents of the day shall have been forgotten. We covet such privileges, and often regret that we so rarely enjoy them. Much good could be done by our preaching brethren in labors for the children of parents who compose our congregations, and we may at another time take occasion to "free our mind" on this subject. We dismiss it for the present with two remarks:—1. If we would do good to children, we must love them, and be able to convince them of the fact; 2. We must learn to adapt our talk to their capacities—to "preach small," as one little boy said he was going to ask his minister to do! Much of the talking to children is unsuited to their apprehension, and fails to reach them. When we feed the lambs, we should put the fodder where they can reach it. May the Lord bless the children.

BRO. LADD'S SERMON.

Following the foregoing exercise was a sermon by that "Israelite indeed," Eld. Randolph E. Ladd, of Springfield. We enjoyed the discourse exceedingly, and for several reasons:—1. because we were hungry to hear preaching; 2. because of our happy surroundings and the interest manifested by the children of the Lord who had assembled in the Grove; 3. because we love Bro. Ladd "with a pure heart fervently;" 4. because his discourse was timely and excellent, coming from a heart that felt the importance and blessed verity of the truths presented. There was no display of "enticing words of man's wisdom;" the unadulterated word of God was deemed of infinitely more value than such vanities, and hence the time was spent in "comparing spiritual things with spiritual," and "the mind of the Spirit" was unfolded in this way. Is it asked, what was the text? Here you have it—"But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." 1 John 2: 27. The work of the Holy Spirit, in its sealing, sanctifying, consoling and life-imparting power, was presented in such a manner as to cheer the hearts and quicken the faith and zeal of those who believe the "form of godliness" is of no avail where its "power" is denied. We trust the congregation of "Union Grove" will long remember what was said of the heavenly "anointing."

A CONFERENCE MEETING

was the next thing in order, and was an appropriate conclusion for such a meeting. Many spoke, and no time was wasted. The season was a precious one, and we all felt that in Christ we were "free indeed"—that our "independence" was of a character which no "fourth of July" could bring to those who, though glorying in our country's "stars and stripes," were nevertheless the slaves of sin and the heirs of death. We talked of our future inheritance—of earth restored—of "the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began"—and in Union Grove we renewed our covenant to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Our visit with Bro. and Sister Higgins was most happy; they call their abode the "pilgrim's home," thankful to the Lord that they have it, and striving to devote themselves and their all to His service and glory. They both labor in word and doctrine in the Master's vineyard. May they have grace to endure.

Just before taking the cars for Boston, in the evening, we called upon a sister who was fast failing with consumption. She was lately baptized by Bro. Ladd. She expressed strong trust in the Savior. Her request that we would pray with her we had not time to comply with, but we hope to meet her where the inhabitants of the land shall never say, "I am sick."

Thus was spent the thirty-third, and the happiest, "fourth of July" of our life.

☞ Our friend and brother, DAVID GORDON, of London, Eng., (to whom we send back numbers of the Crisis and shall hereafter send regularly,) is hereby informed that we assumed the duties of our present position the first of May last. We shall be very happy to receive contributions for our columns from Bro. G., and hope he will let us hear from him at an early day. We perused with interest his letter to Bro. Gladding, of Albany, during our recent visit there. It will be of interest to our brother to know that since his return to England, Brethren Kennedy and Rowland, of the church in Albany, have "fallen asleep in Christ." They both died in great peace: Bro. R.'s last message to the church which he loved being this—"Tell them to be steadfast in the faith, looking for Jesus."

HUDSON'S NEW TRACT.—Bro. Sidney Hall of Hartford, Ct., pledges $2. We want $15 more. Let us hear from those who are unwilling to see the thing fail for want of means.

The Early Christians and War.

"A learned writer" is cited by Bro. Hastings as affirming that—"It is as easy to obscure the sun at midday, as to deny that the primitive christians renounced all revenge and war." If this point has two sides, we presume our readers would like to see both. Rev. Geo. Duffield, Jr., on the 21st of April last delivered, in Philadelphia, a discourse on Courage in a good cause, from which we give an extract below. Mr. Duffield, after dwelling upon the incident in Paul's life which has received some attention through our columns, says:—

"I am well aware that at this point in the argument, I shall be referred to the fact that great multitudes of the primitive Christians refused to become soldiers under any circumstances, even though their refusal might cost them life itself. So they did. But for what reason did they refuse? Because they believed that war in all cases was essentially sinful? No, there is abundance of evidence directly to the contrary. Because soldiers were reckoned in the same category as stage-players and gladiators, and cattle-dealers for idol sacrifices, or others exercising similar professions not warranted by the law of God? Not at all. We have every reason to believe that Cornelius the centurion, and the "devout soldier" who waited on him, and Sergius Paulus, and others, continued in precisely the same relation to the army after their conversion as before.

There is a much easier and better way to account for the reluctance of christians to enter the army, than to leap to the hasty and unwarranted conclusion, that in all cases war is entirely unjustifiable. What the primitive christian did really and conscientiously object to was, that in order to enter the army, he must take a heathen oath; and once in the army, he must burn incense to idols, wear on certain occasions an idolatrous crown, and what was especially obnoxious to them, must assist in the persecution of their brethren.

These disabilities removed, and they were as ready, other things being equal, to fight for their country as any other class of men.

Too Long.

This, we fear, will be the verdict of those who may read our article telling how we spent "the 4th." But we hope to be excused when we say that, when we had got fairly under way, we knew not how to abridge. Besides, our esteemed predecessor has left us the example of furnishing "Notes by the Way" for the editorial columns of this paper, and since our opportunities to furnish such matter are of rare occurrence, we may reasonably ask some indulgence if we make the most of them when they do happen. Our regular "Diary Notes" would, with slight variations, usually run somewhat on this wise:—"Left No. 6 Jackson St., Charlestown, as early as possible in the morning; rode in a Bunker Hill car to Scollay's building in Boston; walked to the Post Office and emptied the 'Crisis Box' of its accumulations of twenty-four hours; walked to 167 Hanover St.; worked hard all day; went home hoping the Lord would overlook the faults of our labors even if our brethren would not; were made happy by the never-failing words of kindly welcome to a weary one from a beloved wife, and the joyous greeting of our darling daughter." By the way, these objects of affection have not yet (Friday evening) returned from Albany, but remain there for a while to comfort one whose home has been so fearfully desolated by the remorseless hand of Death. Our heart yearns for him in his bereavement and loneliness, but we cannot bring her back who was more to him than all the world beside! Jesus—once dead, but now alive forevermore—has the keys of the grave, and will ere long unlock its gloomy portals, deliver his children from its power, and receive them into mansions of light and glory, where there will be fullness of joy and pleasures unending! Thitherward faith points us—thitherward the "exceeding great and precious promises" of the word of Life point us—and thitherward may the purest affections of our hearts unceasingly aspire, until "——faith is lost in sight,

And hope in full fruition dies."

The Contrast.

After we had penned our account of "The Fourth," we turned to our file of the Crisis to see what Bro. Grant had written about his visit at Palmer on "the 4th" of last year. The following sentence occurs in his article:—

"No glistening bayonets and military parade, with rolling drums, were there to awaken thoughts of bloody scenes; but there were bright beaming faces that spoke of joy and peace within, and high hopes of the life to come in the land of glory."

Neither did we, on this "4th," see "glistening bayonets" and their warlike accompaniments, but, alas! how much there had been, in the occurrences of the past few months, in our own country, "to awaken thoughts of bloody scenes" in every mind! With what mighty strides have events marched on during the twelve months that have passed since our brother wrote his editorial! May "high hopes of the life to come" sustain the children of God in these perilous times.

An Editor's Duty.

Pruning is part of an editor's duty, a part which is always unwelcome to him. He must regard the intelligence of the reader, the standing of the periodical, the reputation of the church he represents.

Some persons seem to think that it is the editor's place simply to print what they may send him, no matter how it is prepared. The most unfortunate thing about it is, that they take offence if he corrects what they write.

Now here is a letter before us, in which we are blown sky high because we abbreviated an article sent us some time ago by the writer. He says, "I do not like such abridgments." "I wish you to understand me, that when I do write an article: for publication, (For I do not write often) that I wish you to put it in your paper Just as I write it verbatum." This quotation is just as the brother wrote it. But we should do him a serious unkindness if we should follow his direction, and, in like manner, publish his letter entire, signature and all. His spelling presents us with the following words: "eaqual," "necassaty," "new," for knew, "blendid," "mungreled," "mawk" for mock, etc. We do not censure a man because he cannot spell, nor because he cannot write English. It is his misfortune—often not at all his fault. But, when such a man writes for publication, he ought to be thankful to the editor for correcting his puerile MSS. This brother fires up very indignantly. He says: "I did not expect to find an old episcopal Almighty bishop in the Editor of our paper." Now, this is not amiable. But to bear it is part of the tax every man has to pay who assumes official position; and we therefore smile and take it, with all the charges of "pride," "usurpation," etc., put in as condiments. The brother says, "I have kept a copy of this article." We shall keep that now in our possession as a curiosity worth preservation.—Methodist Protestant.

From Eld. D. Bosworth.

BRO. WENDELL:—I noticed in the Crisis of last week a long article signed "J. K. Bellows," in which, after quoting such expressions as these:—"The spirits of the mighty dead look upon us from these battle-fields;" "Will not the men of '76 look down upon the homes for which they fought and bled?" and again: "Not forty generations of the past * * he sees looking down upon him," etc.;—he adds: "Thus you see how Spiritualism is embodied in the popular church." Now I had supposed that an essential idea of Spiritualism was, communication with the dead, and not simply a belief in the conscious existence of the spirit. But if I am wrong,—if not only those who keep "familiar spirits," but also those who believe in a conscious spiritual existence, (and if God is a spirit, and He maketh his angels spirits, who does not?) are Spiritualists, should we not all, who believe in God and angelic existence, come in for a share of the stigma? But if such is to be the position of the Crisis, through its managers and leading correspondents, had you not better employ "J. K. B." to write a commentary on the current literature of Christendom, in reference to these things, for the last eighteen years? And when he is about it, he might throw into the Appendix a smart rebuke of the apostle, for using language to the Hebrews so apparently supporting such heresy: "Seeing we also are compassed about by so great a cloud of WITNESSES"? But, soberly, my brother, it does seem to me that such careless statements concerning the faith of others—if it is carelessness—and if not, then such unkind innuendoes can add but very little to the character of a christian paper, and it must, in the end, prove a "burdensome stone" to him who wearies himself in trying to lift it.

Yours, hoping for that time when christian teachers can be courteous as well as zealous.

Waterbury, Vt., July 2, 1861.

REMARKS.

"The position of the Crisis through its managers and leading correspondents," should be to present the views of others with entire fidelity, and we hope ever to be found willing to rectify errors that may be pointed out in this direction. Knowingly to misrepresent the faith of another, in order to gain an advantage over him or to excite in the minds of readers or hearers contempt for his position, is unworthy of any Christian man; and while we will take no part in such work, we shall be ready always to discountenance it in those who may furnish matter for our columns. Of course, we speak of willful unfairness. Where this is manifest in an article, it should either be suppressed, or accompanied with an appropriate rebuke. But mistakes will occur where there is nothing blame-worthy in the intention of the writer: these, if immaterial, should be overlooked by the reader, but if otherwise, they should be corrected in the spirit of kindness. We ought to cultivate large-heartedness in judging of the motives of others—making reasonable allowance for the standpoint of their sayings and actions. Let a man, for instance, become fully persuaded that the current views concerning the conscious existence of disembodied human spirits are unscriptural, it would be strange if his most thoroughly candid and well-meant utterances did not occasionally grate unpleasantly upon [illegible] of him who, though equally [illegible] not seen cause for abandoning those views. And so vice versa. Nothing will help so well to preserve an unruffled spirit in experiences of this character, as that charity which "is not easily provoked" and which "beareth all things."

We agree with Bro. Bosworth that the idea of communication with the departed is an essential feature of modern "Spiritualism," and that we should unjustly charge those with being "Spiritualists" who reject this idea. To what extent this essential element is becoming engrafted on the faith of "the popular church," to which allusion was made by Bro. Bellows, it is not our business now to inquire. We are confident, however, that he candidly believed his inference was warranted by the extracts which he gave from Mr. Eddy's discourse.

With Bro. Bosworth's permission, we will say that, in our judgment, such a "commentary" as he suggests, "on the current literature of Christendom with reference to these things," would do signal injustice to its theme if it failed to bring out in bold relief two important facts, viz., 1. That to the prevalent notions of glorification in death, more than to anything else, is to be attributed the wide-spread neglect of the doctrines of the resurrection of the dead, and the second, personal coming of the Lord from heaven; and, 2. That the cardinal feature of modern Spiritualism has its root and foundation in the immortal soul theory. We state these positions without discussing them, and close our remarks with a citation from Dr. Adam Clarke, and two inquiries, based upon it, for the consideration of our readers. Dr. C., speaking of the resurrection, declares that—"there is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system of teaching which is treated with more neglect." Our inquiries are the following:

1. Do facts justify Dr. Clarke in the charge he brings against "the present system of teaching"?

2. What one cause, more than all others, underlies this deplorable "neglect" of the doctrine of the resurrection?

Of course we are aware that the second inquiry requires no answer only as the first is responded to affirmatively.

For the Crisis.

Encouraging Words.

DEAR BRO. WENDELL:—It is with pleasure I take my pen to address you by the way of an epistle. Although it is the first time I have ever addressed you, I doubt not you will pardon me for this attempt. I have ever felt a strong attachment to you since our short acquaintance. I think I know you after the Spirit. Through the providence of God Bro. William Payne's Crisis was put in our box, and I read it, and learned you had undertaken the arduous task of Editor. I then felt a desire to write you, and indeed wished I could peruse it weekly, but circumstances forbid it for the present. My companion is out of employ, and has been for some time, and there is no encouragement of his having any. If my Heavenly Father, (whose the gold and silver is) should give one dollar that I can spare, I think I shall renew my subscription. We have taken it several years—not on the poor list, but as a subscriber. We are not taking any paper now.

I was at Bro. Charles Hastings' on Thursday last and had a very pleasant interview. I saw the Harbinger, and they let me take the one bearing date June 5th, containing the letters between you and Bro. Newman. I praised the Lord, and wept with heartfelt gratitude that such a spirit of kindness and child-like simplicity and humility was manifested in your epistles, so rarely found at this day and age. O, brother, let brotherly love continue, as I see you have it. God bless you, my dear brother, is my prayer, and give you heavenly wisdom to direct you in your arduous task. Do all with an eye single to the glory of God. Give place in your columns for the poor and humble in the eyes of the world, considering they are rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. You are young in years, and probably in experience, to what some are that have passed through deep waters of affliction and trial after trial for many years. But do not be discouraged, when envy raises its head and thrusts its darts at you, and tries to destroy your influence and injure your reputation, that you cannot do the good that otherwise you could. Seek to know your duty, and then, by the help of the Lord, do it. I know that in thus doing it will bring down anathemas on your head. Never fear! our Father will shield you from all the fiery darts of the enemy, and bring you off victorious. "Cease from man." Have not a man fearing or man pleasing Spirit. "Fear God [illegible] you will be accepted of Him," and hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of the Lord." Never suppress any part of a letter you feel is written in the spirit. "A pure testimony put forth in the spirit cuts like a sharp two-edged sword," but the Lord will make a right application of it. Have no fears, brother. When I can help sustain the paper, I shall consider it a privilege to write, for the encouragement of the pilgrims scattered over this sin-cursed earth, about to be drenched with the blood of our fellow men. I feel like sitting at the feet of Jesus, and learning of Him who is meek and lowly, when I think of what He has done for me, once a proud sinner, who scorned to associate with the despised people called Methodists. Hearing evil reports of them, and thinking that all would tell the truth, and knowing well the saying that a person was known by the company they kept, I would never put myself in the way to get any truth only among the Congregationalists, where I was educated, and united at the age of fifteen years. I had no sacrifice to make in dress, or any other way, as you may say. Truly I can say, how good the Lord has been to me to bring me in a way I knew not—to humble me and make me willing to follow the truth, if it brings me into disrepute. I think I am willing to have all manner of evil said about me falsely for Christ's and the truth's sake. I feel like going into the highways and hedges, and even ditches if it need be, and compel people to come in, that His house may be filled. I read publicans and harlots will go into the kingdom before those that have had the invitation and rejected. I hope to keep humble that I can do all my Master's will, that I may have an abundant entrance into His everlasting kingdom. Remember me, dear brother, when you enter your closet, and I will pray for you. From your Sister, striving to overcome.

HOW TO BE MISERABLE.—Think about yourself, about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you, what people think of you, and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose on earth, or in heaven either.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church."

We give below several notices which we have received of the above work.

Sister Lizzie A. Reed, Harvard, Ill., says:—

It is a graphic description of the church of God in apostolic days, breathing the same sweet spirit of love and truth which is so rare in these days of bigotry and hypocrisy—days of officious holiness, of long Pharisaic prayers and hymns. This is an age in which there is dry theory enough to absorb all the sincere milk of the word and leave none for the famishing babes in Christ—an age when D.D.'s, LL.D.'s and Eld's spend the time in wrangling about trifles that should be spent in a higher, holier cause—an age of whited sepulchres, too holy to eat with publicans and sinners. In this age it is refreshing to pick up a little work that will lead us far back through the vista of centuries, and the mist of musty creeds, and place us as it were at the very feet of years. This little 'Thessalonica,' this picture of the Model Church, is an ably written volume, drawing here and there a forcible contrast between the religion of the Bible and that which has originated in the unbounded self-esteem of humanity. Read 'Thessalonica' then; if you want to be instructed, read it; if you want to be amused, read it; if you want your mind refreshed by an easy and beautiful style of composition, read it; and finally, if you want to contemplate christianity in its purity and loveliness, in its high relations to God and man, read 'Thessalonica.'

Sister Maria Matthews, Foster, R. I., says:—

This is indeed a worthy work. I have read it carefully, and would that every one had a copy. It needs no extra commendation; the fact that H. L. H. is its author should make a sale for it. The readers of the Crisis know his peculiar style of writing, and all would be pleased with his last work. All who wish to purchase a book well worth its price, send your orders to Bro. Hastings, and thus see a picture of the 'MODEL CHURCH.' and also of the modern churches.

Eld. Joseph D. Brown, Providence, R. I., says:—

To any one who earnestly desires to see a plain and truthful description of what constitutes a Model Christian Church, in order that he or she may profit by the lesson, the book cannot but be interesting and useful. It does not go into so exhaustive detail as to be dry, but is for this reason well calculated for circulation and popular reading. Its statement of the doctrine of this ancient apostolic church, is a faithful representation of the importance of the personal advent of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead for the accomplishment of the christian's hope; and, as it is told by a close adherence to Scripture statement, it cannot be answered with 'that's what you say,' although in Bro. Hastings' case it may doubtless be said truly, 'that's what you believe,' which, however, cannot make the statements of Scripture that the book contains any the less true. Bro. H. fires some hot shot (and they are white hot too) at faults and abuses that exist now in the church, and every shot hits. It might be said that this is doubtful praise to his marksmanship, for the mark is so large that a poor marksman ought to hit; but Bro. H. has the advantage of most shooters in that he can pierce the heart without killing, and his reproofs are so evidently well meant, that good men cannot be irritated under them, but will be profited by them. Brethren, let us read the book, and lend it, and scatter it, and try and do as much with our large means as the Thessalonians did with their small means.

For the Crisis.

Tremont Grove Meeting.

Our meeting in the tented grove has closed, and we feel constrained publicly to acknowledge the blessings of God upon us; and should we hold our peace many "lively stones" no doubt would "cry out." I visited this place six or eight months since for the first time, and the eagerness with which the people sought to hear the "word of life," and the joy with which they received it, their generosity in supporting it, together with the beauty and convenience of the locality, very soon suggested to my mind the propriety of a Grove and Camp meeting. God's Spirit seemed to counsel the same, and from the first to the last God has presided over all its exercises and arrangements. Amen.

The blessings bestowed we enumerate—1st, beautiful weather. We met each day beneath a clear sky, and cool sea breezes relieved us from the sun's oppressive heat. 2d, good attendance. It was truly cheering to meet so many of "like precious faith" gathered together from various places where time and its circumstances had scattered them. The churches in New Bedford, Fairhaven, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro and Tremont were largely represented, beside many who came in from "byways and hedges." Though many were detained by the "busy season," yet our congregations were quite large through the meetings, and on Sunday a large concourse [illegible] Bro. J. S. White never was more able to set forth clearly and defend the great fundamental truths of the Bible. Bro. Bellows fed well "the flock" and gained many warm friends. On Sunday, the Church at New Bedford adjourned their meeting to the Grove, and Bro. Berick gave an excellent and powerful discourse upon the "Signs of the Times," based upon Matt. 24th, which could not fail to produce conviction, in any candid mind, that we are very near the kingdom. 4th, good interest. The sheep of God's pasture came with an appetite for spiritual food: the Lord spread his table bountifully, and they did all eat and many "were filled." Many felt drawn to this meeting by the holy Spirit, and God had a work for them when they came, and they bore the "burden." Some came twenty miles. Our prayer meetings were pentecostal seasons. Many a broken and contrite heart was not despised, and tears of joy and comfort mingled with our testimonies and songs of praise; conviction rested upon the people. Some were reclaimed from their wanderings—others awakened from lethargy and coldness to love and activity. Some were "established in the faith;" the "weak" were made "strong;" much prejudice removed; much light upon the Scriptures imparted and received, and a general impression for good left upon community. Several preachers, of various denominations, were present, assisted in the exercises, and listened to many truths which I trust may not be wholly unprofitable. Among the items of interest was a baptismal scene, Sunday P. M., at 4 1-2 o'clock. The writer was happy in leading ten willing souls "down into the water," to be "buried with Christ in baptism." God blessed them, and they went on their way rejoicing. One came fifteen miles on foot to the meeting; was revived, baptized, and went on his way home again. 5th. Good order. The people manifested their interest by their orderly conduct. It was a frequent remark, "How do they keep it so still? I never went to so quiet a camp meeting before." Notwithstanding the multitude gathered on Sunday, none needed a rebuke for disorderly conduct. No "police force" can claim the credit, for none were "stationed." God himself presided, and to Him be the glory.

Perhaps, lastly, I should speak of good accommodations. No pains were spared in this direction. All who wished could board and lodge in private families or at the boarding house, which spared us that weariness that often sickens one of camp-meetings, and fitted us all the better for our daily devotions. The boarding tent upon the ground was conducted well, and even "hard times" could not complain of "terms." Now with so many good gifts coming from the Father of all goodness, you need not doubt we had a good meeting. Monday morning we met for the last time in prayer and conference. The best time was yet in store. We drank in deep and solemn emotion, till, compelled by time, we bade a reluctant farewell to that consecrated spot endeared to us by God's rich blessings, promising, if time permit, to revisit its quiet shade another year.

For the Crisis.

Rev. 22:9.

"Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."

This passage of sacred scripture is often erroneously used in two cases:

1. As being an evidence that the spirits of human beings can and do return and communicate with persons in the "earth-life." And why? Because, when the angel says: "I am .... of thy brethren the prophets," they understand the angel to mean that he was one of the old prophets who once lived on earth. And then, if the angel was once a prophet, the above passage is not only a proof of spirit-communications at that time, but may also be referred to

2. As being an evidence that the spirits of men become angels after they leave this world. But let us examine it. I believe it is correctly translated; but I think the translation would be plainer, though not as smooth, to give every word in full which is understood. For instance, the word "sundoulos," fellow-servant, is understood twice, being followed by two genitives to which it belongs. It would then read thus:—"And he saith to me, See (that thou worship me) not; for I am a fellow-servant of thee, and a fellow-servant of the brethren of thee, the prophets, and a fellow-servant of them who keep the sayings of this book: worship God." Here we learn that the angel, instead of being the spirit of one of the prophets, was only a servant, 1, of John the Revelator; 2, of the brethren of John, the prophets; 3, of them which keep the sayings of this book; that [illegible] done. Such was the employment of angels. The Bible is full of it. But there is not an instance from Genesis down to Revelation where a "departed spirit" was ever employed as a servant. "They rest from their labors," said the Revelator. They rest! Their work is done. What a thought, that when a man lays down his work he may never resume it again. There is no work, no device, no knowledge, no remembrance, no praise, no prayers, no pardon passed in the silence of Sheol!

Such was once the employment of angels. They were sent with messages to the prophets and apostles when God was handing down his Revelation to man. But that time has gone by, and we may never expect another message, or even an utterance from Heaven again. And be assured that those who will not accept the present message, and will not hear Moses and the prophets, and Christ and the apostles, would not be persuaded though one rose from the dead!

One word more. Some have thought that the angel who talked with John was Christ. I am not able to say who it was. But I am sure, if Christ is "one with the Father," "the mighty God," "the only wise God," he would not have said, "See that thou worship me not, for I am a fellow-servant." Therefore, instead of believing that the angel was Christ, I believe he was sent by him. See verse 16th: "I Jesus have sent mine angel"; and then verse 6th, "The Lord God (that is Jesus) of the holy prophets sent his angel." Now the same Lord God who sends the angel, is the one who says in verse 7, "Behold, I come quickly." Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

I. H. Lord.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. M. Bruce.

Dear Editor:—The more I see of the discord which is everywhere prevailing in the world, the more I feel the need of the Holy Spirit to "baptize us into that one body,"—to quicken all our faculties into that new life. For we can no more live a spiritual life without the Holy Spirit, than we can live a natural life without common air. The Spirit makes all who receive it, one. It cannot war against itself. Then it must follow that those who are seeking to destroy each other, are not led by the good Spirit. God works by his Spirit. His work is perfect. Then an imperfect being or government has no right to be. Such, exist only by permission, through the Advocate. The Son of God has a right, which does not conflict with any other right, at any moment to dash them in pieces, and make them like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor. No power then can sustain these imperfect governments, or protect an individual, unless that individual receive the Holy Spirit, and become a new creature by faith in Jesus Christ. We should therefore seek first, not the governments of this world, but that everlasting kingdom which cannot be moved, or shaken. Let us have grace whereby we may do it acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Heb. 12.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—Please let me acknowledge, through the World's Crisis, four dollars which I have received by the hand of Bro. G. T. Adams, from friends in Cheshire, Ct., and one dollar from Bro. C., in Roxbury, and fifty cents from Sister A., Boston. The acknowledgement may seem late to my friends. It has lain safe in the office since last December, and nobody to blame neither, for they did not know where to direct it. My friends will accept my heartfelt gratitude for their kindness and sympathy. It did me good—made me feel that there were those who did sympathize with me, and with the cause I love. I design, as soon as my health and strength will permit, to take a tour into Aroostook. Pray for me, that I may have strength and force of mind for this great work. My prayer is still, let thy Kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth—yes, let the whole earth be filled with His glory. Amen and amen. B. Spaulding.

Gleanings from Letters.

I. B. Massure, Monroe, Me., writes:—"Your paper has been a great comfort, as we are surrounded with Spiritualism, and hear nothing about the Lord's coming. We do not have the privilege of meeting with the brethren and sisters very often. Yours looking for Jesus."

Bro. I. C. Wellcome, Richmond, Me., sends a subscriber and writes:—"I should be glad to get many more, but most people think times are hard. But it is because they use an abundance of money for other things less useful than a good religious paper."

J. W. Mitchell, (Bro., or Sister?) Liberty, Me., writes:—"The Crisis makes a good tract in this place. And I trust that ere long I shall be able to send you a few subscribers, together with the money. May God bless your labors."

☞ It is stated that the troops at Fairfax took 100 [illegible]

☞ Your particular attention is called to the fact that at our Wilbraham Camp Meeting last fall, it was voted to purchase, of Bro.'s Munger and Ladd, the cooking apparatus, crockery and boarding utensils. To effect this, it was thought best to raise a fund, and hence a subscription list was opened, and many of the friends subscribed toward this object. Some of the subscribers paid their pledges, but the most of what was subscribed is still unpaid. Our object at this time is to call attention to this matter, and earnestly request the brethren and sisters to send their subscriptions immediately to Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., so that there may be nothing lacking which will conduce to the comfort and convenience of those who shall go up to our contemplated feast of tabernacles. Let every one respond promptly. F. H. B.

☞ The Lord willing, I purpose spending a season in the country immediately after the Wilbraham Camp Meeting, and would be glad to hear from brethren or churches desiring my labors for a week-day evening, or for a Sabbath.

At the same time should like specially to visit and make the acquaintance of brethren believing in the endowments and order of the primitive church. Such will please write me immediately.

The Rebellion.

The late victories in Virginginia were received at Washington with marked demonstrations of joy. It is said that all over the city, in hotels, on the street, and in Congress, the news was hailed as the forerunner of a series of brilliant successes which will attend the advance of the Union army. A renewed confidence is felt in Gen. Scott. Those who were disposed to doubt the expediency of that delay which has evidently placed Gen. McClellan in the condition to accomplish his late victory, are now earnest in their expressions of implicit reliance in his programme. The majority of the people have never distrusted his abilities and hopefully look to a favorable issue. The Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce says: "I find that increasing confidence is felt in the ability and the determination of the Federal government to suppress the insurrection, and restore peace and commerce.

Congress is acting under the belief, and the members generally set their faces against any terms of pacification, short of actual submission by the revolutionists."

Each succeeding movement reveals something of the plans of this great campaign. We can surely see that its immediate object is to clear Virginia of Confederate troops and occupy Richmond, and to sustain the loyal State Government of Virginia, already recognized by Congress. But the fortune of war is uncertain, and the best laid plans may fail. The operations in Virginia are complicated, but there is no doubt that they will be pushed forward with the utmost vigor. With the fall a campaign will open against the rebels on the Mississippi river and on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Water Spouts in New Hampshire.—A correspondent of the Manchester Mirror gives the following account of a terrific water spout on Massabesic pond:

July 12, 1861. Yesterday, about 5 P. M., as a thunder shower was about leaving the pond, the water commenced rising from near the Island Pond House, and very soon it formed a spout estimated to be at least 1000 feet high. The spout was tunnel-shaped, tapering very gradually from the water surface, until reaching about 800 feet elevation, then it spread out into the shape of an umbrella top, extending hundreds of feet in diameter, and, in contrast with the black clouds beyond, presented one of nature's most beautiful scenes. It remained stationary about ten minutes, and then moved toward Johnson's beach, where a picnic party were in the nick of time to get a ducking, see and feel the spouting.

As it approached the beach, and while passing, it carried off all the boats along shore, and also twisted off branches of trees three or four inches through, and in about the twinkling of an eye took all the dishes used for the table and cooking, that had been hastily thrown on the table as the shower came up, and sent them in all directions through the woods. Some one sang out, "Lie down on your faces," and it was well we did so, for as the whirl passed, the trees were actually bent down to the ground, touching the backs of the prostrate persons. The spout coming in contact with some woods near the shore, got "aired," and broke with the noise of distant cannon, and then far and near the air was filled with branches of trees, leaves, sticks, etc. The whole performance, I should judge, lasted fifteen minutes.

The water spout tore the fences down, tipped over the bath house and made clean work in its course just east of the Island Pond House, but fortunately did not reach the house. It was terrific, frightful to all who who saw it there.

Another Spout. On what is called by many "Long Pond," south of the Massabesic, a Water Spout similar to the one on "Great Massabesic," so vividly described by our correspondent, exhibited itself yesterday. Two gentlemen from Londonderry were there fishing, and represent it as rising like a tunnel large end down, and then changing into another tunnel the small end joined to the small end of the first, and seeming to be scooping out the Pond.

The following is from a source which is reliable:—"A gentleman just from New Orleans reports that the rebels there had taken a powerful tugboat, covered her with railroad iron and put her machinery below the water line. She is to be commanded by Capt. Seward Porter, formerly of Portland, Me. Both of the above vessels are intended to run down the United States blockading vessels."

☞ The advance of the grand army is said to have begun. The New York Commercial states that the New York Fire Zouaves, Col. Farnham, were on Thursday [illegible]

The Maine Annual Advent Conference.

The next session of this Conference will be held in Yarmouth, (in the Institute occupied by the Advent church,) Wednesday, September 11th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Particulars hereafter. I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

Richmond, Me., July 13, '61.

Notice.

There will be a discussion between the Rev. Mr. Hemphill, a Universalist minister, and P. A. Smith, to be held on Sunday, Aug. 18th, at Waterport, seven miles north-west of Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y. Subject—the Personality of the Devil. It will be held on the Island, at half-past ten o'clock, A. M.

P. A. Smith.

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to George T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

F. H. Berick,
Miles Grant,
Geo. T. Adams, } Committee.

Special Notice.

Eld. Miles Grant was appointed by the Christian Publication Society to act as Travelling Agent for the Crisis. Monies on subscription for publications, and on account may, therefore, be paid to him and he will account to the office. Payments made in this way to Bro. Grant will be acknowledged in the Crisis the same as if remitted to the undersigned. Rufus Wendell,
Business Agent.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1 25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1 50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1 61; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2 25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50, postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. Wendell, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

Should Christians Fight?

This is an important question just now. A set of Southern slave holders have long crushed in the dust some millions of men, women and children. The majority of northern people have long justified them in it; have mobbed abolitionists—have demanded agitation—have sworn to return their fugitives (in swearing, without any reservation, to obey the laws,)—have justified churches in fellowshiping all the damnable deviltries of human bondage, by fellowshiping those who defended and practiced them. Tract societies have winked at their iniquities and have been silent about their sins; statesmen have mocked the idea of any higher law than a fugitive slave law; the federal power has been exerted for the overthrow of freedom and the spread of bondage, until at last the American Union is shattered, if not destroyed. This union is the idol god before which politicians and people have worshiped; and this union has been engaged for generations in binding burdens on the weak, and oppressing the poor and the needy; and the north have consented thereto so long as they could buy cotton, sell goods and gain money.

All at once there is a great change. Ten thousand politicians rise up for the union. Ten thousand pulpits thunder damnation at the south, where they have preached compromise before. Ten thousand asses, drunk as ever Balaam's was, have at last seen the avenging angel, and have opened their mouths to speak and rebuke the mad men of the south. Men who have compromised their consciences away, refuse to give their pocket books with them. Men who have given the devil many a hair, refuse to have him take the whole head. Merchants who sold their principles with their goods, are mad because the goods are not likely to be paid for; the principles were of no consequence. Men who cursed John Brown that they might make money by it, now curse slavery because they are likely to lose by that. That which they got on the devil's back, they lose under his belly. What makes this change? "O they fired into Sumpter—they insulted the stars and stripes—they rebelled against the government." So the men who would not have pointed the north star to a fleeing child of God escaping from bondage—men who have looked on unmoved while the lash made "stripes" upon a million backs—men that have palliated the ungodliness of women-whippers and cradle-robbers—men who have hunted fugitive slaves in the streets of northern cities, now, in a sudden fit of patriotism, turn out to defend the "stars and stripes." These, in their eyes, are more sacred than the rights of four million slaves, and so, among the first exploits of Massachusetts soldiery, we have recorded an offer to suppress servile insurrection.

What is the meaning of all this? Who can fail to read in it the tokens of God's judgment on the South for the crime of slavery, and on the North for their complicity therein? Now politicians, slaveholders, doughfaces, office-seekers, thieves and robbers, having gotten up all this difficulty by bribery, by corruption, by gaging the truth, and speaking lies in hypocrisy, till slavery became bold and impudent through their support, it is proposed that it is the duty of CHRISTIANS to go out with guns, and swords, and spears, and cartridges, and bayonets, and rifles, and muskets, and revolvers; and, having found men that they have never seen or heard of before, they are to take deliberate aim at their hearts—shoot, kill, stab and destroy them, spilling blood, splintering bones, dashing out brains, breaking teeth, cutting off arms and legs, breaking necks, maiming, burning, bruising and destroying men for whom Christ died, and to whom the God of love sends the message of salvation and of peace. And these CHRISTIAN men are to take a solemn oath before God to obey implicitly, without the least reserve, upon pain of instant death, their superior officers, many of whom are vile apostates, wicked blasphemers and men of blood, and who are to distinguish themselves by the number they can slay or overthrow in battle. CHRISTIANS, at the word of command, are to aim their guns at men's hearts—are to push their bayonets into the breasts of men, making their wives widows, their children orphans, their homes desolate, and turning all their joy to grief and bitter lamentation.

This is held to be a christian duty—to be performed by men who are commanded to "avenge not themselves," to "resist not evil," to bless when cursed, to pray for persecutors, and when persecuted in one city to flee to another. This is work for those who are bidden to be pitiful, not rendering "evil for evil," and to whom it is said, "as much as lieth in you live peaceably with all men," and of whom Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world: If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered unto the Jews." John 18 : 36. And this doctrine that CHRISTIANS should kill men to settle disputes caused by wicked and villainous men, and which God's people have no business with, except to testify against the iniquity, corruption and ruinousness of all parties,—this doctrine is preached from the pulpit, and heralded from the press, and poor ignorant souls are deluded into it and led away like sheep to the slaughter, believing it to be a Christian duty to KILL MEN. The newspapers speak of it as noteworthy that the Old Testament is preached from mostly now, as specially appropriate to this crisis, and ministers forsake the "gospel of the grace of God," to preach the law which came by Moses, and which "worketh wrath" and condemnation only.

I write of these things because my heart is pained. Only last night I saw a thousand men march for the seat of war, and in that number I have reason to believe there were some who would have given thousands of dollars to have escaped from the position that ministers had helped to push them into; not that they feared to die; but when they came to realise their work and the sin of it—their association with brutal men, (one of whom kicked an officer yesterday till his life is despaired of,)—the blasphemy and ungodliness that surround them—the certainty that they have been persuaded to go contrary to the will of Christ in engaging in the murderous work of war, and the solemn oath they have taken which binds them to the will of others, whether right or wrong, their hearts shrink from the terrible scene and the dread responsibility. And yet to that same regiment the pastor of a church in Providence preached, ten days ago, from the text, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," and told them that the vessel of the Lord might be a musket!! When such leaders cause the people to err, what can be expected of poor deluded men? So preachers South and North urge warfare as a Christian duty, and pray God to give each side success; and chaplains, after invoking the presence of the meek and lowly Christ, urge their soldiers to blow each other's brains out, or stab each other to the heart as fast as possible. Is this Christianity? Then I have not learned Christ aright. The powers that be are UNDER God, (not "ordained of God," as our version has it,) and I am subject to them, but shall I kill men because they require it?

War is, no doubt, a necessity among wicked rulers and wicked men. Nothing but wickedness has brought on the present war—wickedness on both sides. Let those that started it finish it out. It is their business, and they are fit for it and love it. Let the disciples of Jesus be lovers of peace. It is related that in the Irish rebellion when Catholics and Protestants were at war, the poor persecuted "Friends" stood aloof from it all. Catholics killed Protestants,—that was, Catholicism. Protestants killed Catholics,—that was, Protestantism. The Quakers took the maimed and wounded of both parties to their homes, sheltered and nursed and cured them. That was Christianity. Let us seek to be christians.

Readers, go to the Bible! Read the New Testament and see if that counsels war. But says one, if we are not citizens and do not vote, what right have we to the protection of government? The same right that an Englishman or Hottentot would have if they came to this country, paid their taxes and behaved themselves. So we have all the rights of aliens. We are bound by God's law to obey man's law in all things right; but when we take an oath of allegiance to a government, we are bound by that oath to obey that government in all things, right or wrong, fugitive slave law and all. Christians should avoid all moral obligation, and then the legal obligation has no hold upon the conscience further than it is right. But it is said "Paul demanded protection of the government and got it." So may I. He simply asked rulers to keep their own laws, and see that others kept them. I can do the same in England, France, or any other country where I have not the slightest claim to be considered as a citizen. When men claim to be officers of justice, I may refer to their own laws: "Sittest thou here to judge me according to law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to law?"

To conclude, no passage can be brought from the New Testament teaching that christians should fight, kill and destroy men. Besides, in the words of a learned writer, "It is as easy to obscure the sun at midday, as to deny that the primitive christians renounced all revenge and war. Of all the christian writers of the second century, there is not one who notices the subject, who does not hold it to be unlawful for a christian to bear arms. It was not till christianity became corrupted that christians became soldiers." The centurian Marcellus, when converted to Christ, threw down his belt at the head of his legion, declaring that he had become a christian and would serve no longer. When committed to prison he said, "It is not lawful for a christian to bear arms for any earthly considerations;" and was in consequence thereof put to death. Cassian, notary to the same legion, followed his example, and like him suffered martyrdom. Martin, who was bred a soldier, abandoned his profession, and gave to Julian, the Apostate, as his reason, "I am a christian, and therefore cannot fight." The answer of Tarachus to Numerianus Maximus was, "I have led a military life, and am a Roman; because I am a christian, I have abandoned my profession of a soldier." Maximillian was brought before the tribunal to be enrolled as a soldier. On the proconsul's asking his name he said, "I am a christian and cannot fight." Threatened with death he said, "I cannot fight if I die." He suffered death for refusing to kill others.

About the end of the second century Alsus, an opponent of Christianity, charged the Christians with refusing to bear arms even in cases of necessity. Origen, in reply, admits the refusal, and justifies it because war itself was unlawful. Lactantius says, "It can never be lawful for a righteous man to go to war." Tertullian, speaking of a part of the Roman armies, comprehending more than one third of the standing legion of Rome, informs us that "not a Christian could be found among them." He says: "Though the soldiers came to John and received a certain form to be observed, yet Jesus Christ, by disarming Peter, disarmed every soldier afterwards, for custom never sanctions any unlawful act." * * * "Can a soldier's life be lawful when Christ has pronounced that he who lives by the sword shall perish by the sword? Can any one who possesses the peaceable doctrine of the gospel, be a soldier, when it is his duty not so much as to go to law? And shall he who is not to revenge his own wrongs, be instrumental in bringing others into chains, imprisonment, torture and death?" Irenæus says that Isaiah 2d had been fulfilled in Christians who "have changed their swords and their lances into instruments of peace, and they know not how to fight." Justin Martyr says, "That the prophecy is fulfilled, you have good reason to believe, for we, who in times past killed one another, do not now fight with our enemies." Quotations might be multiplied, showing that the pure and primitive church did not fight. When they became corrupt they became soldiers.

Brethren, I charge you beware of this delusion that it is a Christian's duty to engage in carnal strife. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal." "He that killeth with the sword, shall be killed by the sword." The only American colony that escaped wars with Indians and slaughter at their hands, were the Quakers in Philadelphia, who had no arms, and would not fight. They dwelt in peace. Alas for the nations! "The way of peace they have not known." The wine-cup of fury is placed to their lips. Jehovah hath a controversy with the nations, and ere long the slain of the Lord shall bestrew the world. Beware even of the outer circles of this terrible Maelstrom.

> "The cry is up, the strife begun,
> The struggle of the mighty ones;
> And Armageddon's day comes on,
> The carnival of slaughter's sons:
> War lifts his helmet to his brow,—
> O God protect thy people now!"

Brethren! Ministers of Christ! Take heed that blood be not found upon your garments. I charge you preach peace to all. I have written from a sense of duty. I am pure from blood in this matter.

For the Crisis.

A Foretaste of "the Coming Struggle between the Church and the Powers of Darkness;" or, A Contact with Spiritualism.

When Sister G. and husband came to this place, they were obliged to rent rooms of one of these modern mystics, as none others suited their business (fancy store), and for convenience they occupied a room adjoining for housekeeping. Mrs. G., some three years since, visited Warsaw, Ia., and was introduced into our family; and when approached with prayerful and loving hearts, we found her heart tender toward God, even as the good soil, all mellowed and prepared for the good seed. We cast in the "Pauline Theology." It took root, and in due time showed itself in a willing and an intelligent obedience to that form of doctrine delivered her in God's holy word.

In a recent severe attack of illness of this dear Sister, we had a practical demonstration of the contrast in the hope of those who are blinded by the "god of this world" and the hope of the christian. Mrs. D., the proprietress, could not have been more kind had she been a sister, all of which was duly appreciated and acknowledged. But it was soon evident that there was a depth and breadth about her kindness that proscribed interference from any other source. She would be physician, nurse and spiritual guide, without aid from others. The two former were granted her for a time, but our Sister, being nothing bettered, but rather worse, sent for medical aid. This step highly displeased the lady in charge, and she absented herself for a time. But previous to this, they had beset her to admit a healing medium, extolling one just at hand. But this was stedfastly resisted, after which angels came and ministered to her, by inclining her, as soon as the mystics left the room, to turn to a young Sister present, the only person in the room, and ask her to read and pray, which was greatly blessed to her. Just at this sweet moment we entered, with hearts fully prepared to direct her mind to the Great Physician, as directed in James 5: 14, 15. She laid hold of Him, as the exhausted drowning man lays hold of the cable and is drawn from the devouring waters. "Yes," said she, "I wish it done, and if I die, I will die obeying God. The sorcerers have been about me. But O, deliver me from them. Let me turn to God." It was done, and we three knelt by her bed and tried to offer up the prayer of faith. She seemed comforted and strengthened in a God at hand and not afar off, who is a very present help in trouble. O how sweet it did seem to my soul to be stayed on such a Rock in such a crisis! "There is no rock like our God." Let the rains descend, let the floods come, let the winds blow, naught can harm us here. And is it not strange that it should ever be a cross for us, under any and all circumstances, to confess this our Rock? Passing strange is this; and had no one ever done this but me, I should not think so strangely, but others have done the same thing, and in this I see the depth of our fall.

Strange as it may seem, I now found it to be an exceeding cross to confess before these uncircumcised the ground of my hope for the recovery of our Sister, and why we thus hoped in God; and I even kept silent amid their oft-repeated assertions that she must die unless help came soon, until my own mind became clouded, and my Sister's mind was left to wander from her Rock, and even to cleave to something proposed by Mrs. D. for help. I soon saw whither we were driving, and I opened my mouth for God. I told her we had changed physicians this morning—that we had called the Great Physician. "Who?" she earnestly asked; but, as I went on, she answered herself, "Oh! yes." I told her what we had done, and why we did it, etc. She seemed transfixed while I was speaking, but soon found occasion to leave the room. After she was gone, we had a most humbling season before God for our unfaithfulness to him. My sister prayed for me and I for her, and we were both set upright again. We told the Lord we knew him to be a "jealous God"; that he would not give his glory to another, and that his word, which he had magnified above all his name, should here be honored before those who had trampled it under their unhallowed feet.

Soon Mrs. D. returned, and Sister G. called her to her bed, took her hand, and told her all the truth; told her how much she desired to see her a christian, and how much she needed to be a christian to make her a good mother, and that she might have the blessed God to trust in at all times. She received this very kindly, and in reply to me said, "I also am trusting in God, but it is a different God from yours; mine is the God of nature." I replied, "I know nothing of the God of nature. My trust is in the true and living God who made nature, as he has revealed himself to us in his holy word; here is the ground of my hope. If we do as he directs in his word, we know we are right, and this is the only sure foundation now to rest upon in the world." She here seemed to yield the ground to us, and to behave more modestly in her subsequent visits. Plainly indeed is it to be seen that "their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges."

Now let public opinion favor this proscriptive spirit, and let that be strengthened by the secular arm, and where are we? Even to that period so long desired by the "souls under the altar," "when (we) shall be killed as (they) were;" and then, when the Avenger of martyr's blood shall come, we shall with them enjoy the "white robes" which they so long have worn only in vision. O Lord, prepare us for the COMING STRUGGLE. Amen. E. S. W.

For the Crisis.

It is So.

Christ reigns until the last enemy is destroyed, Paul says. John says, from the binding of the Dragon to the destroying of the last enemy, death, is one thousand years; so that Paul and John agree as to the time that death is destroyed, at the end of the reign of Christ, which is one thousand years. Then cometh the end, when the Son shall deliver up the kingdom to God even the Father, when the Father shall have put down all rule, authority and power, for Christ must reign till the Father hath put all enemies under Christ's feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death, for the Father had put all things under Christ's feet. But when Christ says all things are put under him, it is manifest that the Father is excepted that put all things under Christ's feet. And when all things shall be subdued unto Christ, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto the Father that put all things under Christ's feet, that God may be all in all. I see no other way to make sense.

From the Bible Examiner.

The Day of Rest.

A LECTURE BY REV. H. H. DOBNEY, ENGLAND.

A third object included has been already glanced at, but should be formally adduced, viz: that contained in Ex. 23: 12—"Six days shalt thou do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest, that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid and the stranger may be refreshed." And in Ex. 31: 12–17, we learn that it served a fourth purpose, viz.: to constitute one of the distinguishing marks of the people whom—for wisest and most merciful reasons relative to the whole world ultimately—God intended to be for a time distinct from all nations; all other nations being then sunk in debasing idolatries and vices. "It is a sign between me and the people of Israel for ever." And to this effect, Ezek. 20: 12, and other passages.

Who wonders, then, that so wise and benevolent and beautiful a law should be guarded by even extremest penalties; especially at the first, and among a servile people who soon showed that they could be taught only by the strong hand. If mutiny were on the point of breaking out among a ship's crew, who were most wisely and humanely commanded, and treated rather as friends or children than as sustaining any less happy relation—who would not applaud prompt severity to the individual, as mercy to all? If one incorrigibly determined offender begin, in spite of every warning, defiantly and openly to disobey, and to dare the execution of the threatened penalty, while all others look on to see what the end is to be, and whether they also may brave authority, all thoughtful men will approve the promptest and severest measures. Obedience must be enforced; authority must be maintained. And I, therefore, have no wish to blink the fact that one unhappy wretch, having resolved on testing how far he might disobey with impunity, was put to death for the offence of breaking the Sabbath: Num. 15: 32–36. It has been asked, What, put a man to death for gathering sticks! And I for one say, "under the circumstances—Yes." Nor do I know a single crime that can be committed which may not be mis-represented as a most insignificant thing. Thus murder has been spoken of as "merely diverting a few ounces of red fluid, called blood, from its proper channel." But thus to present things is, not only to confound all distinctions, however vast and important, but to put out the eyes of the mind and reduce one's self to, at all events, moral blindness. No employer would engage a confidential clerk, whose notion of forgery should be that it is nothing more than writing a man's name on a bit of paper; or a shopman, whose idea of abstracting money from the till is, that it is only putting a little of the natural product of the earth in one place rather than another! But when such a mode of stating things is held for valid in this commercial England of ours, then will I also accept the innuendo that, by the alleged law of God, a poor man was stoned to death for merely gathering a few sticks. If any will mis-represent, they are free to do so; only, the vice of unfairness and untruthfulness always recoils and hurts most the perpetrator thereof. For daring to openly disobey and defy the merciful King—for such God was to the theocratic people—who was bent on elevating and blessing all, the first Sabbath-breaker was put to death, as a solemn and timely warning.

But though this fact is a sad one, let not even the Jewish Sabbath be thought of as a day of austerity and gloom. So far from this, it was intended to be "a delight." The cypress never was the emblem of any form of religion that emanated from God. The vine-tree and myrtle are the recognized symbols of the church of the living God, even among the Jews. Those who were sad—as by reason of bereavement, for example—were not to come into the congregation, for a time; while the priests, more particularly representing and embodying the true idea of the people, were not to mourn for the dead. All was to be gladness in the presence of the Lord, as in Psa. 100. And when, after the return from exile, some nine or ten centuries later, the law was read to the assembled people, and they wept aloud, "Nehemiah and Ezra and the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not, nor weep. For all the people wept when they heard the words of the law. Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared; For this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry: for the joy of the Lord is your strength."—Neh. 8; 9, 10.

How the day was to be spent, we are not exactly told. The worship of God would occupy a portion of the time: and if men have no false and morbid views of God, one would think wise worship would be among the gladdest of all gladsome things; in harmony with the songs of birds, and the breath of flowers, and the merry laugh of childhood, and the deeper gladness of affianced youth and maiden, and the soberer joy of man and matron, and the calm peacefulness of age, when the hoary head is a crown of glory, being found in the ways of righteousness. And such was the experience of many, as it is the testimony of some. See, by way of example, Psa. 92, "a Song for the Sabbath day," or, 95, "O come let us sing unto the Lord, let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving," etc.

Such men—and they were Poets too—testified that "it was a good thing," and anticipated the day, "When shall I come and appear before God?" And when absent from the land, they reflected pensively on the hallowed scenes and times of by-gone worship. "When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me; for I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy day," Psa. 42: 4. And again, "Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy," or the gladness of my joy, Psa. 43: 4. And, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" But there would be no end to quotations. Man, the crowned king of creation, should worship with a higher and holier gladness than nature embodies in her worship, though beauty and song and fragrance are the form of her unceasing homage to her Maker.

On the day of rest, their holy Sabbath, the Hebrews would not only worship God, but teach their children and their households the mighty things of God; and cultivate the social virtues; and enjoy without fatigue their generally delicious climate; and sitting beneath their own vines and fig-trees, or gently walking in happy groups amid the romantic scenes of their beautiful land—adore the goodness that had made them blessed. Happy is the people that is in such a case; yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord.

Such, then, being in brief, the real state of things, it is but a matter of course, that, as one of the wisest and most benevolent and gracious of all the the institutions of the Mosaic economy, the Hebrew prophets in subsequent times should lay the greatest stress on the earnest and thorough recognition of the day of sacred rest, worship and refreshment. Isa. 58: 13, 14—may be referred to as a sufficient illustration of the stress laid on the holy day by the whole prophet class. And when the Jews returned from their exile in Babylon, and felt a renewed desire to keep the covenant of their God, those earnest reformers, Ezra and Nehemiah, began to secure the most exact sanctification, or setting apart, of the seventh day, as the Sabbath of the Lord. And the retrospect of his endeavors in this direction subsequently gave the latter the most unfeigned satisfaction. Thus Nehemiah 10, shows the people entering into a voluntary mutual covenant that . . . "if the people of the land bring ware or victuals on the Sabbath day to sell, that we would not buy it of them on the Sabbath, or on the holy day," etc. And some time after he records:—"In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine presses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals. There dwelt, also, men of Tyre therein, who brought fish and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah and in Jerusalem. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us and upon this city? Yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath. And it came to pass that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should be no burden brought in on the Sabbath day. So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice. Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the walls? If ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth, then came they no more on the Sabbath. And I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the Sabbath day. Remember me, O my God, concerning this also." Neh. 13. This is the last circumstance recorded in the historical scriptures touching the Sabbath, till we come to the New Testament and the Life of our Lord.

In the time of our Lord the Sabbath had greatly degenerated from its original idea. There was no danger now of its not being observed; but the danger was of the opposite kind. For the holy and beautiful ordinance of God had, in the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities, become a burdensome superstition. It was a day of outward form and ceremony, rigidly enforced, not with intelligent and cheerful regard to its high and blessed design, but for its own sake merely. A number of absurd traditions and ridiculously minute regulations, fondly invented by their Rabbis and others, had overlaid the day, and made it in some respects a poor and paltry puerility, and in others a burden for the conscience, and a snare for the soul. So that the [illegible] sent from God," had another [illegible] perform touching the Sabbath [illegible] of Nehemiah and the prophets, and declared "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men."

Christ himself, being by natural descent a Jew, and so being born "under the law," observed the day, though in a high and holy manner. If, indeed, He can be said to have observed it, whose whole life was one day of equal and uniform piety, and who was in every respect, both inwardly and outwardly, on each of the six days of the week, what he was on the seventh. For with him every day was alike holy, and his moral perfectness left no room for artificial or seasonal distinctions. And it greatly scandalized the rigid formalists of his time that he intermitted none of his labors of love on the Sabbath; but, walking from place to place with his disciples, freely did all the good there was opportunity for, on that day as on others; asserting, in face of the opposition made to him by the Scribes and Pharisees, that it was "lawful to do good on the Sabbath days;" for their sanctimonious scrupulosity, alas! had reached to such a pitch that, reversing the word of God, they preferred sacrifice to mercy. Thus designedly going on his lofty way without regard to the vicious and vexatious glosses and interpretations of the Scribes, Christ exposed himself to their deadly hatred; and there was no charge more frequently brought against him, than that of "breaking the Sabbath." So that once and again they took up stones to stone him for this offence. Until, at last, he laid down that simple but profound and far-reaching principle and rule, which is at the same time a key to the design, and therefore a certain index to the proper understanding and treatment, of all religious institutions really from God; this, viz., that "The Sabbath was made for man (for the man properly,) and not the man for the Sabbath." Mark 2: 27.

And here we come to a pause.

For Christ came to terminate (by fulfilling) one dispensation, and to inaugurate a new one. He looked therefore, behind and before. In him the past and future met, that they might henceforth be totally distinct. He transmuted law into gospel; "thou shalt" into "I will." For he was the bringer in and ratifier of a covenant "a better covenant;" which, unless a man do truly [illegible] the real nature of the Sabbath idea under the Christian dispensation, which is intended to be universal: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

Judaism was not adapted for a universal religion; and never was designed for adoption by any other people than the small nation of the Jews—a nation that was a family enlarged, being all sprung from one common ancestor—whose entire territory was little larger than the largest of our English counties. As a system, Judaism is complete in itself. All its parts co-here, and are mutually related and adjusted. It is a whole in itself. It was as a whole that it was introduced; and when it is abolished, it is abolished as a whole. And that it was abolished, by the bringing in of a "better thing," the Epistle to the Hebrews was written partly to teach. As for example, the writer, in chap. 8, says that Christ hath obtained a more excellent ministry—viz: than that of the Jewish priesthood—by how much he is the mediator of a better covenant. For if that first covenant—that made with the Jews—had been faultless—competent to answer every holy and spiritual end—no place would have been sought for the second (covenant.) But the Lord saith—viz: in Jer. 31: 31–34—Behold the days come when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah . . . . (The reader will do well to study the intervening verses, viz: 9–12.) Now in that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old—superannuated—is ready to vanish away, Heb. 8: 13. Thus did a Hebrew write about their whole law to Hebrews, within comparatively a few years after Christ had risen. Even already it was vanishing away. It was superseded by a simpler, nobler, happier dispensation, as superior to Judaism as Christ is to Moses, the mediator of the one to the mediator of the other.

The Gospel then took the place of the Law. The spirit is substituted for the letter. The law is to be written in the heart, instead of on tables of stone. The profound teaching of the apostle in 2 Cor. 3, should be deeply pondered and understood; in which, however, he distinctly mentions "the tables of stone," only to show them as superseded to christians by the writing on the heart by the Spirit of the Living God. I have said that Christ was the consummator of the one system, and the introducer of the other; that in him the past and future met; that he looked behind and before. His whole life was passed under the law, which he "magnified and made honorable." But when he died, he had done with the past. When he rose from the dead, he of course belonged to the Jewish people, as such, no more. The new system, the new reign, the kingdom of God is inaugurated.

It begins with the resurrection of Christ from the dead, to be henceforth "Lord of all." He belongs to the spiritual realm. He is pre-eminently a spiritual king. His kingdom is a spiritual one; "not of this world."

Transcribers of the Scriptures.

In transcribing the sacred writers, it has been a constant rule with the Jews, that whatever is corrupt, shall not be used, but shall be burnt, or otherwise destroyed. A book of the law, wanting but one letter, with one letter too much, or with an error in one single letter, written with anything but ink, or written on parchment made of the hide of an unclean animal, or on parchment not properly prepared for that use, or prepared by any but Israelites, or of skins of parchment tied together by unclean strings, shall be holden to be corrupt; that no work shall be written without a line first drawn on the parchment, no word written by heart, or without having been pronounced orally by the writer; that before he writes the name of God, he shall wash his pen; that no letter shall be joined to another; and that if the blank parchment cannot be seen all around each letter, the roll shall be corrupt. There are certain rules for the length and breadth of each sheet, and for the space to be left between each letter, each word, and each section. Even to this day, it is an obligation on the persons who copy the sacred writings of the synagogues to observe them.

VERACITY.—The groundwork of all manly character is veracity. That virtue lies at the foundation of every thing solid. How common it is to hear parents say, "I have faith in my child so long as he speaks the truth. He may have many faults, but I know he will not deceive me. I build on that confidence." They are right. It is a lawful and just ground to build upon. So long as truth remains in a child, there is something to depend on.

☞ He who rears up one child in christian virtue, or recovers one fallen creature to God, builds a temple more precious than Solomon's or St. Peter's—more enduring than earth or sky.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

One proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

"Being Justified by his Blood, we have peace with God."

And was thy precious blood once shed,
O spotless Lamb! for me,
And shall I tremble now to rest
My all of hope on thee?
Vainly I strive "by works" to gain
The favor of my God,
There's "no remission" in his "plan"
"Without shedding of blood."

Shall "blood of calves and goats" suffice
The flesh to purify,
Offered according to the law,
Designed to typify
The one great sacrifice now made?
Then how much more thy blood,
O Calvary's Lamb! shall purge my heart
To serve the living God.

Then "to the cross of Christ I'll cling,"
Close to his wounded side;
The "blood of sprinkling" to my heart
Shall be by faith applied;
Calmly and trustingly I'll rest,
And never wander thence;
Knowing the goodly tree of faith
Brings forth obedience.

Oh, then, deep in my heart, where first
The share of truth has gone,
May its root strike—its topmost boughs
Reach the eternal throne.
Pendant from every living branch
The Spirit's fruits are found—
"Love, joy and peace," and righteousness,
There flourish and abound.

War: What is the Christian's Duty?

When brethren differ in their views of a subject, it becomes them to observe the most scrupulous caution in delivering their ideas, "lest any root of bitterness springing up" disturb christian harmony, and blind the judgment of the members of The Body.

We have no disposition to discuss the above question merely for the sake of discussion, and we feel a degree of diffidence in controverting the argument of the venerable Editor of the Examiner, who deserves the love and profound respect of every friend of truth. But in view of "the time of trouble" which we are persuaded is coming on the earth, and that the subject may be surveyed from various stand-points, so that the followers of Christ may be enabled to assume a consistent and harmonious position, we beg permission to throw our mite into the treasury of debate.

1. The spirit of the Gospel is a spirit of peace. The war spirit shrieks, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth;" "Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy." The Gospel answers, "Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also;" "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." "Sink, burn and destroy," says war. The Gospel replies, "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." This spirit of peace is breathed in all the teachings of Christ and his apostles. "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves." "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps: * * who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed his cause to Him that judgeth righteously." Without further remarks on this head, we feel safe in affirming, The spirit of the gospel is a spirit of peace. Truly, "a war spirit is not the spirit of Christianity." How, then, can Christians go to war? Can they do so without having the war spirit? To us it appears impossible.

2. The letter of the Gospel teaches peace. "If possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." We may have neighbors who will not "live peaceably," [illegible] but their conduct need not prevent us from being peaceful. Both sides must be willing before a fight can take place. We can do "as much as lieth in" us toward peace. If our enemies are obstinate, of course, it is not "possible" for us to "live peaceably with all men." But we can "live peaceably with all" who are willing so to do. Murdock's translation of the Syriac reads, "And if possible, so far as it dependeth on you, live in peace with every man." If our enemies are determined not to live in peace, our duty is plain; we must be peaceable, though all the world be at war. "Blessed are the peacemakers." Does this text cohere with the following phrase?—"Fight for peace." Can we make peace by fighting? "Yes," said the United States government in its iniquitous crusade against Mexico, "we are fighting to conquer a peace,"—that is, they would fight until the Mexicans were conquered, and thus make peace. The Napoleonic beast may write "blessed are the peacemakers" on the helmets of his warriors, if the words "fight for peace" are in agreement therewith. "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence." The nations will fight till the end, but they fight for dominion and power in this world. Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and if we account ourselves "children of the kingdom," let us take care that we do not entangle ourselves with "the kingdoms of this world.'

We see nothing to uphold war in the incident recorded in Acts 23. Paul called for personal protection, and the case can no more be cited as a recognition of the rightfulness of fighting, than it could be if he had invoked the protection of a civil police. Jesus' command to buy swords (Luke 22 : 36) is appealed to as an argument for war. At the most, the passage cannot be fairly construed to teach any thing more than the use of the sword in personal defence. This sufficiently warrants "police arrangements" as a safeguard against "house-breakers, incendiaries, and midnight assassins," but does not justify war. "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Poor Zwingle must have bitterly felt the truth of these words as he lay stretched beneath the pear tree on the field of Cappel. Says D'Aubigne, "Doubtless had the Saxon reformer (Luther) approached Zwingle in that solemn hour, and said to him those words he so often repeated, 'Christians must combat, not with the sword or arquebus, but with suffering and the cross,'—doubtless, I say, Zwingle would have extended to him his dying hands, and have responded, Amen. * * * Zwingle, at the time of his death, was not yet forty-eight. Did the strength given of God always accompany the strength of mere man, what might not Zwingle have accomplished. * * But he had girt himself with a weapon interdicted by God; he had laid aside his divine for a carnal vocation; the helmet had covered his brow, his hand had grasped the halberd; the patriot had misled the reformer. His most devoted friends, amazed, confounded, exclaimed, 'We know not what to think! A bishop with carnal weapons!' * * * At the moment of concluding this melancholy narrative, we take some stones, and erecting them on the battle field of Cappel, we inscribe on them, on one side, these words of the Psalmist: Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will trust in the name of the Lord. And on the other side this declaration of the King of the Church: My reign is not of this world. Could a voice issue from the graves of the martyrs of Cappel, these are the words which those noble confessors would address, after a lapse of three centuries, to the christians of our day: The Church has no other King than Jesus Christ; it must not mingle in this world's politics, * * but its march is like that of its King—from the manger to the cross, and from the cross to glory."

3. Fighting is not a part of our duty to rulers. We are commanded to render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's," but we are as strictly ordered to render unto "God the things which are God's." The passages inculcating obedience to governments, in Romans and 1 Peter, say nothing about war. They teach us to be peaceable, law-abiding citizens, under whatever government we may live. "When you live in Rome, do as the Romans do." We are to "pay tribute" and otherwise obey "the powers that be" in all rightful things, taking care not to "resist" the ordinance of God." But "where rulers command to do that which is plainly forbidden of God, we [illegible] and letter of the Gospel, to engage in carnal warfare. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal."

It is said, as "the Gospel requires" christians "to pay tribute to government to sustain war," therefore the Gospel "may call them to active service in the war." This proves too much. If the government should get up a grand fillibustering expedition, under the dictation of some such hoary criminal as the author of the Ostend manifesto, or should attempt to texas England by taking Canada, and consequently be involved in a bloody war with the mother country, as it was with Mexico, or should contrive any other scheme of plunder, the foregoing argument would make christians fight, because any and every war in which the government is engaged must necessarily be sustained by the tribute of christians as well as others. With regard to the present war, we believe it is the natural result of a long course of unblushing crimes committed by the whole nation against humanity. The portrait of the nation has been fearfully and truthfully drawn by a master hand. "The stripling giant, ill bred and scoffing, shouts amain,—'My feet are red with the Indian's blood; my hand has forged the negro's chain. I am strong; who dares assail me, for I have made my covenant of lies and leagued with hell for my support. There is no Right, no Truth; Christianity is false, and God a name.' His left hand casts his Bible underneath his feet, and in his right he brandishes the negro driver's whip, crying again, 'Say, who is God, and what is Right?'" "Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" saith the Lord.

Thousands of noble men and women have been striving for years to reform the nation, but, alas! it has gone on in its career of crime to the bitter end, and now begins to taste the cup of God's wrath. In a recent number of the Crisis a writer has well said, "Christians have served their country well by laboring incessantly for purity; now let those who have done worse than nothing in this respect, do something, if they can, with the sword. As for us, our duty ends with the 'sword of the Spirit.'" That noble champion of freedom, John G. Whittier, remains true to the teachings of his fathers, and fitly says:—

"They break the links of Union: shall we light
The fires of hell to weld anew the chain
On that red anvil where each blow is pain?"

Theodore Parker's sermon on war, delivered years ago, is especially pertinent at this time. His remarks read almost like a prophecy. We transcribe a few of them. "Now, to make the evils of war still clearer, and to bring them home to your door, let us suppose there was war between the counties of Suffolk, on the one side, and Middlesex on the other; this army at Boston, that at Cambridge. * * The rulers on one side are fools, and traitors on the other. * * Prayers are offered in all the churches, and sermons preached, showing that God is a man of war, and Cain his first saint. The banners are consecrated by solemn words. Your church towers are military posts of observation. * * The battle is fiercely joined. You hear the cannon, the sharp report of musketry. * * The chaplains loiter behind.

'Pious men, whom duty brought,
To dubious verge of battle fought,
To shrive the dying, bless the dead.'

The battle hangs long in even scale. At length it turns. Victory is ours. Ten thousand men of Cambridge lie dead; eight thousand of Boston. There writhe the wounded, torn and mangled, black with powder, red with blood, parched with thirst. Gather them into hasty hospitals; yonder wounded man shall linger out a life of wretched anguish, unspoken and insupportable, and when he dies, his wife religiously will keep the shot which tore his limbs. * * Again 'tis night. Oh, what a night, and after what a day! Yet a pure tide of woman's love—which never ebbs since the world began—flew on in spite of war and battle. Stealthily, by the pale moonlight, a mother of Boston treads the weary miles to reach that bloody spot; a widow she—seeking among the slain her only son. The arm of power drove him forth reluctantly to the fight. * * But, lo! another comes—she, too, a woman—younger and fairer, yet not less bold—a maiden from the hostile town to seek her lover. They meet—two women among the corpses; two angels come to Golgotha, seeking to raise a man. There he lies before them; they look,—yes, 'tis he you seek; the son, the lover. The grass is wet with his blood,—yes, the ground is muddy with the life of man. The mother's innocent robe is drabbled in the blood her bosom bore. Their kisses, groans and tears, recall the wounded man. He knows the mother's voice—that voice [illegible] shall the fool answer? what the traitor say? * * I would call on christians, who believe that christianity is a truth, to lift up their voice, public and private, against the violation of God's law—this blasphemy of the Holy Spirit of Christ—this worst form of infidelity to man and God. Teach your rulers that you are Americans, not slaves—Christians, not heathens—Men, not murderers, to kill for hire!"

4. "The nations are angry, and His wrath is come." In his article on the "Distress of nations," in the June Examiner, George Storrs nervously exhibits the true state of affairs. "The lulling of the storm, after the battle of Solferino, in 1859, caused many to think 'the cup' of Jehovah's just indignation on the 'nations,' for their wickedness and oppressions, would pass away; and especially did this country expect to escape it. Exalted to heaven with privileges, under the best government on earth, we had grown proud, * * connived at wickedness in Church and State, till our sins, like ancient Israel's, had towered high as heaven, and God might justly say, 'Lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and shall ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth. That sword has come, and our country begins to feel its awful power. * * It truly seems as if this nation's 'great day of judgment' had commenced." We affectionately ask all concerned, if it would not be "monstrous folly" for christians who believe that the sword of God's judgment is coming "upon all the inhabitants of the earth," to throw themselves headlong under its avenging stroke? And let us remember that this is only "the beginning of sorrows." Surely in vain shall we christians attempt to stay the "anarchy" that is coming on the nation "like night," if God is the author of it all. May the Lord help us to understand what He requires of us in these "perilous times."

"Our beloved brother" Storrs, as far back as the month of February, made a short comment upon Isa. 26: 20, 21, in the Examiner. His concluding observations will form an appropriate finale to this article. We endorse every word. "What we ask of all is, think of those words—ponder them in thy heart—ask thyself, am I seeking security in God—retiring, as far as possible, from all exciting causes which may lead me to occupy a place or position not within the 'chambers' of God's protection? 'Indignation' is certainly to come; and God's people are only safe by taking heed to his direction and counsel. Above all things, then, the higher commotions rise, the more seek to 'hide thyself' in close communion with God in Christ. So shalt thou be safe; not otherwise." Amen and Amen.

Interesting Experience.

A LETTER TO HIRAM MUNGER.

(Published by permission of the writer.)

MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Being detained from church to-day by indisposition of body, I will endeavor to fulfill my promise to you: so this beautiful Sabbath morning I have retired to my room, and, alone with God and my own thoughts, I take up my pen to converse awhile with one for whom I shall ever entertain feelings of the most heartfelt gratitude and greatest respect. I thank God to-day, my brother, that your steps were ever directed hither, and that I was inclined to listen to your voice, or rather the voice of God as it spoke to me through lips of clay,—that the heart-searching truths of His holy word not only fell upon my ear, but, accompanied by His Spirit, penetrated into the very inmost recesses of my heart, arousing and alarming the sleeping, yea, almost dying energies of my soul; bringing into action those powers which had so long lain dormant within; enabling me to see my danger, to see written, as it were, in burning characters, those awful and impressive words, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," and seeing, to fly, while mercy lingered and God's Spirit strove, to the "strongholds, while yet a prisoner of hope." O! Bro. Munger, had I been as thoughtless, so unwise as to have turned a deaf ear to that voice which spake in tones not to be misunderstood; grieved away that blessed Spirit which was warning and entreating me to return again to the fold from which I had wandered, (unmindful, alas! that I was straying far from home,) I might, like the foolish virgins, have slumbered on until the cry burst upon my ear, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." O, sad would have been my fate, groping my way in the dark midnight, with my lamp gone out, and no oil to replenish it! God being my helper, I will see to it, from this time henceforth [illegible] vessel, so that whenever my Master cometh, I may be fully prepared to meet and receive Him.

I suppose you would like to know something of my experience since you left our little village. Well, I will try to inform you, although it may be in an imperfect and broken manner; yet it shall be the true feelings of my heart. You saw, no doubt, with your discerning eye, when I stood before you in Bro. H.'s house, that I trembled beneath a heavy cross. It was most heavy, I can assure you; but I thank God to-day that he gave me strength and courage to take it up, and that I felt almost constrained by an inward prompting to say: "I will go out and talk with Bro. M. upon the great subject which of all others should receive our greatest and most profound attention. Let the world sneer; let brethren and sisters in the church who profess better things reproach; I will go. I will obey God in this respect, for I believe that it was none other than his Spirit which impressed me so deeply that this was a duty which I ought to perform." I went, and the result was, God blessed me in its performance. I had always been taught to believe that the Adventists were a low, weak-minded set of people, perverters of the Scriptures, enemies of the churches, and so forth; so you will not wonder that my proud heart rebelled at the thought of going out to talk with an Advent preacher. God saw in his infinite wisdom that my pride must be humbled before my heart could be prepared for the reception of the truth, and this was to be the first stroke of His mighty hand. Bro. M., I went back to the mill humbled before God. I sat down to my work, and I can assure you I felt very small just then. I felt that of all God's creatures I was the least, and the most unworthy. Even there my heart went out to Him in prayer. He heard the silent breathings of my repentant heart. He answered, and there came a sweet and heavenly calm upon my tempest-tossed soul; a gentle voice whispered "Peace, be still,"—and with the poet I could say,

"My God is reconciled,
His pard'ning voice I hear."

Yes, I felt that "Jesus wept and loved me still." O, how easy it was for me to decide the great question within, which had so long been undecided, and make the happy choice, to serve the Lord and follow in the way that his Spirit should lead me. I said, and it came from the very depths of my heart, "Lord, I will be thine forever. I will renounce the world, with all its pomp and glory. I will study thy word, for that is truth; and it shall be as a "lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path," illuminating the narrow way which leadeth unto life.

The first meeting I attended after you left us, was our Methodist "prayer and conference" meeting. As it was while among them I had stepped aside and fallen asleep by the way, I thought that there I must confess my wanderings, and tell them my desires and determinations, which I did to the astonishment of all present. I told them with tears that I was sorry I had been so cold and indifferent in the cause which I had professed to love and honor, and humbly asked their forgiveness; told them that I was resolved for the future to live a consistent christian life, search God's unerring word, be guided by its precepts, and led by the Spirit. This testimony produced quite a sensation; they praised God aloud that that voice which had so long been silent, was again heard, bearing witness to the truth—the harp, so long unstrung, was once more attuned to the praise of the Redeemer. The meeting seemed to take a new impetus; two old Congregationalist ladies, who had lived in the village about twenty years, and attended Methodist meetings, but had never been known to speak of the hope which was within them, arose that evening, and, with unloosed tongues, spake forth the praises of God. Bro. M. came and took me by the hand, and said he, (to use his own expression,) "O, Sarah, you don't know how my heart jumped to-night when I heard your voice; it jumped as it has not for months before; now let us look up, expecting great things." What think you, Bro. Munger, was the answer which came to my mind, and trembled on my lips for utterance, but was repressed? It was this: "I cannot look up, but I am looking forward but a little way, to the fulfillment of 'great and precious promises.'" Methinks I see you look reprovingly and say, "You should have followed that impression." Perhaps I should, but I feared that it would cause a shadow of uneasiness to fall upon Bro. M.'s happy frame of mind. I loved them all, and I felt that they all loved me, and I almost came to the conclusion (everything being so inharmonious with my own feelings) that your predictions would fail [illegible] truths of the Bible—for they are truths, and I believe them with all my heart. But I must hasten.

The next meeting I attended was the Advent prayer meeting. There, too, I told my desires and determinations. They likewise rejoiced with me, and we had a good time waiting upon the Most High. I hardly know why, but I felt more freedom there than among my own people. The next Methodist meeting found me there again, ready to stand as a witness for my Savior. I was very careful, and always have been, not to say anything which I thought would conflict with their particular views, although, brother, think not that I would be guilty of saying anything to please man that I did not believe. No, I would scorn to tell a lie, or even resort to subterfuge; but I will confess to you that I have sometimes suppressed thoughts, which I felt impressed to speak, for fear of displeasing, and calling down the anathemas of the church upon my head. At this meeting, Bro. M., and some of the most influential members, (having heard that I had attended the Advent meetings, and fearing that there was almost too much of an attraction there for my good and their interest,) thought it their duty, no doubt, to throw out a few gentle hints about the propriety of those who had just come up on higher ground "keeping in the old paths." They hoped that none of their brethren or sisters would in any way uphold or encourage the promulgation of such false and erroneous sentiments as had been advanced of late among them, which they feared would have such a pernicious effect upon the ungodly; but trusted they would see the necessity of "walking in the Lord Jesus as they had received Him," and not be "driven about by every wind of doctrine." I knew very well for whom these remarks were intended. They thought, I suppose, that an "ounce of preventive was worth a pound of cure" in this case, and they would commence in season, and give me a little mild medicine, mixed with a little sugar, so as to make it palatable, and just enough of the sickening properties in it to make me disgusted with the sentiments which they feared I might imbibe. They were afraid to give me a very powerful dose, for they knew that I was weak and could not bear it. Yes, "weaker than a bruised reed" I was, yet in my weakness I felt strong in God, for I loved Him and every creature which he had made. He had enlarged my heart and opened wide its doors, and my own church was altogether too small to contain it; it could not stay within its "pales," but all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ were encircled in its wide embrace. Yes, with my blessed Master I could say, "He that doeth the will of my Father in Heaven, the same is my mother, and sister, and and brother." Wherever I beheld the image of my Savior, I could reach forth to them the hand of christian fellowship.

But to go on. This medicine did not seem to have the desired effect, for the next Advent meeting found me among that little unpopular and persecuted band. Ah! I loved them, and felt that God loved them; how could I stay away? The next Methodist meeting found me at my post again. This time the potion was more bitter, less of the sweet mixed with it; they touched a tender spot within when they reproached and slandered those I loved; but I said, Lord, give me "charity that suffereth long and is kind," and "thinketh no evil." They think, no doubt, that they are doing God service, and myself a great kindness, in thus endeavoring to restrain my feet from ignorantly following after a deceived and deceiving people; but, strange to say, I refrained not from following them. At the third meeting I attended among my own brethren and sisters in the church, a cup was held to my lips that was like the "wormwood and the gall." I drank it to the very dregs, and my soul sickened, and my spirit groaned within me. Stinging words fell upon my ear that burned deep into my heart; yea, I felt the wound in every fibre of my soul. I left the place neither strengthened or refreshed. While my hungry soul craved the "sincere milk of the word," that it might grow in every christian virtue, they gave that which was like the "husks which the swine did eat;" there was no nourishment in it. They called the Advent people everything which was low and despicable; Antichrists, Atheists, modern Sadducees, with desires and tastes that were sensual, low and grovelling, who thought only of eating and drinking, building houses, planting vineyards, and raising up families in the kingdom of God, with a faith that only reached a few feet below the turf? But enough of this sickening detail. I could not but ask myself the question, Is this Religion, pure and undefiled? O, that this voice which spoke to Saul of Tarsus [illegible] inasmuch as they do it unto their frail brethren, they do it unto their Lord.

Think not, my brother, that my motive in laying these things before you is to dress up, or publish abroad the faults of my brethren; far be it from this. "Tell it not in Gath." I have not committed or even spoken of them here; but I felt that you had stood just where I now stand, (although you occupied, no doubt, a much higher position there,) and could sympathize with me as one who has experienced like trials. God knows I bear no ill will towards this church of my early choice. "With all her faults I love her still." Clustering around it are many sweet associations and fond memories of the past. It was there in earlier years I first heard the story of the cross,—there, when crushed beneath the weight of sin, I was pointed to the Lamb of God,—there I first trembled under the cross, and with lisping tongue witnessed for the truth,—there, in my youth and inexperience, she welcomed me to her bosom, and threw around me her protecting arms,—there I have often knelt at her altar and commemorated the death and sufferings of a crucified but risen Lord with a dear mother and sister who now "sleep in Jesus" and a father and an only remaining sister whose names with mine still stand upon the record. The church is not to-day what it was at that period. She has increased in wealth and numbers, yes, and popularity too, but she has decreased in vital piety.

Sometimes, Bro. M., I hardly know which way to turn, or how to move. The Advent brethren and sisters, some of them, feel very anxious that I should come out openly and take sides with them, and confess freely my opinions respecting "the truth as it is in Jesus." They know my sympathies are with them, and as they are few and feeble in number, I can hardly blame them for feeling a little impatient at my hesitation. God knows that if I were not bound by church laws, there would be home—but I fear to step, lest it should prove a mis-step. Sometimes I am at a loss to know what duty is. Do you think it would be the wisest and the best way for me, in a Methodist meeting, to advance ideas which I know they will not believe or sanction, however sincere I may be in uttering them? You will see at once that it would cause unpleasant feelings, and no doubt call forth a harsh rejoinder; the harmony of the meeting would be disturbed; I should feel injured, and on the whole the meeting would prove an unprofitable one. This is the way I reason upon the subject. There is enough that I can say, and say it from the heart, which will be agreeable to their feelings, and in harmony with the word of God. Do you not think this would be the right course to pursue while I remain with them? And if it is for God's glory, my own eternal welfare, and the welfare of those around me, that my connection with the church be severed, do you not think that God will, in His providence, in some way open a door, so that I may quietly withdraw without disturbance or confusion? But if it should not be His will, (and I would know His will in all things and cheerfully obey,) I trust that the way may be hedged up.

One great reason why I do not feel at present like coming out openly, and avowing my principles, is this: I feel too weak and ignorant to argue with opposers; and should I profess to believe the Advent doctrine, there would be no end to the questions which would be asked by unbelievers; difficult passages of scripture would be handed me, and I should be expected, of course, to answer them. You could do it, but I could not, and therefore it would greatly annoy and disturb my peace. When I am thoroughly instructed in the great truths which you preach, "grounded and settled," so that I can "give to every one that asketh a reasonable answer for the hope within me with meekness and fear," then, to use Bro. H.'s expression, I am ready to come out "square-toed." I have received more light upon the Scriptures since you came among us than I ever did before in all my life. The Bible has always been to me as a sealed book, a great part of it being full of dark and incomprehensible sayings, and problems which I could not solve. But I thank God to-day that the glorious truths of his word are being unfolded to my benighted mind. When I take up my Bible to study its teachings, my prayer is, Shine, O Lord, upon the sacred page, and dispel every cloud that gathers round thy word; teach me thyself, O Thou who hast taught as never man taught, and in thy blessed school may I be an apt and thorough student.

But I must bring this confused mass of thoughts to a close, although I have not half done talking. If your patience is not entirely exhausted picking this out, I will write again, if I can know where to direct. As this is not intended for a critic's eye, but for the eye of one who will [illegible] know my heart alone, I feel assured that all imperfections will be overlooked. In conclusion, let me say, Bro. M., [illegible] withhold. [illegible] anything [illegible]

"Being Justified by his Blood, we have peace with God."

And was thy precious blood once shed,
O spotless Lamb! for me,
And shall I tremble now to rest
My all of hope on thee?
Vainly I strive "by works" to gain
The favor of my God,
There's "no remission" in his "plan"
"Without shedding of blood."

Shall "blood of calves and goats" suffice
The flesh to purify,
Offered according to the law,
Designed to typify
The one great sacrifice now made?
Then how much more thy blood,
O Calvary's Lamb! shall purge my heart
To serve the living God.

Then "to the cross of Christ I'll cling,"
Close to his wounded side,
The "blood of sprinkling" to my heart
Shall be by faith applied;
Calmly and trustingly I'll rest,
And never wander thence,
Knowing the goodly tree of faith
Brings forth obedience.

Oh, then, deep in my heart, where first
The share of truth has gone,
May its root strike—its topmost boughs
Reach the eternal throne.
Pendent from every living branch
The Spirit's fruits are found—
"Love, joy and peace," and righteousness,
There flourish and abound.

War: What is the Christian's Duty?

When brethren differ in their views of a subject, it becomes them to observe the most scrupulous caution in delivering their ideas, "lest any root of bitterness springing up" disturb christian harmony, and blind the judgment of the members of The Body.

We have no disposition to discuss the above question merely for the sake of discussion, and we feel a degree of diffidence in controverting the argument of the venerable Editor of the Examiner, who deserves the love and profound respect of every friend of truth. But in view of "the time of trouble" which we are persuaded is coming on the earth, and that the subject may be surveyed from various stand-points, so that the followers of Christ may be enabled to assume a consistent and harmonious position, we beg permission to throw our mite into the treasury of debate.

1. The spirit of the Gospel is a spirit of peace. The war spirit shrieks, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth;" "Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy." The Gospel answers, "Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also;" "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." "Sink, burn and destroy," says war. The Gospel replies, "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." This spirit of peace is breathed in all the teachings of Christ and his apostles. "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves." "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps: * * who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed his cause to Him that judgeth righteously." Without further remarks on this head, we feel safe in affirming, The spirit of the gospel is a spirit of peace. Truly, "a 'war spirit' is not the spirit of Christianity." How, then, can Christians go to war? Can they do so without having the war spirit? To us it appears impossible.

2. The letter of the Gospel teaches peace. "If possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." We may have neighbors who will not "live peaceably," but their conduct need not prevent us from being peaceful. Both sides must be willing before a fight can take place. We can do "as much as lieth in" us toward peace. If our enemies are obstinate, of course it is not "possible" for us to "live peaceably with all men." But we can "live peaceably with all" who are willing so to do. Murdock's translation of the Syriac reads, "And if possible, so far as it dependeth on you, live in peace with every man." If our enemies are determined not to live in peace, our duty is plain; we must be peaceable, though all the world be at war. "Blessed are the peacemakers." Does this text cohere with the following phrase?—"Fight for peace." Can we make peace by fighting? "Yes," said the United States government in its iniquitous crusade against Mexico, "we are fighting to conquer a peace,"—that is, they would fight until the Mexicans were conquered, and thus make peace. The Napoleonic beast may write "blessed are the peacemakers" on the helmets of his warriors, if the words "fight for peace" are in agreement therewith. "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence." The nations will fight till the end, but they fight for dominion and power in this world. Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and if we account ourselves "children of the kingdom," let us take care that we do not entangle ourselves with "the kingdoms of this world."

We see nothing to uphold war in the incident recorded in Acts 23. Paul called for personal protection, and the case can no more be cited as a recognition of the rightfulness of fighting, than it could be if he had invoked the protection of a civil police. Jesus' command to buy swords (Luke 22 : 36) is appealed to as an argument for war. At the most, the passage cannot be fairly construed to teach any thing more than the use of the sword in personal defence. This sufficiently warrants "police arrangements" as a safeguard against "house-breakers, incendiaries, and midnight assassins," but does not justify war. "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Poor Zwingle must have bitterly felt the truth of these words as he lay stretched beneath the pear tree on the field of Cappel. Says D'Aubigne, "Doubtless had the Saxon reformer (Luther) approached Zwingle in that solemn hour, and said to him those words he so often repeated, 'Christians must combat, not with the sword or arquebus, but with suffering and the cross,'—doubtless, I say, Zwingle would have extended to him his dying hands, and have responded, Amen. * * * Zwingle, at the time of his death, was not yet forty-eight. Did the strength given of God always accompany the strength of mere man, what might not Zwingle have accomplished. * * But he had girt himself with a weapon interdicted by God; he had laid aside his divine for a carnal vocation; the helmet had covered his brow, his hand had grasped the halberd; the patriot had misled the reformer. His most devoted friends, amazed, confounded, exclaimed, 'We know not what to think! A bishop with carnal weapons!' * * * At the moment of concluding this melancholy narrative, we take some stones, and erecting them on the battle field of Cappel, we inscribe on them, on one side, these words of the Psalmist: Some put their trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will trust in the name of the Lord. And on the other side this declaration of the King of the Church: My reign is not of this world. Could a voice issue from the graves of the martyrs of Cappel, these are the words which those noble confessors would address, after a lapse of three centuries, to the christians of our day: The Church has no other King than Jesus Christ; it must not mingle in this world's politics, * * but its march is like that of its King—from the manger to the cross, and from the cross to glory."

3. Fighting is not a part of our duty to rulers. We are commanded to render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's," but we are as strictly ordered to render unto "God the things which are God's." The passages inculcating obedience to governments, in Romans and I Peter, say nothing about war. They teach us to be peaceable, law-abiding citizens, under whatever government we may live. "When you live in Rome, do as the Romans do." We are to "pay tribute" and otherwise obey "the powers that be" in all rightful things, taking care not to resist "the ordinance of God." But "where rulers command to do that which is plainly forbidden of God, we may and ought to suffer, unresistingly, the pains or penalties they may inflict rather than disobey God, whose law is supreme." Now christians are forbidden, by the spirit and letter of the Gospel, to engage in carnal warfare. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal."

It is said, as "the Gospel requires" christians "to pay tribute to government to sustain war," therefore the Gospel "may call them to active service in the war." This proves too much. If the government should get up a grand filibustering expedition, under the dictation of some such hoary criminal as the author of the Ostend manifesto, or should attempt to texas England by taking Canada, and consequently be involved in a bloody war with the mother country, as it was with Mexico, or should contrive any other scheme of plunder, the foregoing argument would make christians fight, because any and every war in which the government is engaged must necessarily be sustained by the tribute of christians as well as others. With regard to the present war, we believe it is the natural result of a long course of unblushing crimes committed by the whole nation against humanity. The portrait of the nation has been fearfully and truthfully drawn by a master hand. "The stripling giant, ill bred and scoffing, shouts amain,—'My feet are red with the Indian's blood; my hand has forged the negro's chain. I am strong; who dares assail me, for I have made my covenant of lies and leagued with hell for my support. There is no Right, no Truth; Christianity is false, and God a name.' His left hand casts his Bible underneath his feet, and in his right he brandishes the negro driver's whip, crying again, 'Say, who is God, and what is Right?'" "Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" saith the Lord.

Thousands of noble men and women have been striving for years to reform the nation, but, alas! it has gone on in its career of crime to the bitter end, and now begins to taste the cup of God's wrath. In a recent number of the Crisis a writer has well said, "Christians have served their country well by laboring incessantly for purity; now let those who have done worse than nothing in this respect, do something, if they can, with the sword. As for us, our duty ends with the 'sword of the Spirit.'" That noble champion of freedom, John G. Whittier, remains true to the teachings of his fathers, and fitly says:—

"They break the links of Union: shall we light
The fires of hell to weld anew the chain
On that red anvil where each blow is pain?"

Theodore Parker's sermon on war, delivered years ago, is especially pertinent at this time. His remarks read almost like a prophecy. We transcribe a few of them. "Now, to make the evils of war still clearer, and to bring them home to your door, let us suppose there was war between the counties of Suffolk, on the one side, and Middlesex on the other; this army at Boston, that at Cambridge. * * The rulers on one side are fools, and traitors on the other. * * Prayers are offered in all the churches, and sermons preached, showing that God is a man of war, and Cain his first saint. The banners are consecrated by solemn words. Your church towers are military posts of observation. * * The battle is fiercely joined. You hear the cannon, the sharp report of musketry. * * The chaplains loiter behind.

'Pious men, whom duty brought,
To dubious verge of battle fought,
To shrive the dying, bless the dead.'

The battle hangs long in even scale. At length it turns. Victory is ours. Ten thousand men of Cambridge lie dead, eight thousand of Boston. There writhe the wounded, torn and mangled, black with powder, red with blood, parched with thirst. Gather them into hasty hospitals, yonder wounded man shall linger out a life of wretched anguish, unspoken and insupportable, and when he dies, his wife religiously will keep the shot which tore his limbs. * * Again 'tis night. Oh, what a night, and after what a day! Yet a pure tide of woman's love—which never ebbs since the world began—flow on in spite of war and battle. Stealthily, by the pale moonlight, a mother of Boston treads the weary miles to reach that bloody spot, a widow she—seeking among the slain her only son. The arm of power drove him forth reluctantly to the fight. * * But, lo! another comes—she, too, a woman—younger and fairer, yet not less bold—a maiden from the hostile town to seek her lover. They meet—two women among the corpses; two angels come to Golgotha, seeking to raise a man. There he lies before them; they look,—yes, 'tis he you seek; the son, the lover. The grass is wet with his blood,—yes, the ground is muddy with the life of man. The mother's innocent robe is drabbled in the blood her bosom bore. Their kisses, groans and tears, recall the wounded man. He knows the mother's voice—that voice yet more beloved. He dies! * * * Let the dead bury their dead. But their blood cries out of the ground against the rulers who shed it. Cain, where are thy brothers? What shall the fool answer? what the traitor say? * * I would call on christians, who believe that christianity is a truth, to lift up their voice, public and private, against the violation of God's law—this blasphemy of the Holy Spirit of Christ—this worst form of infidelity to man and God. Teach your rulers that you are Americans, not slaves—Christians, not heathens—Men, not murderers, to kill for hire!"

4. "The nations are angry, and thy wrath is come." In his article on the "Distress of nations," in the June Examiner, George Storrs nervously exhibits the true state of affairs. "The lulling of the storm, after the battle of Solferino, in 1859, caused many to think 'the cup' of Jehovah's just indignation on the 'nations,' for their wickedness and oppressions, would pass away; and especially did this country expect to escape it. Exalted to heaven with privileges, under the best government on earth, we had grown proud, * * connived at wickedness in Church and State, till our sins, like ancient Israel's, had towered high as heaven, and God might justly say, 'Lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and shall ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth. That sword has come, and our country begins to feel its awful power. * * It truly seems as if this nation's 'great day of judgment' had commenced." We affectionately ask all concerned, if it would not be "monstrous folly" for christians who believe that the sword of God's judgment is coming "upon all the inhabitants of the earth," to throw themselves headlong under its avenging stroke? And let us remember that this is only "the beginning of sorrows." Surely in vain shall we christians attempt to stay the "anarchy" that is coming on the nation "like night," if God is the author of it all. May the Lord help us to understand what He requires of us in these "perilous times."

"Our beloved brother" Storrs, as far back as the month of February, made a short comment upon Isa. 26 : 20, 21, in the Examiner. His concluding observations will form an appropriate finale to this article. We endorse every word. "What we ask of all is, think of those words—ponder them in thy heart—ask thyself, am I seeking security in God—retiring, as far as possible, from all exciting causes which may lead me to occupy a place or position not within the 'chambers' of God's protection? 'Indignation' is certainly to come, and God's people are only safe by taking heed to his direction and counsel. Above all things, then, the higher commotions rise, the more seek to 'hide thyself' in close communion with God in Christ. So shalt thou be safe, not otherwise." Amen and Amen.

For the Crisis.

Interesting Experience.

A LETTER TO HIRAM MUNGER.

(Published by permission of the writer.)

My Dear Brother in Christ:—Being detained from church to-day by indisposition of body, I will endeavor to fulfill my promise to you: so this beautiful Sabbath morning I have retired to my room, and, alone with God and my own thoughts, I take up my pen to converse awhile with one for whom I shall ever entertain feelings of the most heartfelt gratitude and greatest respect. I thank God to-day, my brother, that your steps were ever directed hither, and that I was inclined to listen to your voice, or rather the voice of God as it spoke to me through lips of clay,—that the heart-searching truths of His holy word not only fell upon my ear, but, accompanied by His Spirit, penetrated into the very inmost recesses of my heart, arousing and alarming the sleeping, yea, almost dying energies of my soul; bringing into action those powers which had so long lain dormant within; enabling me to see my danger, to see written, as it were, in burning characters, those awful and impressive words, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," and seeing, to fly, while mercy lingered and God's Spirit strove, to the "strongholds, while yet a prisoner of hope." O! Bro. Munger, had I been as thoughtless, so unwise as to have turned a deaf ear to that voice which spake in tones not to be misunderstood; grieved away that blessed Spirit which was warning and entreating me to return again to the fold from which I had wandered, (unmindful, alas! that I was straying far from home,) I might, like the foolish virgins, have slumbered on until the cry burst upon my ear, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." O, sad would have been my fate, groping my way in the dark midnight, with my lamp gone out, and no oil to replenish it! God being my helper, I will see to it, from this time henceforth, that my lamp shall be "trimmed and burning," with a sufficient supply of oil in my vessel, so that whenever my Master cometh, I may be fully prepared to meet and receive Him.

I suppose you would like to know something of my experience since you left our little village. Well, I will try to inform you, although it may be in an imperfect and broken manner; yet it shall be the true feelings of my heart. You saw, no doubt, with your discerning eye, when I stood before you in Bro. H.'s house, that I trembled beneath a heavy cross. It was most heavy, I can assure you; but I thank God to-day that he gave me strength and courage to take it up, and that I felt almost constrained by an inward prompting to say, "I will go out and talk with Bro. M. upon the great subject which of all others should receive our greatest and most profound attention. Let the world sneer, let brethren and sisters in the church who profess better things reproach, I will go. I will obey God in this respect, for I believe that it was none other than his Spirit which impressed me so deeply that this was a duty which I ought to perform." I went, and the result was, God blessed me in its performance. I had always been taught to believe that the Adventists were a low, weak-minded set of people, perverters of the Scriptures, enemies of the churches, and so forth, so you will not wonder that my proud heart rebelled at the thought of going out to talk with an Advent preacher. God saw in his infinite wisdom that my pride must be humbled before my heart could be prepared for the reception of the truth, and this was to be the first stroke of His mighty hand. Bro. M., I went back to the mill humbled before God. I sat down to my work, and I can assure you I felt very small just then. I felt that of all God's creatures I was the least, and the most unworthy. Even there my heart went out to Him in prayer. He heard the silent breathings of my repentant heart. He answered, and there came a sweet and heavenly calm upon my tempest-tossed soul; a gentle voice whispered "Peace, be still,"—and with the poet I could say,

"My God is reconciled,
His pard'ning voice I hear."

Yes, I felt that "Jesus wept and loved me still." O, how easy it was for me to decide the great question within, which had so long been undecided, and make the happy choice, to serve the Lord and follow in the way that his Spirit should lead me. I said, and it came from the very depths of my heart, "Lord, I will be thine forever. I will renounce the world, with all its pomp and glory. I will study thy word, for that is truth, and it shall be as a "lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path," illuminating the narrow way which leadeth unto life.

The first meeting I attended after you left us, was our Methodist "prayer and conference" meeting. As it was while among them I had stepped aside and fallen asleep by the way, I thought that there I must confess my wanderings, and tell them my desires and determinations, which I did to the astonishment of all present. I told them with tears that I was sorry I had been so cold and indifferent in the cause which I had professed to love and honor, and humbly asked their forgiveness; told them that I was resolved for the future to live a consistent christian life, search God's unerring word, be guided by its precepts, and led by the Spirit. This testimony produced quite a sensation; they praised God aloud that that voice which had so long been silent, was again heard, bearing witness to the truth—the harp, so long unstrung, was once more attuned to the praise of the Redeemer. The meeting seemed to take a new impetus; two old Congregationalist ladies, who had lived in the village about twenty years, and attended Methodist meetings, but had never been known to speak of the hope which was within them, arose that evening, and, with unloosed tongues, spake forth the praises of God. Bro. M. came and took me by the hand, and said he, (to use his own expression,) "O, Sarah, you don't know how my heart jumped to-night when I heard your voice; it jumped as it has not for months before; now let us look up, expecting great things." What think you, Bro. Munger, was the answer which came to my mind, and trembled on my lips for utterance, but was repressed? It was this: "I cannot look up, but I am looking forward but a little way, to the fulfillment of 'great and precious promises.'" Methinks I see you look reprovingly and say, "You should have followed that impression." Perhaps I should, but I feared that it would cause a shadow of uneasiness to fall upon Bro. M.'s happy frame of mind. I loved them all, and I felt that they all loved me, and I almost came to the conclusion (everything being so disharmonious with my own feelings,) that your predictions would fail respecting the manner in which I should be treated if I professed to believe the great truths of the Bible—for they are truths, and I believe them with all my heart. But I must hasten.

The next meeting I attended was the Advent prayer meeting. There, too, I told my desires and determinations. They likewise rejoiced with me, and we had a good time waiting upon the Most High. I hardly know why, but I felt more freedom there than among my own people. The next Methodist meeting found me there again, ready to stand as a witness for my Savior. I was very careful, and always have been, not to say anything which I thought would conflict with their particular views, although, brother, think not that I would be guilty of saying anything to please man that I did not believe. No, I would scorn to tell a lie, or even resort to subterfuge; but I will confess to you that I have sometimes suppressed thoughts, which I felt impressed to speak, for fear of displeasing, and calling down the anathemas of the church upon my head. At this meeting, Bro. M., and some of the most influential members, (having heard that I had attended the Advent meetings, and fearing that there was almost too much of an attraction there for my good and their interest,) thought it their duty, no doubt, to throw out a few gentle hints about the propriety of those who had just come up on higher ground "keeping in the old paths." They hoped that none of their brethren or sisters would in any way uphold or encourage the promulgation of such false and erroneous sentiments as had been advanced of late among them, which they feared would have such a pernicious effect upon the ungodly, but trusted they would see the necessity of "walking in the Lord Jesus as they had received Him," and not be "driven about by every wind of doctrine." I knew very well for whom these remarks were intended. They thought, I suppose, that an "ounce of preventive was worth a pound of cure" in this case, and they would commence in season, and give me a little mild medicine, mixed with a little sugar, so as to make it palatable, and just enough of the sickening properties in it to make me disgusted with the sentiments which they feared I might imbibe. They were afraid to give me a very powerful dose, for they knew that I was weak and could not bear it. Yes, "weaker than a bruised reed" I was, yet in my weakness I felt strong in God, for I loved Him and every creature which he had made. He had enlarged my heart and opened wide its doors, and my own church was altogether too small to contain it, it could not stay within its "pales," but all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ were encircled in its wide embrace. Yes, with my blessed Master I could say, "He that doeth the will of my Father in Heaven, the same is my mother, and sister, and and brother." Wherever I beheld the image of my Savior, I could reach forth to them the hand of christian fellowship.

But to go on. This medicine did not seem to have the desired effect, for the next Advent meeting found me among that little unpopular and persecuted band. Ah! I loved them, and felt that God loved them; how could I stay away? The next Methodist meeting found me at my post again. This time the potion was more bitter, less of the sweet mixed with it; they touched a tender spot within when they reproached and slandered those I loved; but I said, Lord, give me "charity that suffereth long and is kind," and "thinketh no evil." They think, no doubt, that they are doing God service, and myself a great kindness, in thus endeavoring to restrain my feet from ignorantly following after a deceived and deceiving people; but, strange to say, I refrained not from following them. At the third meeting I attended among my own brethren and sisters in the church, a cup was held to my lips that was like the "wormwood and the gall." I drank it to the very dregs, and my soul sickened, and my spirit groaned within me. Stinging words fell upon my ear that burned deep into my heart; yea, I felt the wound in every fibre of my soul. I left the place neither strengthened or refreshed. While my hungry soul craved the "sincere milk of the word," that it might grow in every christian virtue, they gave that which was like the "husks which the swine did eat;" there was no nourishment in it. They called the Advent people everything which was low and despicable; Antichrists, Atheists, modern Sadducees, with desires and tastes that were sensual, low and grovelling, who thought only of eating and drinking, building houses, planting vineyards, and raising up families in the kingdom of God, with a faith that only reached a few feet below the turf! But enough of this sickening detail. I could not but ask myself the question, Is this Religion, pure and undefiled? O, that that voice which spake to Saul of Tarsus by the way, might be heard by them, saying, "Why persecutest thou me?" and may they realize that insinuate as they do it into their [illegible] brethren, they do it unto [illegible].

Think not, my brother, that my motive in laying these things before you is to show up, or publish abroad the faults of my brethren; for be it from this. "Tell it not in Gath." I have not [illegible] of ever spoken of them here; but I felt that you had stood just where I now stand, (although you occupied, no doubt, a much higher position there,) and could sympathize with me as one who has experienced. [illegible] God knows I bear no ill will towards the church of my early choice. "With all her faults I love her still." Clustering around it are many sweet associations and fond memories of the past. It was there in earlier years I first heard the story of the cross,—there, when crushed beneath the weight of sin, I was pointed to the Lamb of God,—there I first trembled under the cross, and with lisping tongue witnessed for the truth,—there, in my youth and inexperience, she welcomed me to her bosom, and threw around me her protecting arms,—there I have often knelt at her altar and commemorated the death and sufferings of a crucified but risen Lord with a dear mother and sister who now "sleep in Jesus" and a father and an only remaining sister whose names with mine still stand upon the record. The church is not to-day what it was at that period. She has increased in wealth and numbers, yea, and popularity too, but she has decreased in vital piety.

Sometimes, Bro. M., I hardly know which way to turn, or how to move. The Advent brethren and sisters, some of them, feel very anxious that I should come out openly and take sides with them, and confess freely my opinions respecting "the truth as it is in Jesus." They know my sympathies are with them, and as they are few and feeble in number, I can hardly blame them for feeling a little impatient at my hesitation. God knows that if I were not bound by church laws, there would be home—but I fear to step, lest it should prove a mis-step. Sometimes I am at a loss to know what duty is. Do you think it would be the wisest and the best way for me, in a Methodist meeting, to advance ideas which I know they will not believe or sanction, however sincere I may be in uttering them? You will see at once that it would cause unpleasant feelings, and no doubt call forth a harsh rejoinder; the harmony of the meeting would be disturbed; I should feel injured, and on the whole the meeting would prove an unprofitable one. This is the way I reason upon the subject. There is enough that I can say, and say it from the heart, which will be agreeable to their feelings, and in harmony with the word of God. Do you not think this would be the right course to pursue while I remain with them? And if it is for God's glory, my own eternal welfare, and the welfare of those around me, that my connection with the church be severed, do you not think that God will, in His providence, in some way open a door, so that I may quietly withdraw without disturbance or confusion? But if it should not be His will, (and I would know His will in all things and cheerfully obey,) I trust that the way may be hedged up.

One great reason why I do not feel at present like coming out openly, and acquiring my principles, is this; I feel too weak and ignorant to argue with opposers; and should I profess to believe the Advent doctrine, there would be no end to the questions which would be asked by unbelievers, difficult passages of scripture would be handed me, and I should be expected, of course, to answer them. [illegible] but I could not, and therefore it would greatly annoy and disturb my peace. When I am thoroughly instructed in the great truths which you preach, "grounded and settled," so that I can "give to every one that asketh a reasonable answer for the hope within me with meekness and fear," then, to use Bro. H.'s expression, I am ready to come out "square-toed." I have received more light upon the Scriptures since you came among us than I ever did before in all my life. The Bible has always been to me as a sealed book, a great part of it being full of dark and incomprehensible sayings, and problems which I could not solve. But I thank God to-day that the glorious truths of his word are being unfolded to my benighted mind. When I take up my Bible to study its teachings, my prayer is, Shine, O Lord, upon the sacred page, and dispel every cloud that [illegible] round thy word; teach me thyself, [illegible] who hast taught me [illegible] in thy blessed school [illegible] through studies.

But I must bring [illegible] thoughts to a close, although I [illegible] half done talking. If [illegible] entirely exhausted [illegible] write again, if [illegible] As this is [illegible] [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Minutes of the 12th R. I. Quarterly Conference.

Foster, June 26th, 1861.—Conference met according to adjournment. Moderator in the chair. Opened by prayer by Bro. Huntington. Minutes of the last Conference called for and read. Motion made that they be accepted. Passed. Delegates were called upon to report the condition of the churches to which they belong. Bro. J. D. Brown reported from Providence church. Had no very encouraging or discouraging report to make. The church has been very unsettled. Had been hard work to pay the rent for the hall in which they worship. Some had thought it best to give up having meetings in N. Market Hall. If they could not hire a hall cheaper elsewhere, discontinue their meetings altogether. At last they raised a subscription of $125,00 and offered it to the owners for the use of the hall. It was accepted, and they will continue their worship at the same place. Conference meetings not very interesting, for two reasons: first, because there were few who attended them; and second, the hall was very large for the number who assembled for prayer meetings, and they dispersed, some in one part of the room and some in another, and the meetings seemed to lack fervency and life. Some conference meetings at private houses very encouraging. Did not intend to give up. Some of their members were more theoretical than sympathetic. The Mission S. School is still progressing. It is a pleasant school. The children who have been prepared by Sr. Hastings, and other children came into the school, with their eyes sparkling with joy, and their faces glowing with smiles of delight, and such scenes are well calculated to enkindle the fervency of christian love in the heart of every devoted child of God.

Bro. Babcock reported from River Point church. The meetings part of the time were quite spiritual. The conference meetings seemed to be attended by the Spirit of God. Two had been baptized. Do not have preaching but twice a month. Have a very interesting S. School, numbering at present eighty-five. It is increasing in numbers. Probably be one hundred before the close of the present year.

Bro. Cary reported from the Chestnut Hill, Ct., church. They were few in number. Prayer meetings spiritual. Were more practical than theoretical. When we do not have preaching meetings on the Sabbath, we have conference meetings. The conference meetings are thinly attended, but quite a large number come out to hear preaching. We are trusting in the Lord for the addition of such to the church as shall be saved.

The Clerk reported from Foster church. Conference meetings generally interesting. Preaching every Sabbath. Some are often discouraged through trial, and need the prayers of the faithful to strengthen them. Some are waiting to go forward in baptism. There are some good substantial christians who are always willing and ready to work.

Bro. Carpenter did not arrive until Friday, when he gave a report of the Danielsonville church. He had been detained from the Conference, having been called upon to attend the funeral of a friend. Had no very discouraging report to make, nor anything very encouraging. Conference meetings were blessed by the Lord. Enjoyed himself much in the administration of the Word. The congregation is not as large as before the present political agitation. He thought there was wheat there that would be gathered into the Lord's garner when the chaff was burnt up with unquenchable fire.

Bro. Rodman (moderator) said he lived at Rocky Brook. He attended the conference meetings at that place. Some had the war spirit. It was killing the religious interest. The spirit of war and the spirit of Christ cannot long dwell together. He thought they would not long be in darkness. They begin to feel for the pillars of strength. Had been to Westerly. Found them in the service of the Lord. He very much enjoyed being with this band of christians. Had been to Carolina Mills. Some good and substantial christians there. Went occasionally to Lafayette. A hard place; was worse now than it ever had been. There are some there who are still trusting in the Lord.

Bro. Huntington said that the church in Abington, Ct., had passed through many severe trials, and he wished to say something to encourage churches which are now passing through trying circumstances. Those who belong to the church in Abington are mostly those who embraced the Advent doctrine in 1842–3, and since had had many different and false doctrines to divide them. After the time passed in 1843, many were led into the belief of the "shut door." After that excitement somewhat subsided, about one quarter joined the Quakers and went to Enfield, but afterwards was glad to come back. Afterward about one half went to keeping the Seventh Sabbath. Did not quarrel with them for worshiping Saturday while they worshiped Sunday. They are now well united, and all worship on the first day of the week. Some come ten, or twelve miles to meeting, and those who come the farthest generally get the greatest blessings. There is good attention generally to preaching. [illegible]

[illegible] member of this Conference. Moved and carried. He said his church was in South Kingston. They were composed of several different classes. One class you always know where to find. They keep on a level; they strive together. Another class have feasts and fasts. Have an excitement and then a dearth. Another class have to be held up by the prayers of others, and they will sometimes fail then. His church was still identified with the Freewill Baptist denomination, but he was not discouraged. He did not know the definition of that word experimentally. A majority of the more intelligent are adherent in faith to Advent doctrine. The Freewill Baptist Quarterly Conference had requested the church to take a portion either for or against the doctrines advocated by its Pastor. Bro Huntington requested to join the Conference. Moved and carried. It was proposed by several of the brethren that some time should be used in discussion. After some talk about a question, the following, offered by Bro J. D. Brown, was accepted: "Do the Scriptures teach the return of the literal seed of Abraham to the land of Palestine?" Moved and carried. The proposition, however, was not discussed. Adjourned until Thursday morning.

Thursday morning, 10 o'clock. Prayer by Bro. Huntington. Eld. D. O. Hopkins was received by vote as a member of the Conference. Having no other business the Conference adjourned until Friday morning.

Friday Morning, 10 o'clock.—Prayer by Bro. Bellows. Letter received and read from the Exeter church. Filed. Bro. Babcock had disposed of tracts to individuals without the consent of the Conference. Bro. A. Durfee made motion:—"The disposition of tracts made by Bro. Babcock is approved by this Conference." Passed. Remarks were made by several brethren on the method to be pursued in disposing of tracts. The tracts were finally divided among the ministers, according as they thought tracts were needed in the different places where they were traveling, as nearly equal as practicable. Many interesting remarks were made on denying ourselves and giving the proceeds to the tract fund.

Motion was made that the Clerks have the amendment to Article 7th of the Constitution republished in the Crisis, and request the clerks of the different churches to attach it to said Article in the printed Constitution furnished them by Bro. Babcock. Will the Clerks of the different churches remember this? The amendment to Article 17th is as follows: "And there shall be a collection taken up at each Quarterly Conference for this object. The Treasurer shall expend these contributions in tracts, and distribute them at each quarterly meeting to preachers, or any others, as the Conference shall direct."

The Conference was one of great interest to the lovers of truth in its section, and we hope prolific of much good to all those who attended. The conference meetings were unusually interesting and cheering. Much good, we trust, will be shown in the day of retribution was the result of this gathering together of the people. The following ministers preached the Word: Eld. H. L. Hastings, from John 19th chapter, relating the "story of the cross." Eld. Thomas Huntington, of Abington, Ct., from Jude 9th. Eld. J. D. Brown, (the Clerk not being present, does not know the text.) Eld. G. Champlain, Ps. 1: 3. Eld. A. Durfee, John 6: 33 and 14: 1, 2, 3. Bro. Ross, from Titus 2: 11, 12.

The Conference was fully attended. Much interest prevailed, and we earnestly pray the God of the harvest that sheaves may be gathered whose honest resolutions to serve Him began at this Conference.

M. R. Phetteplace, Clerk.

For the Crisis.

Am I a Christian?

It seems to me there is some importance connected with this question. Can the reader answer it in the affirmative? Would it not be well, before you thus answer it, to pause and enquire what constitutes a christian? Is it a fact that all who are denominated christians, are such—to be entitled to the name of Christians? Must we not be followers of Christ? If we would be followers of Christ, must we not believe what Christ taught, and practice the precepts that he has given? In short, must not our faith and practice be in harmony with his teachings? One thing is evident—that Christ did not teach all the notions that are extant in the world at present. If his word is truth, all the teachings of professed christians can not be, for they are contradictory. How much can we come short of being christians and be saved? Can we at all after knowing what a christian is? Reader, as you value eternal life, trace these thoughts to their legitimate conclusions, and then search for the truth and act accordingly. A. G. H.

Errata.

In my article on the Tremont Grove meeting I notice several errors in printing—only one of which is of much consequence, viz., "The writer was happy in leading ten souls down into the water," etc., it should read "two souls." "Some came 20 miles" should read "30." "The best time was in store," should read "the best wine." Only the first is worth correcting. [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 24, 1861.

No Paper Next Week.

There will be no paper issued by us next week, but the Crisis for August 7th may be looked for at the regular time. Preparatory to the meeting of the Christian Publication Society, on the 31st inst., the accounts and business matters of the office will require the entire attention of Bro. Cotton and the editor (who is also Business Agent) which would render it impossible for either of us to discharge the duties belonging to our respective departments when the paper is published. This fact, together with considerations which may be more fully set forth in our next number, makes it desirable that we should omit the publication of the paper next week.

Meeting of the Board.

There will be a meeting of The Christian Publication Society, at this office, on Wednesday, the 31st inst., at 10 o'clock A. M. A full attendance of the Board of Directors is desired. Bro. Grant and Bro. Hemenway will please observe this notice, and endeavor to be here without fail. Bro. G., we presume, will return to Boston this week. We wrote Bro. H. at Clinton, on the 19th, and now (22d) write him again at Vernon, Vt.

To our Subscribers.

The interests of the Crisis are affected by the "hard times" to an extent that our patrons are not aware, since we have thus far refrained from calling their attention to the matter. In our next issue we shall probably have something tangible to lay before them on the subject. Meanwhile, we would request all who can do so to remit us what is due on subscriptions. Our weekly receipts do not meet our expenses.

To our friends in the West, who complain that they find it difficult to procure suitable funds to send East, we would say, send us postage stamps or gold. We shall be glad to receive either.

Rest Awhile, Brethren.

In addition to the matter which appears in this number, we have on hand at the time we write (Saturday, 20th) eighteen articles on the question of bearing arms. Two of these maintain the lawfulness of war under some circumstances, while sixteen of them are against that view. Now we are sure that before all these articles are published in the Crisis, "the Prince of peace" will have commenced his glorious reign upon the earth, and we would suggest that it can hardly be serviceable to the cause of truth to send us any more matter on this subject for the present. Being so well supplied, our stock will hold out for some time. Rest awhile, would be our suggestion to such of our friends as feel moved to give their views on the question. And to those whose contributions are included in the unpublished eighteen articles, we must say, be patient. Even if it were desirable to publish all your articles, (which we know it is not,) we cannot serve you all at once. The capacity of our paper is limited, and we must seek to restrict this discussion within reasonable space.

The "meat in due season" which "the flock of God" require should not be all of one kind, and we know our brethren and sisters desire us to give them variety. This we shall endeavor to do, and we solicit the co-operation of those who will not be grieved if we do not publish what they send us—those who, in writing for the Crisis, are animated by a desire to do good and please the Lord, and who have confidence in us that, however frequently we may err in judgment, we will not suffer unworthy considerations to control us in withholding their contributions from our readers. We are not unconscious of the fact that our position gives us constant opportunities to do injustice to those whom we were placed here to serve, at the same time we know that our desire is to be kind and impartial to all. Our position has—with many pleasant features—peculiar trials. These we will bear patiently, with the Lord's help. Our brethren, too, have their trials—yes, their peculiar trials; we understand this, and want to do our part in helping them to bear their burdens. Let us all seek to be more fully imbued with the spirit of Christ—to live more completely under the dominion of the law of love—to possess in our inward life, and exhibit in our outward life, in growing perfection, the graces of the Holy Spirit.

We return from this digression to the subject upon which we began, to say that one of our preaching brethren, in a letter on the war question which has not yet been published, falls into an error which he will be glad to have us correct. Referring to what has appeared in the Crisis, he says:—"I see that most of the writers (although not convinced which side of the question they should occupy) come out on the side of war and justify the use of carnal weapons by the disciples of Jesus in this hour of peril!" The facts are just the other way. Look at them:— [illegible]

In our paper for May 15th, Bro. Bruce wrote against fighting; May 22d, Bro. Grew did the same; May 29th, Br'n. Carpenter and Morgan did the same; June 5th, Bro. Hastings did the same; June 12th, Bro. Alling did the same; June 26th, Brn. Bellows and Carpenter did the same, while we took occasion to say that our convictions on the subject were unsettled; July 10th, Bro. Rogers wrote against fighting; July 17th, Bro. Hastings wrote again against fighting, in this number, Br'n. Porter and Curry write against fighting.

The other side of the account stands thus: June 5th, we gave the article from the Examiner; June 19th, Bro. Hudson gave his views; July 3d, Bro. White published his "Thoughts on Government;" July 10th, Bro. Andrews expressed his belief that the Federal Government should be sustained; July 17th, Bro. Campbell wrote in defence of "war," and we gave an extract from Mr. Duffield on the same side; in this number, Bro. White gives "Thoughts on Government," in reply to Bro. Porter. Thus it appears that out of nineteen articles referring to this question, twelve have been against "bearing arms."

P. S.—Since the above was in type, we observe that we omitted to classify the article in the paper of July 10th, entitled "a wise answer," by Bro. W. Pratt. We will add, likewise, that since our article above was written we have received four more communications against fighting: one of them contains eighteen foolscap pages, and the writer's name, should we give it, would assure our readers that the subject is discussed with ability. Again we pray you, brethren, to rest your pens on this subject for a few months.

"Interesting Experience."—We have given this heading to the letter on our first page, addressed to Bro. Munger. It for the most part explains itself, but we will add that since its date our sister has withdrawn from the M. E. Church and identified herself with the Advent believers in the place of her residence. She consents with some reluctance to the publication of the letter, as it was written only for the eye of Bro. M., but numbers who have read it wished Bro. M. to give it publicity through the Crisis. We trust it will do good.

We recently asked for the full name of our correspondent "Sarah," her late article in our paper—"Thoughts on the coming of Christ"—inducing us to believe that her light, as a writer, should not be hid under a bushel. We now have her full name, and think those who read her letter to Bro. Munger will want to hear from her again. The letter is rather long, but we deemed it best to give it entire.

Questions.

1. Will some brother inform me where the phrases "mortal spirit" and "immortal spirit" are found in the Bible? I cannot find them. There was a Christian minister here, who, in attempting to prove the immortality of the soul, said that mortal soul and immortal soul could not be found in the Bible, but the phrase mortal spirit and immortal spirit could both be found in the Bible. I should like to know where.

2. I wish to call attention to Acts 7: 59. "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Who said "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit"—Stephen, or the men that stoned him? I think it was the men that stoned him, as it reads "they." But a great many think it was Stephen. S.

Answer.

1. The Bible nowhere contains the expression "mortal spirit" or "immortal spirit."

2. Greek scholars will inform E that the grammatical construction of Acts 7: 59, in the original, makes it certain that it was Stephen who said—"Lord Jesus receive my spirit."

Hudson's New Tract.—Bro. James Douglas and Bro. Edward Morse each send us $1. We want $13 more. Shall it be raised before we issue our next paper?

Errata.—In S. S. Gordon's "Inquiries," in No. 18, instead of "Psa. 110: 27," read Psa. 110: 2, 7. Instead of "from the 10th to the 24th verses of the 21st chapter of Jer.," read Jer. 51: 19–23.

☞ Your particular attention is called to the fact that at our Wilbraham Camp Meeting last fall, it was voted to purchase, of Bro.'s Munger and Ladd, the cooking apparatus, crockery and boarding utensils. To effect this, it was thought best to raise a fund, and hence a subscription list was opened, and many of the friends subscribed toward this object. Some of the subscribers paid their pledges, but the most of what was subscribed is still unpaid. Our object at this time is to call attention to this matter, and earnestly request the brethren and sisters to send their subscriptions immediately to Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., so that there may be nothing lacking which will contribute to the comfort and convenience of those who shall go up to our [illegible]

For the Crisis.

"Thoughts on Government."

In the Crisis of July 3d I have an article under this head, to which J. Porter has replied in this paper. It will be seen that he has put the Church of Rome on a level with the Government of the United States of America. He says, "National churches may have a right to be, though they may not in all respects be perfect. If this be true, then it may be right that the Church of Rome ought to be."

J. P. assumes what is not true, therefore all his thoughts on government as applied to me have no force. I deny that a National church ought to be, and hence deny that the church of Rome ought to be. In my article I did assume that government ought to be, though it might not be perfect; and on this assumption I said that the government of these States might have a right to be. Now if J. P. will say that I assumed what is not true, then I will admit that all I said on that assumption amounts to nothing with him, and if he will prove my premises false, then my deductions have no force in any direction. If J. P. will deny that the government of the United States ought to exist, I will notice his denial in due time, or, if he will deny that government ought to exist, though it should be imperfect.

I supposed it was admitted that government ought to be, and that this government ought to be, though it is not perfect. If this be denied, it alters the case, but if it be admitted, then what I said follows of necessity. Now, either deny the premises, or show that the deductions do not follow, for they stand or fall together. If, then, this government ought to be, it ought to be sustained, and if it cannot be sustained without bearing arms, then those who sustain it ought to bear arms. This is self-evident. And if christians ought not to bear arms, it certainly follows that christians ought not to belong to the government, and if Abraham Lincoln be a christian, he ought to secede from the government, and all other christians in it ought at once to secede, and as fast as any now in it may become christians, they should leave it. If the government ought to be sustained, and christians ought not to sustain it, it then follows that wicked men ought to sustain it, and of course they ought to bear arms, and if so, then it is right for them to bear arms, unless it is wrong for them to do what they ought to do. It would then follow that it is right for a wicked man to do what is wrong for a good man to do. If, moreover, this government should be sustained, and good men should not sustain it, it then follows that wicked men ought to be, for if they should all become christians, then the government would be broken up.

A government may be reformed, that is made better. So this government might abolish slavery, and still be this government. Some of the States now free were at one time slave States, so other States might become free, and still the government would stand. But if you remove from the government that which is essential to its existence, you destroy it. If, then, bearing arms is essential to this government, then what I have said is true, all side issues and unparallelled cases to the contrary notwithstanding.

Again, if wickedness qualifies a man for a certain relation, and goodness disqualifies him, then the more wicked a man is, the better he is qualified for the relation; and the more goodness the man has, the less he is qualified for it. So that, if this government ought to be sustained, and good men should not sustain it, because they are good, it follows that wicked men should sustain it, and because they are wicked, and it would then follow, that the more wicked a man is, the better he is qualified to sustain that which should be sustained, and, on the other hand, the better the man is, the less he is qualified to sustain a government that ought to be sustained. Either show that my premises are not true, or else show that the deductions do not logically follow the premises.

We are commanded to pray for rulers—hence we are required to pray for Abraham Lincoln; and it must surely be right to pray that he may become a christian. But if he should become one, he ought to cease being President, and so we should pray that he might become unqualified for his office, and then go home, and leave his place to be filled by some one qualified, namely, a wicked man. And then, should we continue to pray for rulers and all the succeeding candidates for the Presidency should become good men before they should take their seat, we should be praying for that which would deprive the government of a President. This would be true of all the other officers of the government; and so, if prayer should be answered in behalf of them all, the government would cease to be, for it would have no legislative nor executive department. So then, as fast as they are appointed to office, we should pray that they may become unfit for office, by becoming christians, and so secede from a government that ought to be maintained.

The conclusion is, that though this government ought to be sustained, it ought not to have an honest christian President, neither ought it to have a christian officer in any department of it. I ought, then, [illegible] men, or [illegible] not quite honest enough to be christians—for this government which ought to be, ought not to be strictly a christian government. J. S. W.

From Bro. Carpenter.

[Our editorial strictures upon Bro. C.'s "Why Fight?" article elicited from him a long response, from which we give extracts below. We prefix numbers to the paragraphs.—Ed. Crisis.]

1. We feel called upon to say a few words, as Bro. W. seems on one or two points to misapprehend us, and also in two or three instances to wrest our expressions from their true connection and our illustrations from the points which they were intended to sustain. Under section 4 he gives his readers the impression that I in my article maintain that men "ought to know better" than to set armed policemen to guard our cities. Reference to my article will testify that I make no such intimation in regard to policemen. In section 1 of my article I do intimate that there are men advising Christians to engage in this war that "ought to know better." I think so now.

2. Under section 2, Bro. W., referring to my allusion to Ahab and Jehosaphat in the Ramoth Gilead affair, says—"Bro. C. seems to present these two monarchs of a former dispensation to illustrate the guilt which in his view christians inevitably incur, under all circumstances, by bearing arms." Here is evidently a misapprehension. I was not arguing the question whether the Christian could under any circumstances use "carnal weapons" or not, (though I have yet to learn that it is his duty or privilege to do so,) but I was speaking in my first and second articles, and at this point especially, about the present struggle, and I used that item of sacred history to illustrate the position of Christians now as by a figure.

3. I was not aware of favoring the idea even of "watchmen" to guard our (christians') dwellings. What a Christian might do is not what he had better do, necessarily. I referred to Elijah and Elisha and to the Wesley's as examples to illustrate how God can and has and will deliver his children from danger without the protection of "armed police." What if Elijah did slay four hundred of Baal's prophets with the sword, did he do it for his own safety? What if Elisha did say "shoot"; did he command it for self defence? Bro. W. evidently lost sight of the point under consideration, and which they were adduced to illustrate and prove. The question is, were they not safe when attacked by foes, even without any visible defence, at the time alluded to? If so, the point remains good. So also in regard to the Wesleys: what if they did not scruple to complain of rioters or appeal to magistrates; were they not often miraculously delivered from danger as to their persons without "armed" force, as I said? If so, then they illustrate my point. The point is not what their sentiments were concerning war or military protection merely, but did they need a "police force" to keep them safely?

4. Under section 5, Bro. W. thinks that I force an idea from the Examiner that was not there. Does not the article from the Examiner convey the idea that Paul's request could not be complied with without resorting to military force? If it does not, I confess I'm mistaken.

5. Paul was mobbed at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, at Phillippi, at Thessalonica, at Corinth and at Ephesus; and yet, in face of all these "facts," Bro. W. seems to question whether Paul ever was in many mobs before this (mob) at Jerusalem. Perhaps he misapprehended my meaning; I think he must [*]

6. Bro. W.'s criticisms in section 7 I consider but a play upon words. He says the Gospel no where requires us to be "lamb-like." What can he mean? If he means we no where find that precise expression, I reply we no where find the precise term "Christ-like"—yet ye says we must be "Christ-like." He admits also that Christ was "lamb-like." If Christ is lamb-like, and we like Christ, how can we be any thing less than "lamb-like?" Christ is said to be the head—we members of his body. If the head is lamb-like, ought not the body to correspond? Did not Jesus say, "I send you forth as lambs among wolves"? If he means by "lamb-like" "unanswering silence," then I agree with him we are not to be so. Christ was not so. He opened his mouth in the judgment hall, yet of him it was said, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before his shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth." If Christ could fulfill this prophecy, and yet answer his foes, so Paul could be like him and answer for himself.

7. I repeated with emphasis the "higher law" doctrine not because I would make a point against the Examiner, but for the sake of others that I had in my mind. After setting it forth, I might have said, "in this we perfectly agree," but I supposed every one could see that without being reminded of it. I did then come to the real issue, which is, does the "higher law" prohibit us from fighting in the present conflict? [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Inquiries.

Is Christ ever called Michael in the Bible, and if so where? Is not the Michael of Dan. 12: 1, identical with the Persian chief, prince of Dan. 10: 13, 21? Daniel says: "one of the chief princes;" thus the nature of the language signifies that there were several princes of the same order. If such is the fact, Christ could not have been the Michael in question.

Again, is not the time of trouble in Dan. 12: 1, synonymous with that of Luke 21: 20; 20, 21; Jer. 30: 7; Matt. 24: 21? If it is, has not the prophecy found its fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem?

But does the awakening of the sleepers of the 2d verse synchronize with the preceding trouble? If so, has Dan. 12: 2, any relation to the general resurrection of the dead? G. G. C.

I would like an explanation, through the Crisis, of Job. 7: 9, 10. "As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more." Also on Matt. 8: 12, "But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." What children and what kingdom are spoken of? Again, in Rev. 20: 10, "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."

A Seeker after Truth.

For the Crisis.

From Eld. D. Bosworth.

Bro. Wendell:—In my letter in the last Crisis, for eighteen years read eighteen hundred years.

In reference to any strictures upon those who deny or ignore the glorious doctrine of the resurrection, I have no complaint to make. And with Bro. Wendell's permission, I would also remark that, as an ambassador of Christ, my speech and my preaching has always rebuked the idea of glorification this side the resurrection, although the way he puts the case in his No. 1 might lead those unacquainted to suppose he considered me vulnerable on that point. In his No. 2 he suggests, "That the cardinal feature of modern Spiritualism has its root and foundation in the immortal soul theory." The word mortal or immortal, as applied to the soul, is unscriptural, and I do not use them. But the inference our Bro. would draw from the statement, would lie with equal weight against such as myself, and those who hold the more objectionable features of the theory. But to my mind, if the statement is true—which I do not admit—it amounts to nothing. Is the doctrine of the Incarnation any the less true, or any the less dear to the christian, because Satan has counterfeited it? Is the hope of being among the blood-washed company that shall constitute the Bride, the Lamb's wife, any the less cheering to the christian, because a harlot claims the same endearing relation? Does it not cheer the way-worn and weary to feel that angels of light minister around their pathway, notwithstanding Satan sometimes transforms himself into that character? So may it not be possible that God has so created man as to make a distinction between him and the beasts of the field—in regard to his mental powers—although Satan might take advantage of that difference, to lead wicked men to become necromancers and wizards? Let not my brother say—because he is in the editorial chair and can say the last word—that the word mortal, as applied to the soul, is implied in scripture. I might be tempted to say, that this doctrine of implication is sometimes carried to too great lengths. For if not immortality, I should understand the prohibition against dealing with the dead, to imply something different from blank annihilation, or utter unconsciousness. I think, on reflection, my brother will see that the position he assumes in reference to the "immortal soul theory," even if true, amounts to nothing. But admitting the argument to be good for anything, it would overturn our faith, and destroy the foundation of Christianity itself. And—"If the foundations be destroyed, what will the righteous do?" D. Bosworth.

For the Crisis.

Letter from C. W. Smith.

Bro. Wendell:—As my heart is refreshed week after week by the cheering epistles contained in the Crisis, I feel that it would be a privilege to communicate something, if possible, which would prove a like blessing to others. All who love the Lord, and are looking for his soon return, according to the Scriptures, are truly members of one family; and may God hasten the time when we shall all be gathered together in one. Then we who are acquainted with each other only by "pen and ink," shall see each other face to face, and satisfy our longing desires by an acquaintance that shall never end.

With many of the readers of the Crisis I am acquainted. Dearly beloved, let me exhort you to be "stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." The

For the Crisis.

Minutes of the 12th R. I. Quarterly Conference.

Foster, June 26th, 1861.—Conference met according to adjournment. Moderator in the chair. Opened by prayer by Bro. Huntington. Minutes of the last Conference called for and read. Motion made that they be accepted. Passed. Delegates were called upon to report the condition of the churches to which they belong. Bro. J. D. Brown reported from Providence church. Had no very encouraging or discouraging report to make. The church has been very unsettled. Had been hard work to pay the rent for the hall in which they worship. Some had thought it best to give up having meetings in N. Market Hall. If they could not hire a hall cheaper elsewhere, discontinue their meetings altogether. At last they raised a subscription of $125,00 and offered it to the owners for the use of the hall. It was accepted, and they will continue their worship at the same place. Conference meetings not very interesting, for two reasons: first, because there were few who attended them; and second, the hall was very large for the number who assembled for prayer meetings, and they dispersed, some in one part of the room and some in another, and the meetings seemed to lack fervency and life. Some conference meetings at private houses very encouraging. Did not intend to give up. Some of their members were more theoretical than sympathetic. The Mission S. School is still progressing. It is a pleasant school. The children who have been prepared by Sr. Hastings, and other children came into the school, with their eyes sparkling with joy, and their faces glowing with smiles of delight; and such scenes are well calculated to enkindle the fervency of christian love in the heart of every devoted child of God.

Bro. Babcock reported from River Point church. The meetings part of the time were quite spiritual. The conference meetings seemed to be attended by the Spirit of God. Two had been baptised. Do not have preaching but twice a month. Have a very interesting S. School, numbering at present eighty-five. It is increasing in numbers. Probably be one hundred before the close of the present year.

Bro. Cary reported from the Chestnut Hill, Ct., church. They were few in number. Prayer meetings spiritual. Were more practical than theoretical. When we do not have preaching meetings on the Sabbath, we have conference meetings. The conference meetings are thinly attended, but quite a large number come out to hear preaching. We are trusting in the Lord for the addition of such to the church as shall be saved.

The Clerk reported from Foster church. Conference meetings generally interesting. Preaching every Sabbath. Some are often discouraged through trial, and need the prayers of the faithful to strengthen them. Some are waiting to go forward in baptism. There are some good substantial christians who are always willing and ready to work.

Bro. Carpenter did not arrive until Friday, when he gave a report of the Danielsonville church. He had been detained from the Conference, having been called upon to attend the funeral of a friend. Had no very discouraging report to make, nor anything very encouraging. Conference meetings were blessed by the Lord. Enjoyed himself much in the administration of the Word. The congregation is not as large as before the present political agitation. He thought there was wheat there that would be gathered into the Lord's garner when the chaff was burnt up with unquenchable fire.

Bro. Rodman (moderator) said he lived at Rocky Brook. He attended the conference meetings at that place. Some had the war spirit. It was killing the religious interest. The spirit of war and the spirit of Christ cannot long dwell together. He thought they would not long be in darkness. They begin to feel for the pillars of strength. Had been to Westerly. Found them in the service of the Lord. He very much enjoyed being with this band of christians. Had been to Carolina Mills. Some good and substantial christians there. Went occasionally to Lafayette. A hard place; was worse now than it ever had been. There are some there who are still trusting in the Lord.

Bro. Huntington said that the church in Abington, Ct., had passed through many severe trials, and he wished to say something to encourage churches which are now passing through trying circumstances. Those who belong to the church in Abington are mostly those who embraced the Advent doctrine in 1842-3, and since, had had many different and false doctrines to divide them. After the time passed in 1843, many were led into the belief of the "shut door." After that excitement somewhat subsided, about one quarter joined the Quakers and went to Enfield, but afterwards was glad to come back. Afterward about one half went to keeping the Seventh Sabbath. Did not quarrel with them for worshiping Saturday while they worshiped Sunday. They are now well united, and all worship on the first day of the week. Some come ten, or twelve miles to meeting, and those who come the farthest generally get the greatest blessing. There is good attention generally to preaching.

Bro. A. Durfee requested to become a member of this Conference. Moved and carried. He said his church was in South Kingston. They were composed of several different classes. One class you always know where to find. They keep on a level; they strive together. Another class have feasts and fasts. Have an excitement and then a dearth. Another class have to be held up by the prayers of others, and they will sometimes fall then. His church was still identified with the Freewill Baptist denomination, but he was not discouraged. He did not know the definition of that word experimentally. A majority of the more intelligent are adherent in faith to Advent doctrine. The Freewill Baptist Quarterly Conference had requested the church to take a portion either for or against the doctrines advocated by its Pastor. Bro. Huntington requested to join the Conference. Moved and carried. It was proposed by several of the brethren that some time should be used in discussion. After some talk about a question, the following, offered by Bro. J. D. Brown, was accepted. "Do the Scriptures teach the return of the literal seed of Abraham to the land of Palestine?" Moved and carried. The proposition, however, was not discussed. Adjourned until Thursday morning.

Thursday morning, 10 o'clock. Prayer by Bro. Huntington. Eld. D. O. Hopkins was received by vote as a member of the Conference. Having no other business the Conference adjourned until Friday morning

Friday Morning, 10 o'clock.—Prayer by Bro. Bellows. Letter received and read from the Exeter church. Filed. Bro. Babcock had disposed of tracts to individuals without the consent of the Conference. Bro. A. Durfee made motion:—"The disposition of tracts made by Bro. Babcock is approved by this Conference." Passed. Remarks were made by several brethren on the method to be pursued in disposing of tracts. The tracts were finally divided among the ministers, according as they thought tracts were needed in the different places where they were traveling, as nearly equal as practicable. Many interesting remarks were made on denying ourselves and giving the proceeds to the tract fund.

Motion was made that the Clerks have the amendment to Article 7th of the Constitution republished in the Crisis, and request the clerks of the different churches to attach it to said Article in the printed Constitution furnished them by Bro. Babcock. Will the Clerks of the different churches remember this? The amendment to Article 17th is as follows: "And there shall be a collection taken up at each Quarterly Conference for this object. The Treasurer shall expend these contributions in tracts, and distribute them at each quarterly meeting to preachers, or any others, as the Conference shall direct."

The Conference was one of great interest to the lovers of truth in its section, and we hope prolific of much good to all those who attended. The conference meetings were unusually interesting and cheering. Much good, we trust, will be shown in the day of retribution was the result of this gathering together of the people. The following ministers preached the Word: Eld. H. L. Hastings, from John 19th chapter, relating the "story of the cross." Eld. Thomas Huntington, of Abington, Ct., from Jude 9th. Eld. J. D. Brown; (the Clerk not being present, does not know the text.) Eld. G. Champlain, Ps. 1: 3. Eld. A. Durfee, John 6: 33 and 14: 1, 2, 3. Bro. Ross, from Titus 2: 11, 12.

The Conference was fully attended. Much interest prevailed, and we earnestly pray the God of the harvest that sheaves may be gathered whose honest resolutions to serve Him began at this Conference.

M. R. Pilterplace, Clerk.

For the Crisis.

Am I a Christian?

It seems to me there is some importance connected with this question. Can the reader answer it in the affirmative? Would it not be well, before you thus answer it, to pause and enquire what constitutes a christian? Is it a fact that all who are denominated christians, are such—to be entitled to the name of Christians? Must we not be followers of Christ? If we would be followers of Christ, must we not believe what Christ taught, and practice the precepts that he has given? In short, must not our faith and practice be in harmony with his teachings? One thing is evident—that Christ did not teach all the notions that are extant in the world at present. If his word is truth, all the teachings of professed christians can not be, for they are contradictory. How much can we come short of being christians and be saved? Can we at all after knowing what a christian is? Reader, as you value eternal life, trace these thoughts to their legitimate conclusions, and then search for the truth and act accordingly.

Errata.

In my article on the Tremont Grove meeting I notice several errors in printing—only one of which is of much consequence, viz., "The writer was happy in leading ten souls down into the water," etc., it should read "two souls." "Some came 20 miles" should read "30." "The best time was in store," should read "the best prize." Only the first is worth correcting.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 24, 1861.

No Paper Next Week.

There will be no paper issued by us next week, but the Crisis for August 7th may be looked for at the regular time. Preparatory to the meeting of the Christian Publication Society, on the 31st inst., the accounts and business matters of the office will require the entire attention of Bro. Cotton and the editor, (who is also Business Agent,) which would render it impossible for either of us to discharge the duties belonging to our respective departments when the paper is published. This fact, together with considerations which may be more fully set forth in our next number, makes it desirable that we should omit the publication of the paper next week.

Meeting of the Board.

There will be a meeting of The Christian Publication Society, at this office, on Wednesday, the 31st inst., at 10 o'clock A. M. A full attendance of the Board of Directors is desired. Bro. Grant and Bro. Hemenway will please observe this notice, and endeavor to be here without fail. Bro. G., we presume, will return to Boston this week. We wrote Bro. H. at Clinton, on the 19th, and now (22d) write him again at Vernon, Vt.

To our Subscribers.

The interests of the Crisis are affected by the "hard times" to an extent that our patrons are not aware, since we have thus far refrained from calling their attention to the matter. In our next issue we shall probably have something tangible to lay before them on the subject. Meanwhile, we would request all who can do so to remit us what is due on subscriptions. Our weekly receipts do not meet our expenses.

To our friends in the West, who complain that they find it difficult to procure suitable funds to send East, we would say, send us postage stamps or gold. We shall be glad to receive either.

Rest Awhile, Brethren.

In addition to the matter which appears in this number, we have on hand at the time we write (Saturday, 20th) eighteen articles on the question of bearing arms! Two of these maintain the lawfulness of war under some circumstances, while sixteen of them are against that view. Now we are sure that before all these articles are published in the Crisis, "the Prince of peace" will have commenced his glorious reign upon the earth; and we would suggest that it can hardly be serviceable to the cause of truth to send us any more matter on this subject for the present. Being so well supplied, our stock will hold out for some time! Rest awhile, would be our suggestion to such of our friends as feel moved to give their views on the question. And to those whose contributions are included in the unpublished eighteen articles, we must say, be patient. Even if it were desirable to publish all your articles, (which we know it is not,) we cannot serve you all at once. The capacity of our paper is limited, and we must seek to restrict this discussion within reasonable space.

The "meat in due season" which "the flock of God" require should not be all of one kind, and we know our brethren and sisters desire us to give them variety. This we shall endeavor to do, and we solicit the co-operation of those who will not be grieved if we do not publish what they send us—those who, in writing for the Crisis, are animated by a desire to do good and please the Lord, and who have confidence in us that, however frequently we may err in judgment, we will not suffer unworthy considerations to control us in withholding their contributions from our readers. We are not unconscious of the fact that our position gives us constant opportunities to do injustice to those whom we were placed here to serve; at the same time we know that our desire is to be kind and impartial to all. Our position has—with many pleasant features—peculiar trials. These we will bear patiently, with the Lord's help. Our brethren, too, have their trials—yes, their peculiar trials; we understand this, and want to do our part in helping them to bear their burdens. Let us all seek to be more fully imbued with the spirit of Christ—to live more completely under the dominion of the law of love—to possess in our inward life, and exhibit in our outward life, in growing perfection, the graces of the Holy Spirit.

We return from this digression to the subject upon which we began, to say that one of our preaching brethren, in a letter on the war question which has not yet been published, falls into an error which he will be glad to have us correct. Referring to what has appeared in the Crisis, he says:—"I see that most of the writers (although not convinced which side of this question they should occupy) come out on the side of war and justify the use of carnal weapons by the disciples of Jesus in this hour of peril." The facts are just the other way. Look at them:—

In our paper for May 15th, Bro. Bruce wrote against fighting; May 22d, Bro. Grew did the same; May 29th, Br'n. Carpenter and Morgan did the same; June 5th, Bro. Hastings did the same; June 12th, Bro. Alling did the same; June 26th, Br'n. Bellows and Carpenter did the same, while we took occasion to say that our convictions on the subject were unsettled; July 10th, Bro. Rogers wrote against fighting; July 17th, Bro. Hastings wrote again against fighting; in this number, Br'n. Porter and Curry write against fighting.

The other side of the account stands thus: June 5th, we gave the article from the Examiner; June 19th, Bro. Hudson gave his views; July 3d, Bro. White published his "Thoughts on Government;" July 10th, Bro. Andrews expressed his belief that the Federal Government should be sustained; July 17th, Bro. Campbell wrote in defence of "war," and we gave an extract from Mr. Duffield on the same side; in this number, Bro. White gives "Thoughts on Government," in reply to Bro. Porter. Thus it appears that out of nineteen articles referring to this question, twelve have been against "bearing arms."

P. S.—Since the above was in type, we observe that we omitted to classify the article in the paper of July 10th, entitled "a wise answer," by Bro. W. Pratt. We will add, likewise, that since our article above was written we have received four more communications against fighting: one of them contains eighteen foolscap pages, and the writer's name, should we give it, would assure our readers that the subject is discussed with ability. Again we pray you, brethren, to rest your pens on this subject for a few months.

"Interesting Experience."—We have given this heading to the letter on our first page, addressed to Bro. Munger. It for the most part explains itself, but we will add that since its date our sister has withdrawn from the M. E. Church and identified herself with the Advent believers in the place of her residence. She consents with some reluctance to the publication of the letter, as it was written only for the eye of Bro. M.; but numbers who have read it wished Bro. M. to give it publicity through the Crisis. We trust it will do good.

We recently asked for the full name of our correspondent "Sarah," her late article in our paper—"Thoughts on the coming of Christ"—inducing us to believe that her light, as a writer, should not be hid under a bushel. We now have her full name, and think those who read her letter to Bro. Munger will want to hear from her again. The letter is rather long, but we deemed it best to give it entire.

Questions.

1. Will some brother inform me where the phrases "mortal spirit" and "immortal spirit" are found in the Bible? I cannot find them. There was a Christian minister here, who, in attempting to prove the immortality of the soul, said that mortal soul and immortal soul could not be found in the Bible, but the phrase mortal spirit and immortal spirit could both be found in the Bible. I should like to know where.

2. I wish to call attention to Acts 7: 59. "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Who said "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit"—Stephen, or the men that stoned him? I think it was the men that stoned him, as it reads "they." But a great many think it was Stephen.

E.

Answer.

1. The Bible nowhere contains the expression "mortal spirit" or "immortal spirit."

2. Greek scholars will inform E. that the grammatical construction of Acts 7: 59, in the original, makes it certain that it was Stephen who said—"Lord Jesus receive my spirit."

Hudson's New Tract.—Bro. James Douglas and Bro. Edward Morse each send us $1. We want $13 more. Shall it be raised before we issue our next paper?

Errata.—In S. S. Gordon's "Inquiries," in No. 18, instead of "Psa. 110: 27," read Psa. 110: 2, 7. Instead of "from the 10th to the 24th verses of the 21st chapter of Jer.," read Jer. 51: 19–23.

☞ Your particular attention is called to the fact that at our Wilbraham Camp Meeting last fall, it was voted to purchase, of Bro.'s Munger and Ladd, the cooking apparatus, crockery and boarding utensils. To effect this, it was thought best to raise a fund, and hence a subscription list was opened, and many of the friends subscribed toward this object. Some of the subscribers paid their pledges, but the most of what was subscribed is still unpaid. Our object at this time is to call attention to this matter, and earnestly request the brethren and sisters to send their subscriptions immediately to Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., so that there may be nothing lacking which will conduce to the comfort and convenience of those who shall go up to our contemplated feast of tabernacles. Let every one respond promptly.

For the Crisis.

"Thoughts on Government."

In the Crisis of July 3d I have an article under this head, to which J. Porter has replied in this paper. It will be seen that he has put the Church of Rome on a level with the Government of the United States of America. He says, "National churches may have a right to be, though they may not in all respects be perfect. If this be true, then it may be right that the Church of Rome ought to be."

J. P. assumes what is not true, therefore all his thoughts on government as applied to me have no force. I deny that a National church ought to be, and hence deny that the church of Rome ought to be. In my article I did assume that government ought to be, though it might not be perfect; and on this assumption I said that the government of these States might have a right to be. Now if J. P. will say that I assumed what is not true, then I will admit that all I said on that assumption amounts to nothing with him; and if he will prove my premises false, then my deductions have no force in any direction. If J. P will deny that the government of the United States ought to exist, I will notice his denial in due time; or, if he will deny that government ought to exist, though it should be imperfect.

I supposed it was admitted that government ought to be, and that this government ought to be, though it is not perfect. If this be denied, it alters the case; but if it be admitted, then what I said follows of necessity. Now, either deny the premises, or show that the deductions do not follow; for they stand or fall together. If, then, this government ought to be, it ought to be sustained; and if it cannot be sustained without bearing arms, then those who sustain it ought to bear arms. This is self-evident. And if christians ought not to bear arms, it certainly follows that christians ought not to belong to the government; and if Abraham Lincoln be a christian, he ought to secede from the government; and all other christians in it ought at once to secede; and as fast as any now in it may become christians, they should leave it. If the government ought to be sustained, and christians ought not to sustain it, it then follows that wicked men ought to sustain it, and of course they ought to bear arms; and if so, then it is right for them to bear arms, unless it is wrong for them to do what they ought to do. It would then follow that it is right for a wicked man to do what is wrong for a good man to do. If, moreover, this government should be sustained, and good men should not sustain it, it then follows that wicked men ought to be; for if they should all become christians, then the government would be broken up.

A government may be reformed, that is made better. So this government might abolish slavery, and still be this government. Some of the States now free were at one time slave States; so other States might become free, and still the government would stand. But if you remove from the government that which is essential to its existence, you destroy it. If, then, bearing arms is essential to this government, then what I have said is true, all side issues and unparallelled cases to the contrary notwithstanding.

Again, if wickedness qualifies a man for a certain relation, and goodness disqualifies him, then the more wicked a man is, the better he is qualified for the relation; and the more goodness the man has, the less he is qualified for it. So that, if this government ought to be sustained, and good men should not sustain it, because they are good, it follows that wicked men should sustain it, and because they are wicked; and it would then follow, that the more wicked a man is, the better he is qualified to sustain that which should be sustained, and, on the other hand, the better the man is, the less he is qualified to sustain a government that ought to be sustained. Either show that my premises are not true, or else show that the deductions do not logically follow the premises.

We are commanded to pray for rulers—hence we are required to pray for Abraham Lincoln; and it must surely be right to pray that he may become a christian. But if he should become one, he ought to cease being President, and so we should pray that he might become *un*qualified for his office, and then go home, and leave his place to be filled by some one qualified, namely, a wicked man. And then, should we continue to pray for rulers, and all the succeeding candidates for the Presidency should become good men before they should take their seat, we should be praying for that which would deprive the government of a President. This would be true of all the other officers of the government; and so, if prayer should be answered in behalf of them all, the government would cease to be, for it would have no legislative nor executive department. So then, as fast as they are appointed to office, we should pray that they may become unfit for office, by becoming christians, and so secede from a government that ought to be sustained.

The conclusion is, that though this government ought to be sustained, it ought not to have an honest christian President, neither ought it to have a christian officer in any department of it. It ought, therefore, to be composed entirely of wicked men, or men not quite honest enough to be christians—for this government which ought to be, ought not to be strictly a christian government.

J. S. W.

From Bro. Carpenter.

[Our editorial strictures upon Bro. C.'s "Why Fight?" article elicited from him a long response, from which we give extracts below. We prefix numbers to the paragraphs.—Ed. Crisis.]

1. We feel called upon to say a few words, as Bro. W. seems on one or two points to misapprehend us, and also in two or three instances to wrest our expressions from their true connection and our illustrations from the points which they were intended to sustain. Under section 4 he gives his readers the impression that I in my article maintain that men "ought to know better" than to set armed policemen to guard our cities. Reference to my article will testify that I make no such intimation in regard to policemen. In section 1 of my article I do intimate that there are men advising Christians to engage in this war that "ought to know better." I think so now.

2. Under section 2, Bro. W., referring to my allusion to Ahab and Jehosaphat in the Ramoth Gilead affair, says—"Bro. C. seems to present these two monarchs of a former dispensation to illustrate the guilt which in his view christians inevitably incur, under all circumstances, by bearing arms." Here is evidently a misapprehension. I was not arguing the question whether the Christian could under any circumstances use "carnal weapons" or not, (though I have yet to learn that it is his duty or privilege to do so,) but I was speaking in my first and second articles, and at this point especially, about the present struggle, and I used that item of sacred history to illustrate the position of Christians now as by a figure.

3. I was not aware of favoring the idea even of "watchmen" to guard our (christians') dwellings. What a Christian might do is not what he had better do, necessarily. I referred to Elijah and Elisha and to the Wesley's as examples to illustrate how God can and has and will deliver his children from danger without the protection of "armed police." What if Elijah did slay four hundred of Baal's prophets with the sword; did he do it for his own safety? What if Elisha did say "shoot"; did he command it for self defence? Bro. W. evidently lost sight of the point under consideration, and which they were adduced to illustrate and prove. The question is, were they not safe when attacked by foes, even without any visible defence, at the time alluded to? If so, the point remains good. So also in regard to the Wesleys: what if they did not scruple to complain of rioters or appeal to magistrates; were they not often miraculously delivered from danger as to their persons without "armed" force, as I said? If so, then they illustrate my point. The point is not what their sentiments were concerning war or military protection merely, but did they need a "police force" to keep them safely?

4. Under section 5, Bro. W. thinks that I force an idea from the Examiner that was not there. Does not the article from the Examiner convey the idea that Paul's request could not be complied with without resorting to military force? If it does not, I confess I'm mistaken.

5. Paul was mobbed at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra, at Phillippi, at Thessalonica, at Corinth and at Ephesus; and yet, in face of all these "facts," Bro. W. seems to question whether Paul ever was in many mobs before this (mob) at Jerusalem. Perhaps he misapprehended my meaning; I think he must. [*]

6. Bro. W.'s criticisms in section 7 I consider but a play upon words. He says the Gospel no where requires us to be "lamb-like." What can he mean? If he means we no where find that precise expression, I reply we no where find the precise term "Christ-like"—yet ye says we must be "Christ-like." He admits also that Christ was "lamb-like." If Christ is lamb-like, and we like Christ, how can we be any thing less than "lamb-like?" Christ is said to be the head—we members of his body: If the head is lamb-like, ought not the body to correspond? Did not Jesus say, "I send you forth as lambs among wolves"? If he means by "lamb-like" "unanswering silence," then I agree with him we are not to be so. Christ was not so. He opened his mouth in the judgment hall, yet of him it was said, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before his shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth." If Christ could fulfill this prophecy, and yet answer his foes, so Paul could be like him and answer for himself.

7. I repeated with emphasis the "higher law" doctrine not because I would make a point against the Examiner, but for the sake of others that I had in my mind. After setting it forth, I might have said, "in this we perfectly agree," but I supposed every one could see that without being reminded of it. I did then come to the real issue, which is, does the "higher law" prohibit us from fighting in the present conflict?

H. F. C.

* You said—"He has been in many a mob before this at Jerusalem." We understood you to mean that before this time Paul had been in many a mob at Jerusalem. We, therefore, said that we did not know what facts there are to warrant this statement."—Editor.

Inquiries.

Is Christ ever called Michael in the Bible, and if so where? Is not the Michael of Dan. 12: 1, identical with the Persian chief, prince of Dan. 10: 13, 21? Daniel says: "one of the chief princes;" thus the nature of the language signifies that there were several princes of the same order. If such is the fact, Christ could not have been the Michael in question.

Again, is not the time of trouble in Dan. 12: 1, synonymous with that of Isa. 20: 20, 21; Jer. 30: 7; Matt. 24: 21? If it is, has not the prophecy found its fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem?

But does the awakening of the sleepers of the 2d verse synchronize with the preceding trouble? If so, has Dan. 12: 2, any relation to the general resurrection of the dead?

C. G. C.

I would like an explanation, through the Crisis, of Job. 7: 9, 10. "As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more." Also on Matt. 8: 12, "But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." What children and what kingdom are spoken of? Again, in Rev. 20: 10, "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."

A Seeker after Truth.

For the Crisis.

From Eld. D. Bosworth.

Bro. Wendell:—In my letter in the last Crisis, for eighteen years read eighteen hundred years.

In reference to any strictures upon those who deny or ignore the glorious doctrine of the resurrection, I have no complaint to make. And with Bro. Wendell's permission, I would also remark that, as an ambassador of Christ, my speech and my preaching has always rebuked the idea of glorification this side the resurrection, although the way he puts the case in his No. 1 might lead those unacquainted to suppose he considered me vulnerable on that point. In his No. 2 he suggests, "That the cardinal feature of modern Spiritualism has its root and foundation in the immortal soul theory." The word mortal or immortal, as applied to the soul, is unscriptural, and I do not use them. But the inference our Bro. would draw from the statement, would lie with equal weight against such as myself, and those who hold the more objectionable features of the theory. But to my mind, if the statement is true—which I do not admit—it amounts to nothing. Is the doctrine of the Incarnation any the less true, or any the less dear to the christian, because Satan has counterfeited it? Is the hope of being among the blood-washed company that shall constitute the Bride, the Lamb's wife, any the less cheering to the christian, because a harlot claims the same endearing relation? Does it not cheer the way-worn and weary to feel that angels of light minister around their pathway, notwithstanding Satan sometimes transforms himself into that character? So may it not be possible that God has so created man as to make a distinction between him and the beasts of the field—in regard to his mental powers—although Satan might take advantage of that difference, to lead wicked men to become necromancers and wizards? Let not my brother say—because he is in the editorial chair and can say the last word—that the word mortal, as applied to the soul, is implied in scripture. I might be tempted to say, that this doctrine of implication is sometimes carried to too great lengths. For if not immortality, I should understand the prohibition against dealing with the dead, to imply something different from blank annihilation, or utter unconsciousness. I think, on reflection, my brother will see that the position he assumes in reference to the "immortal soul theory," even if true, amounts to nothing. But admitting the argument to be good for anything, it would overturn our faith, and destroy the foundation of Christianity itself. And—"If the foundations be destroyed, what will the righteous do?"

D. Bosworth.

Waterbury, July 18.

For the Crisis.

Letter from C. W. Smith.

Bro. Wendell:—As my heart is refreshed week after week by the cheering epistles contained in the Crisis, I feel that it would be a privilege to communicate something, if possible, which would prove a like blessing to others. All who love the Lord and are looking for his soon return, according to the Scriptures, are truly members of one family; and may God hasten the time when we shall all be gathered together in one. Then we who are acquainted with each other only by "pen and ink," shall see each other face to face, and satisfy our longing desires by an acquaintance that shall never end.

With many of the readers of the Crisis I am acquainted. Dearly beloved, let me exhort you to be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." The time draws near that will test our faith. O what a solemn time is this! every thing in commotion. Has not that time of shaking truly commenced which was to result in the removing of those things that may be shaken? Are we ready to receive that kingdom which cannot be moved? O let us hold fast, that we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Yes, while those who are crying "Peace and safety," are exerting themselves to quiet the anxious minds of their startled hearers by making a final, fruitless and fatal effort to sustain the fables of these last days, let us "hold fast the form of sound words" and "abide in Him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." Truly it is time for us to "look up," for soon will be seen flashing athwart the eastern horizon the golden beams of the Sun of righteousness. "O let us be ready to hail the glad day."

I have just returned from a visit with the brethren in Wisconsin, among whom Elder Sheldon is laboring. We had some excellent meetings, of which I will not speak in particular, as Bro. Sheldon will doubtless give a report of them through the Crisis. The cause seems to be gaining ground in that vicinity under the persevering labors of Bro. Sheldon. His regular circuit makes him over two hundred miles travel every four weeks, and nearly half of it through the woods and over bad roads. Notwithstanding this, he does not consider a storm of snow or rain a sufficient excuse for disappointing a congregation, although he is poorly prepared for inclement weather. But he performs his work with a patient spirit; and as far as my observation serves me, those that undergo the most, are the last ones to make their wants known. Well, there is a reckoning day coming, and, thank the Lord, the recompense is sure. There seems to be a spirit of love and brotherly kindness among the members where Bro. Sheldon labors, which has a far better effect on the surrounding community, than that exclusive sectarian sentiment—the fruit of test questions—which proves a root of bitterness wherever it obtains. May the Lord bless Bro. Sheldon and the people among whom he labors.

On my way home I called on Bro. Henry Zader, near Janesville, and staid with him several days, holding meetings every evening; and on Lord's day I spoke on the state of the dead in the morning, and the destiny of the wicked in the afternoon; and from the close attention given, and the eagerness manifested to obtain tracts after meeting, I should judge that a spirit of inquiry was aroused, to say the least. After the morning meeting we repaired to the banks of the beautiful Rock River, into which I led Bro. Zader and his brother-in-law, and buried them in the likeness of the death and resurrection of our dear Lord. Bro. Zader has lived near Janesville sixteen years, during which time he has heard a few discourses from Eld. Marsh and one from Eld. Blain; but by prayerfully searching his Bible, which he told me he had read through some sixteen times, he has become firmly established in the "truth as it is in Jesus;" and for advocating this truth he has been excluded from a sectarian church, although its members were constrained to acknowledge that he was a christian. Thus I found him; an outcast from a popular church, free from the restraint of all sectarian creeds, yet walking humbly with his God, keeping the sacred fire still burning on the family altar, the effect of which was plainly visible in his household. Thank God for a religion that can stand without artificial proppings. Bro. Zader's wife is with him in the faith, and was anxious to follow him into the water, but sickness prevented. I was kindly cared for while there and not sent empty away. I would like to mention some other items connected with my stay there, and the rest of my journey; but I fear I am trespassing on the limits of your paper, so I will close by acknowledging the goodness of God in preserving and prospering me, and permitting me to meet my little family again in peace.

Correspondence.

From Sister E. S. Willard.

Bro. Wendell:—Again are our hearts made glad by the reception of a letter from our faithful Bro. Abram Fike, Tamales, Marin Co., Cal., containing the tokens of his faithfulness in his Master's vineyard in a five dollar gold piece. All of which was to be distributed for the World's Crisis and its former Editor. Let his worthy example encourage us all. He says:—"Mr. Allen and Mr. Burbank were in my shop last Wednesday discussing on the difficulties between the North and the South. I noticed they were intelligent men, and after they ceased I asked them to subscribe for the Crisis and succeeded in getting both their names." Let us all thus be watching for our Master's cause. Two youths, aged seventeen and eighteen, were immersed Lord's day, 23d, by a Baptist brother and received into their communion. These young friends were two of our first scholars in the Bible class, and were led to give themselves to Christ on the night of our national fast. May they rise above sectarian prejudice and be simple christians. Amen. Doors are opening in these highways and hedges for us, and we are striving to "occupy until (He) come."

Pray for us, dear christian friends. Love to you all in Jesus' name.

Hammonton, N. J., June 27.

From Eld. R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Wendell:—Truth, as revealed to us in the Living Oracles, is precious—glorious—and has power to save all those who will believe and obey it. But I took my pen to inform you and the pilgrims, that last Sunday was a day that will be remembered for good at Adams' Mills by all the lovers of truth. A good congregation was present, who listened with interest to a discourse predicated upon Acts 8: 12. Then to the banks of our Nation's river we retired, after prayer was offered to the Father in the name of His Anointed, and I baptized two persons. One of them was a lady about seventy years of age. Such seasons are like an "Oasis" in the desert. On their way rejoicing, they are journeying for the glory-capped hills of our Eden home! whilst I am on my way to the U. S. as a recruiting officer in the army of the Lord. Amen.

On board the Howard, July 12, '61.

From Bro. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Wendell:—Our third Grove meeting, held in Dane county, passed off profitably. Brs. Turner and Shears were present to assist in preaching. Brethren were in attendance from some distance. Had a refreshing meeting. Some of our Seventh-day friends were in attendance. By their request I gave a sermon upon that topic, which took effect. Having given strict attention to this theory for years, I scarcely ever preach upon it without convincing a part of its advocates of their error. I have now on hand four or five calls from different bodies of Seventh-day keepers, to come among them and preach upon this point. I do not expect to convince the willful, who will not listen. The cause is onward in Wisconsin. We feel encouraged to labor on.

Springville, Wis., July 18, 1861.

From Bro. Charles Bunnell.

Bro. Wendell:—Our lot has been cast in the West for eleven years past, and we have not heard one sermon in all that time on the coming of our Lord; but we love the appearing of our Savior. We often wish we could hear Bro. Hastings, or Bro. Batchelor, or Bro. Brewer, or Bro. Grant, and many others that I could name. I often think of the by-gone days I have spent in hearing from their lips the word of life. It fed my hungry soul. We intend, by the grace of God, to stem the current, although the waves run mountain high.

Havana, Ill., June 20.

From Bro. Z. Whitney.

Bro. Wendell:—I have nothing at present of special interest to communicate, but am still looking forward with hope to the hour of deliverance and redemption at the appearing of our Lord and Savior, when the trials and excitements of this troubled scene shall end in the peaceful and everlasting kingdom of God, of whose approach we are admonished by all the commotions and events transpiring around us. Yours in hope and christian love.

Bridgeport, Ct., July 13.

From E. G. Sprague.

Bro. Wendell:—The Crisis has ever been a welcome visitor in our family, and I have often thought that there were none that perused its columns that appreciated it more than we did. We seldom hear the gospel preached in its purity.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Lake City, Minn., June 14th, 1861, Sister Sarah Arnold, aged sixty-five.

She had suffered very much. She often expressed strong confidence in God, and for many years had been looking for that blessed hope. A solemn and impressive discourse was delivered on the Sunday following to a large and deeply interested audience in the Baptist Church, by our beloved Bro. A. G. Hudson of Florence, Minn., from words chosen on the occasion,—"If a man die, shall he live again?" He showed that the only true hope of the christian is through Jesus the Life Giver.

We've laid her form beneath the sod,
Her life is hid with Christ in God;
When Christ our life shall come to reign,
He'll wake her and she'll live again.

Yes, in that bright and promised morn
She'll rise in an immortal form;
With songs of triumph o'er the grave,
She then will sing his power to save.

Sweet be her rest till Christ shall come,
He'll raise her then and take her home;
While life shall last be this our prayer,—
Prepare us, Lord, to meet her there.

H. H. Arnold.

Died, in Concord, N. H., July 13th, of chronic inflammation of the bowels, Everard M., only son of Jonathan P. and Eliza S. Leavitt, aged eleven years, sixteen months and seven days.

A discourse was delivered at his funeral by the writer, founded in 1 Cor. 15: 26,—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

T. M. Preble.

Concord, N. H., July 18, 1861.

Died, in Oriola, Iowa, the infant son of Samuel and Mary Folsom, aged nine months and five days.

He was sick six weeks with a disease of the brain. His parents have embraced the truth, and are looking for the speedy coming of Christ to set up his kingdom, where all the ransomed of the Lord will meet to part no more.

Samuel Folsom.

Died, in Worcester, June 25th, 1861, of consumption, Ellen Twiss, daughter of Bro. Asa and Sister Mary C Twiss, aged fifteen years.

The writer first saw Ellen to know her a few days before her death. Although at that time very low, yet I never shall forget that heavenly expression which rested like a sunbeam upon her pale features, as she recognized me in my approach to her bedside. To her the presence of a servant of Christ gave no alarm, but seemed a source of joy. Previous to her sickness she made no public confession of her faith in Jesus, but often told her parents that she loved her Savior. Sceptical as I am in regard to those changes which take place in the mind and feelings of many as death approaches, all my doubts gave way in this case as I saw how calmly she rested on Christ, and how cheerfully she submitted to all her suffering. She seemed to prefer that Jesus would come rather than to die, but doubted not that he would save her when he did come, though she be dead. Among her last requests she wished to hear sung "Rest for the weary."

Brother and Sister Twiss feel deeply their loss. Well they may. Ellen was one of those quiet, conscientious children, which cheers a parent's heart and wins favor among all. At school she was a favorite. Fond of books, easy to acquire knowledge, her active mind made too large demands upon a slender frame. Now she rests from her labors. Parents mourn not as others who have no hope, since "them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Her funeral was largely attended at the Thomas Street Chapel, the school of which she was a member being present. The writer felt divinely assisted while presenting a few thoughts suggested by 1 Thess. 4.

H. F. C.

In Blackstone, July 10, 1861, fell asleep in Jesus Sister Hephzibah Parsons, aged forty-two years.

One more of the pillars of the church of Christ is levelled in the dust. The hearts of one more household are left to grieve amid the ashes of desolation, and the angel in dark livery has claimed another victim. We thus believe, yes, know, that Sister Parsons peoples the silent chambers of the grave invested with all the necessary qualifications for a divine individuality. To her, the behests of the Lord Jesus Christ were as absolute as life itself, while no complex view of her relations to her Savior, or his approaching kingdom, ever shook her confidence in his unwavering promises. To her, a personal manifestation of her absent Lord was the sheet-anchor of her unfaltering hope; and with eyes which at last grew dim from earthly vision, she looked unceasingly for the ever welcomed Son of God. The roof of her humble home has ever sheltered the wanderer, and the missionaries of Christ have gathered around her hearth-stone, and shared her hospitality with unmitigated welcome.

As a mother, no pen may ever record those heavenly virtues. If they would be known, go ask those mourners' hearts, but question not so poor a thing as language. The bitter tears that fell upon her clay too well attest the heavenly counsel and living worth of that dead mother. But she has gone. We may stand beside her grave and think of the past—what she was, what she will be, and what we may be. But while we tread softly around her who, by one fell stroke, has left behind her those who must battle life's stern realities alone—yet something whispers that on life's battle field she won an immortal crown. When coral tombs and giant caverns of the ocean will resign their charge—when the trump of the archangel shall summon us from the silent halls of death, she will appear incorruptibly glorious in her Savior's likeness. May the counsels, prayers and tears which she left behind, be sufficient evidence of her inestimable worth, and lead her mourning children home to God.

C. G. Carre.

Among the sweet sleepers in Jesus in the Cemetery at Lincolnville Centre, Me., lies little Louisa, only child of Brother and Sister Edmond and Catharine Blood, aged five years and two months, who ceased to breathe June 16th, 1861.

Occasionally calling at this pilgrim's home, I became familiar with this intelligent child, the joy of its parents and interesting to all acquaintances. Up to the time of her last sickness, its uniform healthfulness and constant vivacity bespoke its strong constitution, and seemed to say, "Firm was her health—her day was bright." But the prevalent measles assailed her, and that, followed by the croup upon the membrane, bid defiance to the physician's art, and the once promising child yielded to this fell destroyer, to await the coming of the Life Giver to impart life and immortality to all the members of God's kingdom. The heart-stricken parents confidently hope ere long to meet the dear loved one, where death shall never enter and sorrow shall never be known. In hope we then sing on our way:—

"Let sickness blast, let death devour,
If Heaven but recompense our pains;
Perish the grass and fade the flower,
If firm the Word of God remains."

Thomas Smith.

Lincolnville Centre, Me., July 18, '61.

Fell asleep at Amherst, Me., July 8th, 1861, Sumner Giles, son of Pettes N. and Lussetta G. Giles, aged seven years, three months and thirty-eight days.

Thus death has entered this little family circle and taken away three loved ones. But, thanks be to God, they believe that their three little ones will be brought from the land of the enemy. I would say to father and mother, sorrow not as those that have no hope. No, there is hope in his end, and Sumner, with the other two, will live again.

Sermon at the funeral preached by the writer, to a large and attentive assembly, from John 11: 24. May this affliction be sanctified to those around, that we may be prepared to meet these three on the new earth.

When the last trumpet's awful noise
This rending earth shall shake—
When opening graves shall yield their charge,
And dust to life awake.

Lindley Whitman.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A foreign nobleman, Baron de Vidil, well known in London circles, had created considerable sensation by attempting to murder his son by beating him on the head as they were passing along a quiet lane near London. The son is nearly of age, and report says that on reaching twenty-one he is entitled to a large fortune, which the Baron is unable to pay. The Baron made his escape to Paris, but is said to have been arrested, although there are difficulties about delivering him to the English authorities.

In the House of Commons the Danish question was debated. Lord John Russell said Denmark was to make new propositions, which he hoped would have a satisfactory result.

The Parliamentary committee continued its investigations relative to the Galway line.

The Morning Chronicle says Lord Elgin is spoken of as successor to Lord Herbert as Secretary of War. The resignation of the latter is confirmed by the Post.

The Daily News publishes an address by sundry Reform Unions, proposing a national reform movement.

FRANCE.

France is said to have sent another note to Switzerland asserting the rights of French sovereignty over the valley of Dappan, but declining to enter into any further discussion of the subject.

The Paris journals generally applaud the Emperor's letter relative to the introduction of free laborers into the French Colonies. The Siecle in the course of its remarks says, by advocating processes which lead to liberty against those which directly or indirectly favor slavery, it very clearly shows the sympathies of the French government in the conflict which now rages in the American Union.

Judgment was given on the 11th in the affair of Mires and Solar. Both were condemned to five years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 8000 francs.

ITALY.

It is asserted that the Dutch Government has resolved to recognize the Kingdom of Italy.

Cardinal Varmicilli, Archbishop of Ferrara, was spoken of as likely to succeed to the Papal chair, in the event of the Pope's death.

DENMARK.

Steps have been taken for putting the Danish army, except the artillery, on a peace footing.

Rumors had been current that Denmark had issued a circular note announcing that it had no intention to incorporate Schleswig with Denmark, but an official denial is published.

RUSSIA.

The commercial pressure continues and the National Bank had raised its rate of discount to seven per cent. Orders had been given for the issue of small silver and copper money to a large amount. Gold was not obtainable. Accounts from the interior show continued disturbances.

LATEST.

Cialdini had been appointed Lieutenant of the King at Naples.

The Calcutta and China mails had reached Malta.

Calcutta, June 15. There are improved accounts from the famine districts. Copious rains have fallen.

Auckland, May 11. The natives are preparing for new hostilities, and a general native rebellion is anticipated.

Notices, &c.

Campmeeting in Maine.

There will be a Campmeeting in Exeter, Me., near the old spot, by the Chamberlin meeting-house, commencing the first Monday in September next and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren coming from the West by cars will stop at Newport, where there will be teams provided to convey them to the meeting. Those coming by water will come to Bangor, where they also will find teams in waiting. There will be a Boarding Tent on the ground to accommodate all who wish for board. We hope all who purpose to attend this meeting will be on the ground as early in the week as possible; and all who can will bring their tents and bedding as they will be very convenient for ourselves and for those who will not be able to bring them.

P. S. We shall meet the brethren on the steamboat wharf on the arrival of the first boat in the week, and if there are any who cannot come on that day, if they will inform us through the Crisis, or by private letter to D. E. Ireland, North Hermon, on what day they will be at Bangor, we will send a team for them. In behalf of the brethren,

Grove Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove Meeting at Smith's Cove, Digby Co., Nova Scotia, on land owned by Mr. Smith, to commence August 2d, at 6 o'clock, P. M., and hold over Lord's day. Ministering brethren in the Province and from abroad, and all the lovers of Jesus and those that wish to become his friends, are invited to come to the meeting. In behalf of the brethren and friends,

Wm. M. Ingham.

Notice.

There will be a discussion between the Rev. Mr. Hemphill, a Universalist minister, and P A. Smith, to be held on Sunday, Aug. 18th, at Waterport, seven miles north-west of Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y. Subject—the Personality of the Devil. It will be held on the Island, at half-past ten o'clock, A. M.

P. A. Smith.

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to George T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.
English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1.25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1.50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.63; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. Wendell, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 5.

We have evidence of the fact that Christ will reign at Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, from the promise itself as given by the angel to Mary. We have proof of the fact in the language of Peter, while giving that memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost. He says that David, knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne, spoke of the resurrection of Christ, etc. David certainly understood this covenant promise in a literal sense. He did not believe that the sitting of Christ on his Father's throne, as Mediator, was to be the fulfillment of those promises made to him respecting the perpetuity of his throne. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in the heavens." Yet David's throne was to be cast down, and the Psalm follows with a glowing description of its desolate condition. The regal succession terminated in Zedekiah, and of him and the throne God said, "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezk. 21: 26, 27. Then the throne of David was cast down, and thus would it remain until the long promised seed and rightful heir should build it again as in former days. Christ came in the order of succession. This lineage is recorded by Matthew. And in declaring his birth, the important fact is not forgotten, but his title to the throne is declared by the angel to Mary. He "whose right it is" is about to come, and the Lord God shall give it unto him. The throne that Zedekiah vacated, the throne that was "overturned, overturned, overturned," is the one promised; and until we can be shown that Zedekiah reigned in heaven, and that the throne that was overturned was in heaven, we shall believe that the throne of David in Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, is the one promised to Christ.

But we have further proof of the fact. Read Micah 4. Mark well the 6th, 7th and 8th verses. "The Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forevermore." "The Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more . . . Judah shall abide forever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation . . . for the Lord dwelleth in Zion."—Joel 3: 16–21. "For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem: thou shalt weep no more."—Isa. 30: 19. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Psa. 2: 6. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24: 23. "The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.'

Who can fail to see that such promises have not, and cannot be fulfilled in this present condition? All sorrow forever banished, and joy everlasting, the portion of the ransomed. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely, and this is his name whereby he shall be called: The Lord our righteousness."—Jer. 23: 5, 6. We have quite a full description of this kingdom, and the place of its locality, in the 37th of Ezekiel, and some clue to those referred to as "the house of Jacob," and "the twelve tribes of Israel." Jacob, one of the "ancients," had twelve sons, who were the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel. The house of Jacob, we suppose to represent the same thing as the house of Moses. Moses was faithful over all his house, during his leadership from Egypt to Canaan. "Christ, as a son over all his house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope unto the end." "The house of Jacob" is probably identical with "the twelve tribes of Israel," over whom the twelve apostles are to reign in the regeneration. That time is evidently the one alluded to in the chapter named. God promises to "take the children of Israel or Jacob, from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. . . . David my servant shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: and they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever, and my servant David shall be their prince forever."

For the Crisis.

A New Book.

For a long time I have been importuned to publish something in refutation of the opinion that to all the wicked "death is an eternal sleep," or that they will never rise (or "re-live" I believe the new-fangled word is) from the dead. I have been urged to discuss the matter, but I declined, because I am personally averse to discussions, and I never dispute with a preacher in his own pulpit, an editor in his own paper, or a woman in her own house. I did venture to publish two or three texts of Scripture on the point, in the Tract—"Forty Questions on Immortality," but my three and a half page tract called forth some three columns of review, was denounced as a "creed," etc. etc., in a style which was almost enough to alarm a timid young man like me.

In 1857 I wrote a statement of the Scriptures concerning future retribution, and also an exposition of those few texts, such as—"They are dead, they shall not live"; "They shall not see life"; "They shall sleep a perpetual sleep," etc., which are so warped as to contradict the teachings of prophets and apostles concerning the resurrection of the dead. Loving peace, and delighting not in contention, I kept the MSS. in my drawer, hoping that no occasion would arise for its publication. I found, however, that the question was forced upon me for discussion. I have been importuned by many preachers to publish my work. I have been told by opponents I dare not do it. One man, who, I am told, builds part of his reputation as a good preacher upon his repetition of a discourse he heard me preach on "faith, hope and charity," has been telling that no one could answer the arguments, that he had tripped me up, etc., etc. I have finally, after much prayer, concluded that it is duty to print the book. After thoroughly revising it, I have commenced the work. It is now being stereotyped, and will be done in a few weeks, if the Lord will. I am doing it upon the money of others, and trusting that the Lord may enable me to repay it soon. It will probably make 150 or 160 pages, and contain about as large an amount of matter as "The Model Church." I purpose to issue it very cheaply. If bound, single copies will be about 50 cts. In paper covers, 38 cents, or three copies, post paid, for one dollar. I will also give it freely to the poor, and will send copies to all who deny the resurrection of the unjust freely if they will send me their addresses, and inform me that they wish to read it. Persons whose friends have imbibed this opinion, may provide them with copies, or I will send them free on receipt of their addresses. I do not expect to make money out of it, and if the persons who have urged me to discuss the matter wish to have all the believers in that doctrine hear "the other side," let them give currency to this offer. The books will also be sent by express at $10 per hundred copies (much less than cost) to any who will send me the cash, with their orders, immediately. The money will be of service to me. Let orders be sent to me at once, as I need the means. The book will be got out in good style, and cheap beyond all precedent, for the purpose of warning men of a judgment to come! Let all orders be addressed as beneath.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts Suggested by "Thoughts on Government," by J. S. W., in the Crisis of July 3, 1861.

National churches may have a right to be, though they may not, in all respects, be perfect. If this be true, then it may be right that the church of Rome ought to be; then it ought to be sustained; for, unless it is sustained, it must cease to be. If it be wrong for a Christian to bear arms, it follows that, if Pope Pius be a Christian, he ought to resign his office. It also follows that every christian holding office in the church of Rome ought to resign. It is also true that every christian does wrong who, by his vote, puts a man into office in the church of Rome. It then is evident that, as the church of Rome ought to be sustained, wicked men should be in office from the greatest to the least. In case any one of these wicked officers should become a christian, he should leave the church of Rome at once by resigning, because, though the church of Rome should be, still christians should not sustain it. If we may pray for rulers, and God should so far regard our prayer as that these rulers in the church of Rome should become christians, they must cease to be, and let wicked men take their place; for a christian must not bear arms, and he must do this sometimes if he belong to the church of Rome that bears arms. We may thank God that Pope Pius IX. is an honest man; but, perchance, if he should be honest enough to be a christian, or rather a disciple of Christ, he must cease to be a Pope, because, if he becomes as good as we pray that he may be, he should not bear arms. We may take good care not to thank God for a christian Pope, but by so doing we involve the monstrous absurdity of thanking the Lord for that which we condemn.

If what we have said be true, then we should try to prevent all christians from going into the church of Rome, and to have all who are now in it leave it at once. "Come out of her my people."—Rev. 18: 4. And as any one now in it may become a christian, we should tell him he should leave it, and let the wicked man take his place. And moreover, if the Pope should be an honest christian, he must resign his office and let an anti-christian take his place. If, moreover, he be almost a christian, he can remain, and we may thank the Lord that he is Pope, and pray for his success. This involves the idea that if Pope Pius IX. be a good man, he ought not to be Pope. It would then follow that the further he is from goodness, the greater is his right to be Pope. This is the kind of logic we should use in these perilous times.

P. S.—If the church of Rome is right, it should be sustained by all christians. War with carnal weapons is anti-christian, therefore if the church of Rome is right, it will not use them. As war with carnal weapons is anti-christian, there would be no war if all were christians. Hence he who aids or wages war is acting contrary to Christ, and should not be sustained by his disciples.

Pope Pius IX. requires his church to bear arms, therefore in this act he should not be sustained by christians; and when he becomes a christian, he will cease to make such requirements. J. Porter.

Controversy.

Bro. Wendell:—F. H. B., in his note at the foot of Bro. T. M. Preble's replication to my article in the previous Crisis, remarked that it was not "inserted to provoke controversy." Let me add that it was not written for that purpose. In saying this, I do not disparage controversy. Controversy, for the sake of controversy, is evil and that continually. But controversy having for its object the triumph of truth, is good, even as "salt is good." As salt is the great agency for preserving meat from putrefaction, so controversy is God's instrumentality for preserving truth. Our blessed Lord and Master, who is set forth in the Scriptures as an example for us, was an eminent controversialist. Paul's most important epistle—that to the Romans—is controversial, and the same element predominates in 1 and 2 Corinthians and Galatians. One of the holiest men of modern times, John Fletcher, achieved his greatest victories in the field of disputation.

One of our standing objections to the sectarianism of the orthodox churches is, that they refuse us a hearing. They promulge the vilest stuff that was ever misnamed argument against us, and we are not allowed to utter a word of reply. When your humble servant withdrew from the M. E. Church about two years ago, the Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal charged him with Swedenborgianism in the columns of his paper. I wrote to Dr. Stevens a short answer, in order that my true position might be understood by my friends, and all other interested readers of the paper, but it was not noticed. Then and there I followed the example of the Carthagenian chieftain, and (if I may use the expression) swore undying enmity, not to the M. E. Church, but to bigotry.

Those who have read the Storrs and Mattison discussion, will remember the contemptible course of the C. A. and J. in publishing the Professor's (?) attacks on his opponent, but rigidly shutting the door to a decent and "christian-like" response. With these and many other instances fresh in our memories, shall we ever commit ourselves to the same wicked policy? God forbid!

I would direct attention to the manly position of F. H. B., as shown in the last four points of his note.

For the Crisis.

To the Beloved Saints in Christ Jesus—Greeting.

None but those who form a part of the "chosen generation, the royal priesthood, the holy nation, and the peculiar people," that God hath called out of darkness, and enthroned in his marvellous light, that they might show forth the praises of their great Author, can understand the language of Canaan, or the dictation of one spiritual heart to another. Hence, were I to direct a most affectionate letter to the people of the world, those who have not been born of God, describing to them the joyous anticipation of my glorious inheritance with the saints in the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior, they would fail to understand me, and the precious pearl of so much price and beauty to me, would possess no worth or value to them.

Not so with you, my beloved brethren and sisters, who have tasted that the Lord was good. With the Psalmist I may call on you to "magnify the Lord with me and let us exalt his name together;" and you will be ready for the gracious work—you will respond to the kindly invitation, and tune afresh your harps of love in speaking forth the praises of our blessed Redeemer. I with you feel myself to be a pilgrim and stranger on the earth, having here no continuing or abiding home, but only tarrying in the borders of an enemy's land, awaiting my release at the coming of the blessed Savior. Mine has been no fairy path strewn with flowers—no blooming garden, dotted here and there with spacious arbors, where ever and anon I might sit down to rest; but an anxious and toilsome warfare has been the portion of my inheritance, with the imperative command upon me to keep continually climbing up the steep and rugged ascent of the mountain; and when in my life journey my feet have become way-worn and weary, faith, my constant guide, has kindly stepped in and lent wings, by the use of which I could still go forward and make progress in my upward pathway.

In the language of a graphic writer, I have learned, in my Father's dealings with me, that sweet are the uses of adversity; in God's hands indeed they are; when he puts his children into the furnace of affliction, it is that he may thoroughly purge away all their dross. And in the irregularities and unevenness of our health and fortune, we may be so strengthened as to turn our diseases into pearls. And God, in his wonderful wisdom and mercy toward us, makes the spiritual temptations and distresses of his people their necessary discipline for their highest good—the means for the greatest perfection and stability of their characters. This is, indeed, a wonderful transmutation. "God," says the holy Leighton, "hath many sharp-cutting instruments and rough files for the polishing of his jewels, and those he especially esteems, and means to make the most resplendant, he hath oftenest his tools upon."

Then, dear fellow pilgrims, let us not be discouraged, amid the continual prating of a corrupt heart within, and the fearful raging of the storm without. Our Master is working the crucible for us; and, though at times it appears heated one seven times hotter, yet when the image of the form of the fourth is wrought in the work, he will say it is enough, and we shall be released. And then the conflicts endured, the battles fought, and the victories gained through the blood of the Lamb; the dreary passages made in every generation through the valley of the shadow of death, will then be made known amid the disclosures of eternity, when the saints saved shall reveal to each other, for the glory of the Redeemer, the wonders of his grace in their individual experience. It is but here and there that the trials and triumphs of faith come to view in this world; but eternity will be full of such spiritual histories, and in every one's experience, however humble, there will be something reflecting peculiar glory to the adorable Savior. "Many are the pictures, unseen here, that are to be set in array in the future world, with the light of the divine attributes in Christ shining in and through them, to be studied and admired forever and ever." O, then, may we cheerfully toil on a little longer in the delightful service of our Divine Master, striving to make the world the better for our having lived in it, remembering the poor, relieving the oppressed, favoring virtue and frowning upon vice—living holy, separate and apart from the follies and fashions of the world, that, when our Master comes, whether it be in the first, the second, or the third watch, he may find us watching, and joyfully say unto us, "Blessed are those servants," etc.

Jesus Wept.

When? Was it ever his condition while on this earth he wandered, with no place to lay his head? Was it when he was mocked and buffeted, disowned and dishonored by those who professed to be his followers? Was it when they sought to kill him? Ah! my soul; not for himself did he weep, but for others. We see him weeping with Martha and Mary, when standing over the grave of Lazarus. O, what a friend! what a comforter was Jesus to those sad hearts in that dark hour! When the brother they so dearly loved was torn from their fond embrace by the cruel and most terrible enemy, death, how sweetly did the words of that sympathiser fall upon their ears. But that was not all. He even restored to them their brother, brought him to lift again, and they once more heard his sweet voice. O how must they have loved him then. "Jesus wept." O, what a thought. Jesus, the Son of an Almighty God, wept, and for poor, weak, wretched mortals like us! O, what love and sympathy reigned in that heart! How it flowed out in every work he performed, every word he spoke, and every look he gave. How different from the kings and nobles of this world was Jesus. He was meek, lowly, humble and sympathetic; they are proud, lofty and unfeeling. Yet Jesus is far greater than they. "Jesus wept." What consolation does the christian derive from meditating on these words. How he wept over Jerusalem, that unbelieving city! After they had rejected him he cried, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto you, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathers her brood under her wings, and ye would not."

Jesus was a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin. He died that we might live. On the cross he cried, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." His love was inexhaustible. Though he died, he rose again, for the justification and life of his people. That same Jesus now lives, interceding for saints and poor sinners too. He loves still. He sympathizes yet; and how the thought fills the christian's heart with peace, as he sojourns in the land of sorrows. And he is now beseeching sinners to turn from the broad, death-ending way in which they go, to walk in the narrow way that leads to life eternal. What love is like unto the love of Christ? Truly, "what love hath the Father bestowed upon us."

The Day of Rest.

A Lecture by Rev. H. H. Dobney, England.

And this brings us to consider the third form which the idea assumes.

Under Christianity, then, we have done with Jewish Sabbaths, as such, whether Sabbatic days, or weeks, or years. In truth, Gentiles never had to do therewith. No part of Judaism, as such, ever had any claim on us, being Gentiles, and much more being Christians. So that whatever pleas we employ for the observance of a day of sacred rest, we must take good heed not to base them on Jewish law.

But here I must fairly meet the argument which is so very commonly employed, that the command, to "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is one of the Ten Commandments; a part of the moral law, and not the ceremonial; and that the moral law is, of course, as such, of perpetual obligation. Now the distinction between moral and ceremonial is sound. But it is not correct to call the ten commandments "the moral law," as is so commonly, yet I must be permitted to add, unreflectingly done. And though it may appear a digression, yet it is essential that I make this plain.

Why, then, were the famous Ten spoken by the mouth of the Lord, immediately to the people, and subsequently traced by the finger of God on stone tablets, while all the rest of the law, containing more than three hundred precepts, was merely delivered through Moses?

Let Scripture be its own interpreter. It needs no aid of mine. To the law and to the testimony. Turn to the account in Ex. 20, and see for yourselves. You will find that when the people had listened to the awful voice during its distinct articulation of the first few sentences, listened with terror, indeed, from the first, that terror so completely took possession of their souls, that they—may I say, interrupted the solemn proceedings?—they drew back from the base of the mountain; "They removed, and stood afar off; and they said to Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die." And the Holy and Compassionate One condescended to their fears, and used Moses as the medium for conveying the rest of his will to the people. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Thus thou shalt say unto the children of Israel," etc. And in Deut. 5: 23–28, Moses repeats to the people this fact, as the reason why the Lord, when he had spoken the words of these ten commandments "added no more." And, as having been thus spoken in the hearing of the people, they were written on tables of stone as a permanent record and memorial of the fact that God had really spoken to them, and were laid up in "the ark of testimony," or "the ark of witness," accordingly. Seeing, then, that this is the simple historical account of the matter, I do not see how we can soundly distinguish and mark off these ten in particular from all the rest, and designate them alone, emphatically, "the moral law."

But there are still weightier reasons. It is surely not correct to say that these ten, by themselves, are a summary of moral law, for the chief of all the commands, that which lies at the basis of all, is not among them. Christ is our Master, let us "hear him." When, then, our Lord was asked, Which is the great commandment in the law? he quoted not from the ten, but from Deut. 6: 5. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc.; and said, This is the first and great commandment. Moreover he added, And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself (from Lev. 19: 18.) And then he laid down the grand doctrine, On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. How is it then that we are so addicted, in the face of Christ's own teaching, to call the decalogue "the moral law," and to give it as a complete and satisfactory summary? Nor should it be forgotten that when James singles out one of the many laws of old, and calls it the very prince, or king, of laws, "the royal law," he also quotes this from Leviticus, not any one of the ten. Truly, the time ought to be come in which Christians, at least, might be able to adopt from Scripture a happier compendium than that which such multitudes inconsiderately call "The commandments."

We are conducted to the same conclusion, also, by the opening words of the decalogue, which were plainly the preface, not merely to the ten commandments, but to the whole law given to Israel, viz: "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." As, also, by the peculiar promise with which the fifth commandment, as properly concluding the first table (for it is evident that this really belongs to the first, and not the second table) is wound up, viz: "that thy days may be long in the land (of Canaan) which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

I conclude, then, that the ten commandments are an integral and inseparable part of the law given to Israel. All of them, indeed, save that of the Sabbath, are taken up into Christianity, but in a far more elevated and spiritual manner; of which the Sermon on the Mount (and which bears the same relation to Christianity as the law from Sinai does to Judaism) may stand as an illustration. "It was said to them of old time," etc., "but I say unto you," etc. See Matt. 5: 21–27, etc.

To resume. Having done with the Mosaic law, and a "new and better covenant" having been introduced, we are prepared to find a new development of the original idea. It was "the first day of the week" when our Lord rose from the dead, and showed himself to his disciples. This was the day prophetically announced as "the day which the Lord hath made." A new era was inaugurated. On the next "first day of the week" he met them again. And, as soon as things had settled down into form, after his ascension, we find the disciples of Christ accustomed to meet on the first day of the week, "to break bread," etc. There are, however, but three distinct passages in the New Testament from which we deduce this; but, what with our own Christian consciousness, and sense of need, and the testimony of Pliny, etc., we feel an unshaken confidence in the fact. The texts are Acts 20: 7, and 1 Cor. 16: 2, and Rev. 1: 10, in which last, the term employed is, "the Lord's day," and which fairly shows that, already, there was a day so designated, and so known. And from that time to the present, the Church of Christ, however divided, has welcomed each returning Lord's day with holy delight. But the conversion of the Christian's day of rest and social worship into a Jewish Sabbath, which was based on positive enactment, and guarded by the penalty of death, is not only a mistake in itself, but grows out of a misapprehension of the genius or spirit of Christianity. Nor is it correct to say that simply a change of day has occurred from the seventh to the first. There is nothing—that I know of, at least—to sufficiently bear the weight of this assertion. Nor is it necessary to look for evidence. The truth lies much deeper. Is a religion intended to be universal—or as the apostle says, "for obedience to the faith among all nations"—the enforcement of a strict outward observance of every seventh day on all the first Gentile converts, as soon as they became such, in the cities of Greece and Rome and every where throughout the ancient world, would have been fatal to its spread. A law which was possible and most merciful to a united and consenting nation, like the small nation of the Jews, would have been an impossibility to the great majority of converts in the first century. But true living Christianity is, to a great extent, superior to, and independent of, outward rites and forms. It consecrates, not a portion of our time only, but the whole of it; not here and there a solitary spot, but makes all things holy. The glorious truth which, by the Gospel, came to the consciences and hearts of men, and made them "new creatures," was bound up in no rigid forms that belonged to the outward only. As the Savior said, "the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life," "the flesh profiteth nothing." "I am come that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly." If the heart were right, the life would be pure and sweet and noble. All real evil, all that was in itself morally wrong (as distinct from conventional, ceremonial, or artificial wrong) would be earnestly abhorred as by a holy instinct, wherever the "law was written on the heart," wherever men were turned "from darkness to light," from the kingdom of Satan to the kingdom of God's dear Son. And this kingdom did not consist in outward forms and observances; or, as the apostle says, "not in meats and drinks, but in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." Every convert became, in a new and higher sense, a son of God; and, conscious of the relationship, called God, Abba! Dear Father. And earnestly imbibing the very spirit of "him that had loved them, and given himself for them," and the mind of Christ Jesus their Lord being in them, each humbly but confidently said after him, "I delight to do thy will, O God, yea, thy law is within my heart." Truly they were "called to liberty." They were "not under the law;" had "not received the spirit of bondage again, (which was the characteristic of Judaism,) but the spirit of adoption," i. e., a filial spirit. Thus frankly treated, not as servants but as sons, they felt within themselves how much mightier was love than law; or, law as an inward impulse than as an outward injunction. They took the very cross as their dearest symbol, and were ready to lay down their lives for Him whose self-sacrificing love had consummated itself on Calvary; and by the noble voluntary devotedness of their whole selves to Christ and goodness, justified the apostle in his apparently bold but really profound assertion, "knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man." 1 Tim. 1: 9, or as in Rom. 7: 6, "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."

This in general. But now for its bearing on the relation of Gentiles to any particular article of the Jewish law, however valuable in itself. The Christian church at Antioch, the very first of all the Gentile churches (the "Mother Church," therefore, of all our churches, since that at Jerusalem was composed of Jews only) was gathered by certain private and unofficial disciples, that were scatterrd abroad by the persecution that arose on the death of Stephen. Acts 11. From this church, Paul was sent out on his first missionary tour, and was highly successful in gathering together, in most places he visited, little bands of converts to Christ, i. e., churches, which were composed chiefly of Gentiles. Ultimately he returned to Antioch, to report to the church which had sent him forth (Acts 14;) and while there, certain men came from Jerusalem, insisting on these Gentile Christians becoming identified with the Jewish church by circumcision. Whereupon the entire question came up, "What is the relation of the Gentile church to the law of Moses?" a question which includes the one we are engaged with. A deputation was sent from the church at Antioch "to the Apostles and Elders" at Jerusalem, Acts 15, which deputation was "received by the church and the Apostles and Elders," etc.; and this new, but most inconceivably important question was canvassed before "all the multitude" of believers, and the result was a formal document, in the shape of an Epistle from the collective church at Jerusalem, (being Jews,) thus—"The apostles, and elders and brethren, send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia. . . . For it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which, if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well." And the church at Antioch "rejoiced for the consolation." One only of these four things, the last, is strictly moral, and the mention of it only too fearfully needed in those days of idolatry; the abstinence from meats offered to idols was prudentially necessary to new converts from idolatry, lest they should be re-entangled in their own superstitions; and the other two seem adopted as articles of peace and concord, in relation to the pious Jews amongst them. Surely the Sabbath must have been mentioned here, had the assembled apostles and elders, with the church, deemed it binding, as a law, on Gentile Christians.

But more formidable attempts were soon made to interweave the old system with the new; and the efforts of the Judaizers in the various churches to enforce the observance of Mosaic customs in reference to particular times and seasons (as well as other things,) compelled that great Apostle, who was especially the Apostle to the Gentiles, to combat these innovations and errors. And there are three passages in Epistles of his that demand our thoughtful consideration. The first is Rom. 14: 5.—"One man esteemeth (selects for honor) one day above another day; another man esteemeth every day. Let every man be fully persuaded (satisfied) in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord doth he not regard it." On which there is a note in Alford's Greek Testament to this effect: "It is an interesting question, what indication is here found of the observance or non-observance of a day of obligation in the apostolic times. The apostle decides nothing; leaving every man's own mind to guide him in the point. He classes the observance or non-observance of particular days with the eating or abstaining from particular meats. In both cases he is concerned with things which he evidently treats as of absolute indifference in themselves. Now the question is, supposing the divine obligation of one day in seven to have been recognized by him in any form, could he have thus spoken? The obvious inference from his strain of argument is that he knew of no such obligation, but believed all times and days to be, to the Christian strong in faith, alike. I do not see how the passage can be otherwise understood. If any one day in the week were invested with the sacred character of the Sabbath, it would have been wholly impossible for the apostle to commend or uphold the man who judged all days worthy of equal honor,—who, as in v. 6, paid no regard to the (any) day. He must have visited him with his strongest disapprobation, as violating a command of God. I therefore infer that Sabbatical obligation to keep any day, whether seventh or first, was not recognized in apostolic times."

The second passage is that in Gal. 4: 9, 10.—"But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years: (the Sabbatic seasons of the old Jewish law.) I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Their first spiritualism was degenerating into ceremonialism. "Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" Then again, 4: 21.—"Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For," etc. So then, brethren, we (Christians) are not children of the bondwoman (the Jewish church) but of the free. Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us (even Paul and his brethren of the Jews) free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (i. e. the Mosaic law; see Acts 15: 10.)

The third passage is Col. 2: 16, 17. In v. 14, the apostle says, Christ hath "blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us (viz: the entire Mosaic law,) which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. 'Let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath: which things are a shadow of things to come; but the body (substance) is of Christ." Christ then is the reality of all that was previously but shadowed forth; as he "is our passover," and "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," so is he "our peace," and "our rest." Christ is our Sabbath; as himself said, "Come unto me all ye that labor, and I will give you rest."

But I must hasten to a close, leaving unsaid, on this part of our subject, more than I have said; and regretting also that I must be content to treat what remains with undue brevity.

(Concluded next week.)

Good Resolutions.

1. I will daily pray in secret.
2. I will daily pray in my family.
3. I will daily read God's word with a prayerful desire to learn his will.
4. I will attend all the meetings appointed by the church, unless the providence of God otherwise direct.
5. I will pray every day that God will bless his truth to the conviction and conversion of sinners.
6. I will do what I can by my pecuniary ability to promote the Redeemer's kingdom.
7. I will do what I can in the Sabbath school to further the salvation of the rising generation.
8. I will sincerely desire and earnestly pray for the salvation of the children and youth committed to my care.
9. I will strive to be at peace with all who love Christ.
10. I will be as tender of the reputation of a brother or sister as of my own.
11. I will never speak evil of a brother, and if I am displeased with him, I will follow the gospel rule, and tell him my feelings between him and myself alone.
12. I will never visit any place of amusement or social pleasure on which I cannot first ask God's blessing, and where I may not expect his guidance.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 5.

We have evidence of the fact that Christ will reign at Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, from the promise itself as given by the angel to Mary. We have proof of the fact in the language of Peter, while giving that memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost. He says that David, knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne, spoke of the resurrection of Christ, etc. David certainly understood this covenant promise in a literal sense. He did not believe that the sitting of Christ on his Father's throne, as Mediator, was to be the fulfillment of those promises made to him respecting the perpetuity of his throne. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in the heavens." Yet David's throne was to be cast down, and the Psalm follows with a glowing description of its desolate condition. The regal succession terminated in Zedekiah, and of him and the throne God said, "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezk. 21: 26, 27. Then the throne of David was cast down, and thus would it remain until the long promised seed and rightful heir should build it again as in former days. Christ came in the order of succession. This lineage is recorded by Matthew. And in declaring his birth, the important fact is not forgotten, but his title to the throne is declared by the angel to Mary. He "whose right it is" is about to come, and the Lord God shall give it unto him. The throne that Zedekiah vacated, the throne that was "overturned, overturned, overturned," is the one promised; and until we can be shown that Zedekiah reigned in heaven, and that the throne that was overturned was in heaven, we shall believe that the throne of David in Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, is the one promised to Christ.

But we have further proof of the fact. Read Micah 4. Mark well the 6th, 7th and 8th verses. "The Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forevermore." "The Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more . . . Judah shall abide forever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation . . . for the Lord dwelleth in Zion."—Joel 3: 16–21. "For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem: thou shalt weep no more."—Isa. 30: 19. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Psa. 2: 6. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isa. 24: 23. "The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.'

Who can fail to see that such promises have not, and cannot be fulfilled in this present condition? All sorrow forever banished, and joy everlasting, the portion of the ransomed. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely, and this is his name whereby he shall be called: THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS."—Jer. 23: 5, 6. We have quite a full description of this kingdom, and the place of its locality, in the 37th of Ezekiel, and some clue to those referred to as "the house of Jacob," and "the twelve tribes of Israel." Jacob, one of the "ancients," had twelve sons, who were the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel. The house of Jacob, we suppose to represent the same thing as the house of Moses. Moses was faithful over all his house, during his leadership from Egypt to Canaan. "Christ, as a son over all his house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope unto the end." "The house of Jacob" is probably identical with "the twelve tribes of Israel," over whom the twelve apostles are to reign in the regeneration. That time is evidently the one alluded to in the chapter named. God promises to "take the children of Israel or Jacob, from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. . . . David my servant shall be king over them, and they all shall have one shepherd: and they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto [illegible] my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever, and my servant David shall be their prince forever."

A New Book.

For a long time I have been importuned to publish something in refutation of the opinion that to all the wicked "death is an eternal sleep," or that they will never rise (or "re-live" I believe the new-fangled word is) from the dead. I have been urged to discuss the matter, but I declined, because I am personally averse to discussions, and I never dispute with a preacher in his own pulpit, an editor in his own paper, or a woman in her own house. I did venture to publish two or three texts of Scripture on the point, in the Tract—"Forty Questions on Immortality," but my three and a half page tract called forth some three columns of review, was denounced as a "creed," etc. etc., in a style which was almost enough to alarm a timid young man like me.

In 1857 I wrote a statement of the Scriptures concerning future retribution, and also an exposition of those few texts, such as—"They are dead, they shall not live"; "They shall not see life"; "They shall sleep a perpetual sleep," etc., which are so warped as to contradict the teachings of prophets and apostles concerning the resurrection of the dead. Loving peace, and delighting not in contention, I kept the MSS. in my drawer, hoping that no occasion would arise for its publication. I found, however, that the question was forced upon me for discussion. I have been importuned by many preachers to publish my work. I have been told by opponents I dare not do it. One man, who, I am told, builds part of his reputation as a good preacher upon his repetition of a discourse he heard me preach on "faith, hope and charity," has been telling that no one could answer the arguments, that he had tripped me up, etc., etc. I have finally, after much prayer, concluded that it is duty to print the book. After thoroughly revising it, I have commenced the work. It is now being stereotyped, and will be done in a few weeks, if the Lord will. I am doing it upon the money of others, and trusting that the Lord may enable me to repay it soon. It will probably make 150 or 160 pages, and contain about as large an amount of matter as "The Model Church." I purpose to issue it very cheaply. If bound, single copies will be about 50 cts. In paper covers, 38 cents, or three copies, post paid, for one dollar. I will also give it freely to the poor, and will send copies to all who deny the resurrection of the unjust freely if they will send me their addresses, and inform me that they wish to read it. Persons whose friends have imbibed this opinion, may provide them with copies, or I will send them free on receipt of their addresses. I do not expect to make money out of it, and if the persons who have urged me to discuss the matter wish to have all the believers in that doctrine hear "the other side," let them give currency to this offer. The books will also be sent by express at $10 per hundred copies (much less than cost) to any who will send me the cash, with their orders, immediately. The money will be of service to me. Let orders be sent to me at once, as I need the means. The book will be got out in good style, and cheap beyond all precedent, for the purpose of warning men of a judgment to come! Let all orders be addressed as beneath.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts Suggested by "THOUGHTS ON GOVERNMENT," BY J. S. W., IN THE CRISIS OF JULY 3, 1861.

National churches may have a right to be, though they may not, in all respects, be perfect. If this be true, then it may be right that the church of Rome ought to be; then it ought to be sustained; for, unless it is sustained, it must cease to be. If it be wrong for a Christian to bear arms, it follows that, if Pope Pius be a Christian, he ought to resign his office. It also follows that every christian holding office in the church of Rome ought to resign. It is also true that every christian does wrong who, by his vote, puts a man into office in the church of Rome. It then is evident that, as the church of Rome ought to be sustained, wicked men should be in office from the greatest to the least. In case any one of these wicked officers should become a christian, he should leave the church of Rome at once by resigning, because, though the church of Rome should be, still christians should not sustain it. If we may pray for rulers, and God should so far regard our prayer as that these rulers in the church of Rome should become christians, they must cease to be, and let wicked men take their place; for a christain must not bear arms, and he must do this sometimes if he belong to the church of Rome that bears arms. We may thank God that Pope Pius IX. is an honest man; but, perchance, if he should be honest enough to be a christian, or rather a disciple of Christ, he must cease to be a Pope, because, if he becomes as good as we pray that he may be, he should not bear arms. We may take good care not to thank God for a christian Pope, lest by so doing we involve the monstrous absurdity of thanking the Lord for that which we condemn.

If what we have said be true, then we should try to prevent all christians from going into the church of Rome, and to have all who are now in it leave it at once. "Come out of her my people."—Rev. 18: 4. And as any one now in it may become a christian, we should tell him he should leave it, and let the wicked man take his place. And moreover, if the Pope should be an honest christian, he must resign his office and let an anti-christian take his place. If, moreover, he be almost a christian, he can remain, and we may thank the Lord that he is Pope, and pray for his success. This involves the idea that if Pope Pius IX. be a good man, he ought not to be Pope. It would then follow that the further he is from goodness, the greater is his right to be Pope. This is the kind of logic we should use in these perilous times.

P. S.—If the church of Rome is right, it should be sustained by all christians. War with carnal weapons is anti-christian, therefore if the church of Rome is right, it will not use them. As war with carnal weapons is anti-christian, there would be no war if all were christians. Hence he who aids or wages war is acting contrary to Christ, and should not be sustained by his disciples.

Pope Pius IX. requires his church to bear arms, therefore in this act he should not be sustained by christians; and when he becomes a christian, he will cease to make such requirements. J. PORTER.

Controversy.

BRO. WENDELL:—F. H. B., in his note at the foot of Bro. T. M. Preble's replication to my article in the previous Crisis, remarked that it was not "inserted to provoke controversy." Let me add that it was not written for that purpose. In saying this, I do not disparage controversy. Controversy, for the sake of controversy, is evil and that continually. But controversy having for its object the triumph of truth, is good, even as "salt is good." As salt is the great agency for preserving meat from putrefaction, so controversy is God's instrumentality for preserving truth. Our blessed Lord and Master, who is set forth in the Scriptures as an example for us, was an eminent controversialist. Paul's most important epistle—that to the Romans—is controversial, and the same element predominates in 1 and 2 Corinthians and Galatians. One of the holiest men of modern times, John Fletcher, achieved his greatest victories in the field of disputation.

One of our standing objections to the sectarianism of the orthodox churches is, that they refuse us a hearing. They promulge the vilest stuff that was ever misnamed argument against us, and we are not allowed to utter a word of reply. When your humble servant withdrew from the M. E. Church about two years ago, the Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal charged him with Swedenborgianism in the columns of his paper. I wrote to Dr. Stevens a short answer, in order that my true position might be understood by my friends, and all other interested readers of the paper, but it was not noticed. Then and there I followed the example of the Carthagenian chieftain, and (if I may use the expression) swore undying enmity, not to the M. E. Church, but to bigotry.

Those who have read the Storrs and Mattison discussion, will remember the contemptible course of the C. A. and J. in publishing the Professor's (?) attacks on his opponent, but rigidly shutting the door to a decent and "christian-like" response. With these and many other instances fresh in our memories, shall we ever commit ourselves to the same wicked policy? God forbid!

I would direct attention to the manly position of F. H. B., as shown in the last four points of his note.

For the Crisis.

To the Beloved Saints in Christ Jesus—Greeting.

None but those who form a part of the "chosen generation, the royal priesthood, the holy nation, and the peculiar people," that God hath called out of darkness, and enthroned in his marvellous light, that they might show forth the praises of their great Author, can understand the language of Canaan, or the dictation of one spiritual heart to another. Hence, were I to direct a most affectionate letter to the people of the world, those who have not been born of God, describing to them the joyous anticipation of my glorious inheritance with the saints in the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior, they would fail to understand me, and the precious pearl of so much price and beauty to me, would possess no worth or value to them.

Not so with you, my beloved brethren and sisters, who have tasted that the Lord was good. With the Psalmist I may call on you to "magnify the Lord with me and let us exalt his name together;" and you will be ready for the gracious work—you will respond to the kindly invitation, and tune afresh your harps of love in speaking forth the praises of our blessed Redeemer. I with you feel myself to be a pilgrim and stranger on the earth, having here no continuing or abiding home, but only tarrying in the borders of an enemy's land, awaiting my release at the coming of the blessed Savior. Mine has been no fairy path strewn with flowers—no blooming garden, dotted here and there with spacious arbors, where ever and anon I might sit down to rest; but an anxious and toilsome warfare has been the portion of my inheritance, with the imperative command upon me to keep continually climbing up the steep and rugged ascent of the mountain; and when in my life journey my feet have become way-worn and weary, faith, my constant guide, has kindly stepped in and lent wings, by the use of which I could still go forward and make progress in my upward pathway.

In the language of a graphic writer, I have learned, in my Father's dealings with me, that sweet are the uses of adversity; in God's hands indeed they are; when he puts his children into the furnace of affliction, it is that he may thoroughly purge away all their dross. And in the irregularities and unevenness of our health and fortune, we may be so strengthened as to turn our diseases into pearls. And God, in his wonderful wisdom and mercy toward us, makes the spiritual temptations and distresses of his people their necessary discipline for their highest good—the means for the greatest perfection and stability of their characters. This is, indeed, a wonderful transmutation. "God," says the holy Leighton, "hath many sharp-cutting instruments and rough files for the polishing of his jewels, and those he especially esteems, and means to make the most resplendant, he hath oftenest his tools upon."

Then, dear fellow pilgrims, let us not be discouraged, amid the continual prating of a corrupt heart within, and the fearful raging of the storm without. Our Master is working the crucible for us; and, though at times it appears heated one seven times hotter, yet when the image of the form of the fourth is wrought in the work, he will say it is enough, and we shall be released. And then the conflicts endured, the battles fought, and the victories gained through the blood of the Lamb; the dreary passages made in every generation through the valley of the shadow of death, will then be made known amid the disclosures of eternity, when the saints saved shall reveal to each other, for the glory of the Redeemer, the wonders of his grace in their individual experience. It is but here and there that the trials and triumphs of faith come to view in this world; but eternity will be full of such spiritual histories, and in every one's experience, however humble, there will be something reflecting peculiar glory to the adorable Savior. "Many are the pictures, unseen here, that are to be set in array in the future world, with the light of the divine attributes in Christ shining in and through them, to be studied and admired forever and ever." O, then, may we cheerfully toil on a little longer in the delightful service of our Divine Master, striving to make the world the better for our having lived in it, remembering the poor, relieving the oppressed, favoring virtue and frowning upon vice—living holy, separate and apart from the follies and fashions of the world, that, when our Master comes, whether it be in the first, the second, or the third watch, he may find us watching, and joyfully say unto us, "Blessed are those servants," etc.

Jesus Wept.

When? Was it ever his condition while on this earth he wandered, with no place to lay his head? Was it when he was mocked and buffeted, disowned and dishonored by those who professed to be his followers? Was it when they sought to kill him? Ah! my soul; not for himself did he weep, but for others. We see him weeping with Martha and Mary, when standing over the grave of Lazarus. O, what a friend! what a comforter was Jesus to those sad hearts in that dark hour! When the brother they so dearly loved was torn from their fond embrace by the cruel and most terrible enemy, death, how sweetly did the words of that sympathiser fall upon their ears. But that was not all. He even restored to them their brother, brought him to lift again, and they once more heard his sweet voice. O how must they have loved him then. "Jesus wept." O, what a thought. Jesus, the Son of an Almighty God, wept, and for poor, weak, wretched mortals like us! O, what love and sympathy reigned in that heart! How it flowed out in every work he performed, every word he spoke, and every look he gave. How different from the kings and nobles of this world was Jesus. He was meek, lowly, humble and sympathetic; they are proud, lofty and unfeeling. Yet Jesus is far greater than they. "Jesus wept." What consolation does the christian derive from meditating on these words. How he wept over Jerusalem, that unbelieving city! After they had rejected him he cried, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto you, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathers her brood under her wings, and ye would not."

Jesus was a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin. He died that we might live. On the cross he cried, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." His love was inexhaustible. Though he died, he rose again, for the justification and life of his people. That same Jesus now lives, interceding for saints and poor sinners too. He loves still. He sympathizes yet; and how the thought fills the christian's heart with peace, as he sojourns in the land of sorrows. And he is now beseeching sinners to turn from the broad, destroying way in which they go, to walk in the narrow way that leads to life eternal. What love is like unto the love of Christ? Truly, "what love hath the Father bestowed upon us."

From the Bible Examiner.

The Day of Rest.

A LECTURE BY REV. H. H. DOBNEY, ENGLAND.

And this brings us to consider THE THIRD FORM WHICH THE IDEA ASSUMES.

Under Christianity, then, we have done with Jewish Sabbaths, as such, whether Sabbatic days, or weeks, or years. In truth, Gentiles never had to do therewith. No part of Judaism, as such, ever had any claim on us, being Gentiles, and much more being Christians. So that whatever pleas we employ for the observance of a day of sacred rest, we must take good heed not to base them on Jewish law.

But here I must fairly meet the argument which is so very commonly employed, that the command, to "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is one of the Ten Commandments; a part of the moral law, and not the ceremonial; and that the moral law is, of course, as such, of perpetual obligation. Now the distinction between moral and ceremonial is sound. But it is not correct to call the ten commandments "the moral law," as is so commonly, yet I must be permitted to add, unreflectingly done. And though it may appear a digression, yet it is essential that I make this plain.

Why, then, were the famous Ten spoken by the mouth of the Lord, immediately to the people, and subsequently traced by the finger of God on stone tablets, while all the rest of the law, containing more than three hundred precepts, was merely delivered through Moses?

Let Scripture be its own interpreter. It needs no aid of mine. To the law and to the testimony. Turn to the account in Ex. 20, and see for yourselves. You will find that when the people had listened to the awful voice during its distinct articulation of the first few sentences, listened with terror, indeed, from the first, that terror so completely took possession of their souls, that they—may I say, interrupted the solemn proceedings?—they drew back from the base of the mountain; "They removed, and stood afar off; and they said to Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die." And the Holy and Compassionate One condescended to their fears, and used Moses as the medium for conveying the rest of his will to the people. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Thus thou shalt say unto the children of Israel," etc. And in Deut. 5: 23–28, Moses repeats to the people this fact, as the reason why the Lord, when he had spoken the words of these ten commandments "added no more." And, as having been thus spoken in the hearing of the people, they were written on tables of stone as a permanent record and memorial of the fact that God had really spoken to them, and were laid up in "the ark of testimony," or "the ark of witness," accordingly. Seeing, then, that this is the simple historical account of the matter, I do not see how we can soundly distinguish and mark off these ten in particular from all the rest, and designate them alone, emphatically, "the moral law."

But there are still weightier reasons. It is surely not correct to say that these ten, by themselves, are a summary of moral law, for the chief of all the commands, that which lies at the basis of all, is not among them. Christ is our Master, let us "hear him." When, then, our Lord was asked, Which is the great commandment in the law? he quoted not from the ten, but from Deut. 6: 5. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc.; and said, This is the first and great commandment. Moreover he added, And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself (from Lev. 19: 18.) And then he laid down the grand doctrine, On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. How is it then that we are so addicted, in the face of Christ's own teaching, to call the decalogue "the moral law," and to give it as a complete and satisfactory summary? Nor should it be forgotten that when James singles out one of the many laws of old, and calls it the very prince, or king, of laws, "the royal law," he also quotes this from Leviticus, not any one of the ten. Truly, the time ought to be come in which Christians, at least, might be able to adopt from Scripture a happier compendium than that which such multitudes inconsiderately call "THE commandments."

We are conducted to the same conclusion, also, by the opening words of the decalogue, which were plainly the preface, not merely to the ten commandments, but to the whole law given to Israel, viz: "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." As, also, by the peculiar promise with which the fifth commandment, as properly concluding the first table (for it is evident that this really belongs to the first, and not the second table) is wound up, viz: "that thy days may be long in the land (of Canaan) which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

I conclude, then, that the ten commandments are an integral and inseparable part of the law given to Israel. All of them, indeed, save that of the Sabbath, are taken up into Christianity, but in a far more elevated and spiritual manner; of which the Sermon on the Mount (and which bears the same relation to Christianity as the law from Sinai does to Judaism) may stand as an illustration. "It was said to them of old time," etc., "but I say unto you," etc. See Matt. 5: 21–27, etc.

To resume. Having done with the Mosaic law, and a "new and better covenant" having been introduced, we are prepared to find a new development of the original idea. It was "the first day of the week" when our Lord rose from the dead, and showed himself to his disciples. This was the day prophetically announced as "the day which the Lord hath made." A new era was inaugurated. On the next "first day of the week" he met them again. And, as soon as things had settled down into form, after his ascension, we find the disciples of Christ accustomed to meet on the first day of the week, "to break bread," etc. There are, however, but three distinct passages in the New Testament from which we deduce this; but, what with our own Christian consciousness, and sense of need, and the testimony of Pliny, etc., we feel an unshaken confidence in the fact. The texts are Acts 20: 7, and 1 Cor. 16: 2, and Rev. 1: 10, in which last, the term employed is, "the Lord's day," and which fairly shows that, already, there was a day so designated, and so known. And from that time to the present, the Church of Christ, however divided, has welcomed each returning Lord's day with holy delight. But the conversion of the Christian's day of rest and social worship into a Jewish Sabbath, which was based on positive enactment, and guarded by the penalty of death, is not only a mistake in itself, but grows out of a misapprehension of the genius or spirit of Christianity. Nor is it correct to say that simply a change of day has occurred from the seventh to the first. There is nothing—that I know of, at least—to sufficiently bear the weight of this assertion. Nor is it necessary to look for evidence. The truth lies much deeper. Is a religion intended to be universal—or as the apostle says, "for obedience to the faith among all nations"—the enforcement of a strict outward observance of every seventh day on all the first Gentile converts, as soon as they became such, in the cities of Greece and Rome and every where throughout the ancient world, would have been fatal to its spread. A law which was possible and most merciful to a united and consenting nation, like the small nation of the Jews, would have been an impossibility to the great majority of converts in the first century. But true living Christianity is, to a great extent, superior to, and independent of, outward rites and forms. It consecrates, not a portion of our time only, but the whole of it; not here and there a solitary spot, but makes all things holy. The glorious truth which, by the Gospel, came to the consciences and hearts of men, and made them "new creatures," was bound up in no rigid forms that belonged to the outward only. As the Savior said, "the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life," "the flesh profiteth nothing." "I am come that they may have LIFE, and that they may have it more abundantly." If the heart were right, the life would be pure and sweet and noble. All real evil, all that was in itself morally wrong (as distinct from conventional, ceremonial, or artificial wrong) would be earnestly abhorred as by a holy instinct, wherever the "law was written on the heart," wherever men were turned "from darkness to light," from the kingdom of Satan to the kingdom of God's dear Son. And this kingdom did not consist in outward forms and observances; or, as the apostle says, "not in meats and drinks, but in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." Every convert became, in a new and higher sense, a son of God; and, conscious of the relationship, called God, Abba! Dear Father. And earnestly imbibing the very spirit of "him that had loved them, and given himself for them," and the mind of Christ Jesus their Lord being in them, each humbly but confidently said after him, "I delight to do thy will, O God, yea, thy law is within my heart." Truly they were "called to liberty." They were "not under the law:" had "not received the spirit of bondage again, (which was the characteristic of Judaism,) but the spirit of adoption," i. e., a filial spirit. Thus frankly treated, not as servants but as sons, they felt within themselves how much mightier was love than law; or, law as an inward impulse than as an outward injunction. They took the very cross as their dearest symbol, and were ready to lay down their lives for Him whose self-sacrificing love had consummated itself on Calvary; and by the noble voluntary devotedness of their whole selves to Christ and goodness, justified the apostle in his apparently bold but really profound assertion, "knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man." 1 Tim. 1: 9, or as in Rom. 7: 6, "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."

This in general. But now for its bearing on the relation of Gentiles to any particular article of the Jewish law, however valuable in itself. The Christian church at Antioch, the very first of all the Gentile churches (the "Mother Church," therefore, of all our churches, since that at Jerusalem was composed of Jews only) was gathered by certain private and unofficial disciples, that were scatterrd abroad by the persecution that arose on the death of Stephen. Acts 11. From this church, Paul was sent out on his first missionary tour, and was highly successful in gathering together, in most places he visited, little bands of converts to Christ, i. e., churches, which were composed chiefly of Gentiles. Ultimately he returned to Antioch, to report to the church which had sent him forth (Acts 14;) and while there, certain men came from Jerusalem, insisting on these Gentile Christians becoming identified with the Jewish church by circumcision. Whereupon the entire question came up, "What is the relation of the Gentile church to the law of Moses?" a question which includes the one we are engaged with. A deputation was sent from the church at Antioch "to the Apostles and Elders" at Jerusalem, Acts 15, which deputation was "received by the church and the Apostles and Elders," etc.; and this now, but most inconceivably important question was canvassed before "all the multitude" of believers, and the result was a formal document, in the shape of an Epistle from the collective church at Jerusalem, (being Jews,) thus—"The apostles, and elders and brethren, send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia. . . . For it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which, if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well." And the church at Antioch "rejoiced for the consolation." One only of these four things, the last, is strictly moral, and the mention of it only too fearfully needed in those days of idolatry; the abstinence from meats offered to idols was prudentially necessary to new converts from idolatry, lest they should be re-entangled in their own superstitions; and the other two seem adopted as articles of peace and concord, in relation to the pious Jews amongst them. Surely the Sabbath must have been mentioned here, had the assembled apostles and elders, with the church, deemed it binding, as a law, on Gentile Christians.

But more formidable attempts were soon made to interweave the old system with the new; and the efforts of the Judaisers in the various churches to enforce the observance of Mosaic customs in reference to particular times and seasons (as well as other things,) compelled that great Apostle, who was especially the Apostle to the Gentiles, to combat the mischievous endeavor. And there are three passages in Epistles of his that demand our thoughtful consideration. The first is Rom. 14: 5, "One man esteemeth (selects for honor) one day above another day; another man esteemeth every day. Let every man be fully persuaded (satisfied) in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord doth he not regard it." On which there is a note in Alford's Greek Testament to this effect: "It is an interesting question, what indication is here found of the observance or non-observance of a day of obligation in the apostolic times. The apostle decides nothing: leaving every man's own mind to guide him in the point. He classes the observance or non-observance of particular days with the eating or abstaining from particular meats. In both cases he is concerned with things which he evidently treats as of absolute indifference in themselves. Now the question is, supposing the divine obligation of one day in seven to have been recognized by him in any form, could he have thus spoken? The obvious inference from his strain of argument is that he knew of no such obligation, but believed all times and days to be, to the Christian strong in faith, alike. I do not see how the passage can be otherwise understood. If any one day in the week were invested with the sacred character of the Sabbath, it would have been wholly impossible for the apostle to commend or uphold the man who judged all days worthy of equal honor,—who, as in v. 6, paid no regard to the (any) day. He must have visited him with his strongest disapprobation, as violating a command of God. I therefore infer that Sabbatical obligation to keep any day, whether seventh or first, was not recognized in apostolic times."

The second passage is that in Gal. 4: 9, 10.—"But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years: (the Sabbatic seasons of the old Jewish law.) I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Their first spiritualism was degenerating into ceremonialism. "Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" Then again, 4: 21.—"Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For," etc. So then, brethren, we (Christians) are not children of the bondwoman (the Jewish church) but of the free. Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us (even Paul and his brethren of the Jews) free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (i. e. the Mosaic law; see Acts 15: 10.)

The third passage is Col. 2: 16, 17. In v. 14, the apostle says, Christ hath "blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us (viz: the entire Mosaic law,) which was contrary to us, and took it out of the war, nailing it to his cross. Let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath: which things are a shadow of things to come; but the body (substance) is of Christ." Christ then is the reality of all that was previously but shadowed forth; as he "is our passover," and "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," so is he "our peace," and our "rest." CHRIST IS OUR SABBATH; as himself said, "Come unto me all ye that labor, and I will give you rest."

But I must hasten to a close, leaving unsaid, on this part of our subject, more than I have said; and regretting also that I must be content to treat what remains with undue brevity.

(Concluded next week.)

Good Resolutions.

1. I will daily pray in secret.
2. I will daily pray in my family.
3. I will daily read God's word with a prayerful desire to learn his will.
4. I will attend all the meetings appointed by the church, unless the providence of God otherwise direct.
5. I will pray every day that God will bless his truth to the conviction and conversion of sinners.
6. I will do what I can by my pecuniary ability to promote the Redeemer's kingdom.
7. I will do what I can in the Sabbath school to further the salvation of the rising generation.
8. I will sincerely desire and earnestly pray for the salvation of the children and youth committed to my care.
9. I will strive to be at peace with all who love Christ.
10. I will be as tender of the reputation of a brother or sister as of my own.
11. I will never speak evil of a brother, and if I am displeased with him, I will follow the gospel rule, and tell him my feelings between him and myself alone.
12. I will never visit any place of amusement or social pleasure on which I cannot first ask God's blessing, and where I may not expect his guidance.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Everlasting Love.

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." —Jer. 31: 3.

I love thee, O my dearest Lord!
I long thy grace to know!
I muse upon thy saving word
While waiting here below.

I know it is no love of mine
Which glows within my breast:
It comes from thee, 'tis part of thine,
A holy, heavenly guest.

For with an everlasting love
Thou drawest me to thee;
Lord, I am thine, and only thine
I ever wish to be.

'Tis little that I do to prove
That I belong to thee;
Accept the faith that works by love,
Which thou alone canst see.

And may that everlasting love
Still draw me to thy side,
Until at last I ever shall
Within that love abide. H. R. P.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 6.

The "house of Jacob," over which the son of David shall reign "forever," is spoken of in the 15th verse of Obadiah and associated with Mount Zion, the locale of the throne. "But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." After speaking further of the inheritance assigned to the children of Israel, the subject is closed with this language: "And saviours shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau, and the kingdom shall be the Lord's." This defines the time when this deliverance shall be wrought, and the house of Jacob possess their inheritance; it is when the kingdom is the Lord's. Not until then will those precious covenant promises made with Abraham, and renewed with Isaac and Jacob, be fulfilled. Then shall they inherit the land forever; it shall be given for an everlasting possession. When the Lord riseth up out of his holy habitation, where he has been the high priest, offering his own blood as an atonement for sin, he will return and dwell at Mount Zion, and then shall he inherit Judah, his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Zech. 2: 10–13.

In the 37th of Ezekiel, to which reference has already been made, after declaring that the children of Israel shall be gathered from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and brought into their own land, cleansed from their iniquities and idols, David their king forever, the land promised them forever, he then states that he will make an everlasting covenant with them, and multiply them, and set his sanctuary in the midst of them forever. His tabernacle also will be place among them, and he will be their God, and they shall be his people. How evident it is that Jesus referred to this very time, when he calls himself the good Shepherd, and says that he has other sheep which are not of the Jewish fold; them he must bring, and then there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. How evident, also, that the same period is referred to in the 21st of Revelations,—"Behold the tabernacle of God is with men," etc. The prophet Ezekiel describes an eternal state of blessedness, and so does the Revelator.

In the 36th chapter of Ezekiel we find the same class of promises made to the dispersed house of Israel or Jacob—promises that they shall be gathered from among all nations whither they have been scattered, and brought into their own land; and then shall they be sprinkled with clean water, and cleansed from all their filthiness, and all their idols, and a new heart shall be given them, and a new spirit be put within them, and they shall keep the statutes of the Lord. Not for their sakes will the Lord do this, but for his holy name's sake, and for the sake of the covenant made with their fathers. He then tells them of the blessings they shall receive in the land, declaring that it shall be redeemed from its desolation, and made like the garden of Eden. [illegible] identical prophecies respecting the restoration, when the law of God shall be written in their hearts, and they shall be his people. Jer. 31: 31, 34. And the same house of Judah and of Israel is alluded to in the 8th chapter of Hebrews.

We would not know from some of these prophecies the time when they were to be fulfilled, but by collecting them together, we can locate them. Taking Jeremiah alone, we could not tell when this law would be written in the heart; but Ezekiel designates it as the time when they are gathered out of all countries, and brought into their own land, and we have no right to locate it elsewhere. Please read carefully the 34th chapter of Ezekiel and compare with those scriptures already quoted. Here Christ, the good Shepherd, goes after his stray sheep, and delivers them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day of Israel's dispersion, and he separates "them out from the people, and gathers them from the countries, and brings them back into their own land, and feeds them upon the mountains of Israel, in a fat pasture." Here is the promise also: "I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them." All these promises centre to one given point. They are not indefinite and uncertain, for "I the Lord have spoken it, and I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land, and they shall dwell safely, and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessings. The tree of the field shall yield her fruit, the earth shall yield her increase; they shall be safe in their land; they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, they shall know that I am the Lord when I have broken the bonds of their yoke and delivered them. I will raise up for them a plant of renown; they shall no more hunger, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more."

Who are these to whom the Lord makes such gracious promises? The Gentiles who boasted against the branches?—who have said, "The Lord hath cast off his people whom he foreknew?" Nay, verily. They constitute not the "house of Jacob," over whom the Lord God shall reign forever. It is the scattered, the down-trodden, the oppressed, the polluted, the idolatrous Israelite who is gathered "out from all countries," separated "from the people," brought into the land given their fathers, wherein their fathers dwelt; and there are they cleansed from their filthiness and idols, receive a new heart, a new spirit, a new covenant, and dwell forever in the promised inheritance; and the heathen, the Gentiles who despised them, shall know that the Lord doeth all these things, and doth "sanctify Israel." M. D. W.

The Convicting Work of the Spirit.

In contributing my mite toward shedding light on the contested points about the Spirit, and baptism, I will give another extract from the Christian Freeman, of which I have spoken, as illustrating my views.

"By convicting, or quickening influence of the Spirit, I mean those influences that are first in the soul, and preliminary to all the other higher forms of spiritual agency. It means Christ standing at the door of the heart and knocking for admittance—not yet admitted. It includes such influences as are exerted upon the soul when dead in trespasses and sins. Changing the figure, it indicates that quickening which takes place previous to, and is order to conversion. Every man knows from his own experience, that into the midst of his passions, lusts, hatred, there comes at times a voice that speaks of right, duty, and a perfect life;—a voice like that of John the Baptist in the wilderness, crying within him, 'Repent! flee from the wrath to come!' This is the Spirit striving against the flesh; the 'Father drawing unto the Son,' (John 6: 44.) It is man's fearful privilege to yield to this holy Advocate, or resist and grieve him. Under this head falls the very explicit passage: 'When the Comforter is come, he will convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment,' (John 16: 8). Also 1 Thess. 1: 5—'Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the holy Spirit'; 'Lydia's heart was opened; Paul planted; God giveth the increase,' etc."

After giving much other proof on this point, and also on the regenerating, and confirming or sanctifying work of the Spirit, the writer (President Russell) concludes thus:

"There are two conclusions, corrective of errors among us, furnished by the foregoing survey of the Scriptures:

"1. Many teachers in the Reformation speak of man as receiving the Spirit, or being influenced by him, only after the remission of sins; as if the Spirit was a mere bounty bestowed upon man after he had fought his way, single handed, through [illegible] hosts of wicked spirits over the soul. We could not believe, for a long time, that any portion of any religious body would maintain any such unscriptural position. But we have been told, by good authority in the Reformation, that the holy Spirit exerts no direct power in cleansing man from sin. And time and again we have heard that the Spirit operates upon man only after remission of sins, which is after baptism—teaching plainly that deliverance from sin takes place anterior to any influence of the Spirit, except 'through the word.' On the contrary, we have seen, in the above passages, that the chief aim of the Spirit's work is, to destroy in man the power of sin—to free the soul from the tyranny of the 'law in the members that bringeth into captivity the law of the mind.' (Rom. 7: 23);—that its office is to quicken, (convict) regenerate, and perfect man for a state of holiness, 'without which no man shall see God.'

"2. It is a common practice among us, to disprove that the Spirit operates upon the sinner, by quoting passages that speak of his being given to the obedient believer! —the suppressed premise here being, that this latter class of persons are the only ones spoken of in the Bible as coming under the influence of the Spirit. 'Because ye are sons (not to make ye sons, my they) God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father.' The fallacy in this kind of argumentation, it will be at once seen, is that of quoting only a part of the teaching of the Bible, on the subject under consideration—quoting from one class of passages only, and neglecting the two remaining, a most one-sided and merely fragmentary result being reached by this process. It is thus that a hungry theory, like a beast of prey, enters the fair domain of Scripture, and consumes everything but its own kind. Reasoning in the same way, we might prove that Christ is not our intercessor, because he is said to be our sacrifice! But we know that both sets of passages are true, and we do not think of merging one into the other. The holy Spirit may exercise different offices. He is an Advocate to plead God's cause with the heart, when it yields to his pleadings, and an in-dweller in it, to build it up in righteousness. We cannot avoid the three-fold conclusion concerning the work of the Spirit, if we let every Scripture declaration stand fast in its own integrity, and set them side by side—not let one class swallow up another, in order to answer the requirements of a theory. A full and honest induction of all the texts that bear upon this subject will give us the whole truth, and not a fragment of it; and this is the only genuine way of taking the Bible as our guide."

Among the valuable thoughts and information contained in the above extract, one should be specially noticed, namely—when a doctrine, sect, or theory is started, which is generally done by some noted leader, or paper, the followers get by heart a class of texts which seem to favor their views, and they cannot, or will not carefully study passages which plainly oppose them. Here lies the great cause of error among good men. Such is the sad weakness of man, that he too much resembles the horse that that sees a hole in a bridge, and can see nothing else, so runs into the ditch. But there is sin in this course, as self-interest, self-conceit, idleness, or pride of party, etc., are often mixed with love and zeal for truth. Noted teachers and inventors of new theories should be criticised more, and trusted less. As the views named above, and others related to them, are not confined to disciple brethren, we can see we have errors to correct, besides neglect of prophecies and the teaching of endless misery. Surely we have urgent reasons to take heed to the direction of James—"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . and it shall be given him." Here I meant to close, but this text reminds me of the logical consequence of one error—why "ask of God" if he never gives any help but the word? J. BLAIN.

Dark Ages and Meteoric Showers.

Without intending to treat upon the subject in its prophetic bearings at present, I propose to give a few facts, from the many that may be cited, based upon the most reliable historic dates, for the consideration of others, hoping thereby to awaken investigation in this direction.

Many facts are cited in reference to the memorable dark day of 1780, regarding the intensity and duration of the darkness, in particular localities; and from extracts made from various sources, it appears as readily accounted for, upon natural principles—meteorological principles—as many of the phenomena of nature we daily witness; nor was it a remarkably notable day of its kind, as a few extracts will soon suffice to show.

The late Alexander Von Humboldt, doubtless the most profound physicist of our age, in his treatise upon Areolites, observes (Cosmos, Vol. I, page 132:) "Remarkable obscurations of the sun's disk, during which the stars have been seen at mid-day, (as, for instance, in the obscuration of 1547, which continued for three days [illegible]) owing either to a meteoric cause, or to a black cloud formed by the sooty exhalations of the solar body. The shorter obscurations of 1090 and 1208, which continued, the one only three, and the other six hours, were supposed by Chladni and Schnurrer to be occasioned by the passage of meteoric masses before the sun's disk. Since the period that streams of meteoric shooting stars were first considered with reference to the direction of their orbit as a closed ring, the epochs of these mysterious celestial phenomena have been observed to present a remarkable connection with the regular recurrence of swarms of shooting stars. Adolph Erman has evinced great acuteness of mind in his accurate investigation of the facts hitherto observed on this subject, and his researches have enabled him to discover the connection of the sun's conjunction with the August asteroids on the 12th of May, the latter period corresponding with the days of St. Mamert (May 11th, St. Pancras (May 12th,) and St. Servatius, (May 13th,) which, according to popular belief, were accounted 'cold days.'"

The dark day of 1780, it will be observed, occurred in May, but is passed unmentioned in this incidental notice of dark days by Humboldt, with many others that history records; although, in the localities where they occurred, they were regarded at the time with intense awe. We have already seen that the dark day of 1780 was not very much more noted, nor productive of much greater consternation than many that had preceded it; nor is it true that no reasonable cause has been assigned for its and their occurrence. An adequate discussion of the principles however, upon which these obscurations occur, would occupy several columns and need not now be made.

Meteoric showers, or the "falling of stars," are not entirely of very recent occurrence. "On the 25th of April, 1095, 'innumerable eyes in France saw stars falling from heaven as thickly as hail,' and this occurrence was regarded by the Council of Clermont as indicative of the great movement in Christendom." Humboldt again observes "Among periodic falls, the most celebrated is that known as the November phenomenon, occurring from about the 12th to the 14th of November, and that of the festival of St. Lawrence (the 10th of August), whose 'fiery tears' were noticed in former times (tenth century) in a church calendar of England, no less than in old traditionary legends, as a meteorological event of constant recurrence." Shooting stars are compared by ancient Arabian writers to "swarms of locusts." In 1766 we have a record of a remarkable shower of falling stars, or aerolites, taking place at Quito, South America, during which the inhabitants endeavored to appease heaven by religious processions. In 1797, also, a great number of aerolites fell in the same city, shortly before the terrible earthquake of Riobamba, and within a century between twenty and thirty of these remarkable meteoric showers have occurred in different parts of the world, of which there is authentic account, and there seems to be no reason for supposing that these storms have been more frequent during this period than in previous times. The attention of modern scientists has been largely directed to these bodies during the last fifty years; their origin has been investigated, and their appearances carefully noted, till their occurrence can be predicted by the careful cosmographer with almost as much certainty as the astronomer can predict the return of a comet, whose orbit and periodic time have been calculated, or the occurrence of an eclipse. Several epoch have been discovered, occurring at certain times of every year, during which these bodies are much more numerous than at other times; also that the origin of these bodies has considerable connection with the aurora borealis, earthquakes and eruptions of volcanoes, after occurring simultaneously with them; and the obscuration of the sun in "dark days" seems to be sometimes occasioned by the transit of non-luminous meteoric bodies across its disk; although Dr. Webster believes the obscurity of May 17th, 1780, to have been caused by the presence of dust in the atmosphere, which, it seems quite probable, might have been the case.

Hence it appears that accounts of dark days are not of unfrequent occurrence in history—always local, first in one part of the world and then in another, though more frequent in some parts than others; that showers of falling stars are known to have occurred many times prior to 1799, and, even centuries in the past; and, although looked upon with such fear by the ignorant, and regarded by mankind in gen[illegible] with almost as much certainty of correctness as for an eclipse, or the appearance of a comet at its appointed time; yet there are problems connected with their origin yet to be solved, which are continually receiving the closest attention of the most eminent philosophers of our own country and of Europe.

That so little appears to be known by people in general concerning the occurrence of these phenomena in times past, and of their origin, has led me to give the facts above stated. Had I time, I would like to treat the subject more in detail, and present my views upon its scriptural bearings.

Misapprehension.

BRO. WENDELL:—I would call attention to the following language: "Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." This is sometimes emphasized, as if to convey the idea of present lookers on, gathered around them in great numbers as a cloud, to whom he and his brethren were visible, but who were not visible to them. This is the mistake. Doubtless, all believe the witnesses of which he speaks are those enumerated in chapter 11. They were Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Rahab, Gideon, and numerous others, of whom he says time would fail him to speak. Thus he arrayed them like a cloud around his brethren; he speaks of their wonderful works, accomplished by their faith. But how did Paul know of all these things but from their affidavits? He, like a good lawyer, lays down his position thus "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Then he arrays his evidence, his testimonies, or, if you please, his witnesses, substantiating this position till we come to the end of chapter 11. Then he says, they all obtained a good report by this faith, but did not obtain the better things provided in the promise, nor cannot without us (all the church), nor be made perfect until the perfecting day arrives. Then he adds, "Wherefore (for this cause) seeing (from what I have written that) we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," (or cloud of evidences, or cloud of testimonies), let us lay aside every weight, * * looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith," etc., "lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds."

Now what is there in all this which appears in any way like "supporting a belief in the conscious existence of spirits" after death? Does the apostle intimate that any, or all of those worthies, or their spirits, were actually surrounding and looking upon them? No, nothing of the kind; but his "cloud" was brought from the record of the Old Testament. Now a written affidavit read in court is as much a witness as though he were personally arrayed on the stand. Thus Paul arrayed a cloud of them in his letter. Yours, hoping for grace to be courteous to all, and also zealous for the truth. O. D. GIBSON.

Houghtonville, Vt., July 21, '61.

P. S. I had supposed it an essential element of a witness to testify or give in testimony. It seems D. B. disclaims what he calls "the essential idea" of Spiritualism, i. e., communication with the dead. How does he reconcile this with his idea of Paul's being compassed with conscious spirit witnesses? Can that which cannot testify or communicate be a witness?

Remarks to Sunday School Teachers.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."—ECCL. 11: 6.

If you love God, you will wish to comply with all of his demands, as far as it is in your power so to do. There cannot be found a commandment better adapted to the work of teaching than the one I have quoted. The scholars are in the morning of life; their hearts are tender; the Holy Spirit operating upon them, inspires them with that propensity which prompts them to attend, and eagerly listen to divine truths, when they are imparted in an agreeable manner. You probably recollect reading the parable of the sower, and its exposition, Matt. 13: 3–24. Teachers occupy the same position toward scholars that the sower did to the earth in that parable. The hearts of the children are the ground; the word of God the seed. The seed sown now meet with the same results that they did then.

Teachers often get discouraged, when they consider that their expectations are liable to end in disappointment, instead of an abundant harvest; but suppose that when that sower had looked upon the [illegible] stead of such reasoning, he went about the work in earnest; not knowing which might prosper, or whether all would be alike good: for his reward, he received from "some seed an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold."

Teachers should exert all their powers in endeavoring to impress Bible truths on the hearts of their pupils, in order to prevent any of the seed from becoming worthless. The first class of seeds fell by the way-side; then came the wicked one and caught them away. To guard against such an event, explain, to the best of your ability, the crafty maliciousness of Satan, who whispers to them that they must not attend to their teachers' instructions, or they will lose the friendship of their thoughtless associates.

The second class of seeds were those that fell upon stony places; they sprung up without root; were scorched by the sun and withered away. We see this class exemplified by children in times of religious excitement, their feelings being easily wrought upon, and only knowing from the word of God their need of religion, they mistake excitement for enjoyment, until they are compelled to endure tribulation; when, not fully understanding the Scriptures, and so having no solid foundation, they turn aside and wither amid the scorching rays of the sun. To remedy this evil, allow the children to study out those passages that state most plainly the work of conversion, and explain to them the mean- of the words faith, repentance, confession, etc., and the phrases, "a new creature in Chrirst," and "being justified by his blood."

The third kind of seeds are represented by those scholars who pay good attention to good advice, and become converted, and for a while they bring forth fruit, and enjoy the approving smile of their heavenly Parent; but temptation overtakes them, they are deceived by its appearance, and neglect to perform their duties, and soon "blindness of mind" and "hardness of heart" choke up their growth. To prevent such a sad result, let each teacher faithfully instil into the minds of the class the warnings contained in the gospel against such as, having started for the Kingdom, "draw back." Heb. 10: 38, 39. Luke 9: 62. Let them also learn that religion consists in "overcoming all temptation," and "enduring unto the end," and that such only can be saved.

In your conversation with the scholars, engage their attention, and show them that you are interested in their spiritual welfare; talk to them personally and pointedly of their duties to God and themselves. By so doing, you will gain their respect, confidence and affection; and "in due time you shall reap if you faint not." When you have seen those with whom you have labored faithfully growing up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," Eph. 6: 4, and yielding the peaceable "fruits of righteousness," some even a hundred fold, it will agreeably surprise you when you reflect that they were once unconverted, but have become, through the blessing of God on your labors, like a mighty oak, under which you may repose. Then, teachers, toil, pray and struggle "yet a little longer," and you shall have many stars in your crown of rejoicing in that day when you, who went forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall return again with rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you." Ps. 126: 6. H. S. P.

For the Crisis.

Minnesota.

BRO. WENDELL:—I have often been requested to write through the Crisis, and when I think how pleased I am to hear from the brethren, I have thought perhaps it may be duty for me to write a little. Have been here in Minnesota upwards of five years; have had a great many good seasons, and have preached a great deal through this section. I have ever tried to hold up the gospel in its true light. I find some warm hearts that love the truth; still, there is and has been much opposition. But some will believe their Bibles in spite of those who "turn to fables." It may be just to say, that I find some of the ministry that are not satisfied with their position; they honestly own that they are bound by their creeds. O, I would that all such would come out in the blazing light of the gospel. I would that men every where would see and confess the glorious truth of eternal life only through Christ, and the soul-cheering truth of the speedy establishment of the kingdom of God "under the whole heaven."

A little more about Minnesota. Here is a great field of labor; but [illegible] all that I can. Doors are open all around, and the interest is on the increase. Our Quarterly Conference, in June, in Winona Co., was a good one, but the weather was bad. I wish to say to the brethren in the east, with whom I have labored, that they are remembered with much affection. I hope to meet them in the Kingdom with all the redeemed. Brethren and friends in Minnesota desiring my labors with them, can address me, and, if possible, I will try to meet with them and preach the word. My object is to labor where I can do the most good. My Post Office address is St. Charles, Winona Co., Minnesota.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 11.

Often since identifying myself with the Second Advent people have I been admonished by the inexperienced that, if I lived devoted and maintained those views, I should not be able to remain with the church. But the love I had for it, (a little sectarian,) and the confidence reposed in those loved ones, caused me to resist at once the idea as national, unnecessary, and unchristian. And with me it is still a query, why the humble, devoted christian cannot peaceably remain, the same loved and loving member of the church, though differing somewhat in theology, yet with equal chances of right.

I would pass over in silence the unfriendly treatment of mankind, if it were not an additional proof and fulfillment of the declaration, "All things work together for good to them that love God"; and, too, that I had much rather remember and dwell upon the dealings of God with me than man. However much my deportment might have merited it, yet up to this time there had not by the church been brought an accusation against me for the twenty-five years or more I had stood a member.

One afternoon, a few months after I had spoken out the "peculiar views," the pastor called, and, after the usual salutation, enquiry was made with regard to the prosperity and advancement of the cause of Christ in the vicinity. He replied, "rather poor." After a moment's silence, I suggested that it was probably in consequence of a great lack of love to God and one another. He bowed assent, and with a peculiar expression of countenance and voice added, "I am thinking that you are involved in the same difficulty." "I may be," said I: "any one in particular that you know of?" "Yes," said he, hesitatingly, and mentioned the name of a person, a professor of religion, to be sure, but well known by those familiar to be more fond of jewelry, dress, and the society of the gay, thoughtless and fashionable, than the Bible, closet, prayer-meeting and christian society. For a moment I was astonished, but enquired the accusation. He said, "the want of love, avoiding her society, and refusing to associate with her." Still more struck with the manner and nature of the complaint, but soon perceiving the design, I acknowledged the fact, and gave my reasons, which were these: I was responsible for my time, as a talent; consequently, the influence I exerted in the world depended in a great measure upon the choice of associates and the society in which I moved. Should she repent and give evidence of true piety, I can love, respect, and associate with her, as with other christians; but till then, I feel justified in the course pursued. I [illegible] what he wished me to do? He replied, "go and make up with her, and be good friends." I replied, that I hold no [illegible] ness or ill-will against her, nor [illegible] ever—could enjoy a meeting as well [illegible] presence as out of it. [illegible]

Everlasting Love.

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." —Jer. 31: 3.

I love thee, O my dearest Lord!
I long thy grace to know!
I muse upon thy saving word
While waiting here below.

I know it is no love of mine
Which glows within my breast:
It comes from thee, 'tis part of thine,
A holy, heavenly guest.

For with an everlasting love
Thou drewest me to thee;
Lord, I am thine, and only thine
I ever wish to be.

'Tis little that I do to prove
That I belong to thee;
Accept the faith that works by love,
Which thou alone canst see.

And may that everlasting love
Still draw me to thy side,
Until at last I ever shall
Within that love abide. H. K. F.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 6.

The "house of Jacob," over which the son of David shall reign "forever," is spoken of in the 15th verse of Obadiah and associated with Mount Zion, the locale of the throne. "But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." After speaking further of the inheritance assigned to the children of Israel, the subject is closed with this language: "And saviours shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau, and the kingdom shall be the Lord's." This defines the time when this deliverance shall be wrought, and the house of Jacob possess their inheritance; it is when the kingdom is the Lord's. Not until then will those precious covenant promises made with Abraham, and renewed with Isaac and Jacob, be fulfilled. Then shall they inherit the land forever; it shall be given for an everlasting possession. When the Lord riseth up out of his holy habitation, where he has been the high priest, offering his own blood as an atonement for sin, he will return and dwell at Mount Zion, and then shall he inherit Judah, his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Zech. 2: 10–13.

In the 37th of Ezekiel, to which reference has already been made, after declaring that the children of Israel shall be gathered from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and brought into their own land, cleansed from their iniquities and idols, David their king forever, the land promised them forever, he then states that he will make an everlasting covenant with them, and multiply them, and set his sanctuary in the midst of them forever. His tabernacle also will be place among them, and he will be their God, and they shall be his people. How evident it is that Jesus referred to this very time, when he calls himself the good Shepherd, and says that he has other sheep which are not of the Jewish fold; them he must bring, and then there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. How evident, also, that the same period is referred to in the 21st of Revelations,—"Behold the tabernacle of God is with men," etc. The prophet Ezekiel describes an eternal state of blessedness, and so does the Revelator.

In the 36th chapter of Ezekiel we find the same class of promises made to the dispersed house of Israel or Jacob—promises that they shall be gathered from among all nations whither they have been scattered, and brought into their own land; and then shall they be sprinkled with clean water, and cleansed from all their filthiness, and all their idols, and a new heart shall be given them, and a new spirit be put within them, and they shall keep the statutes of the Lord. Not for their sakes will the Lord do this, but for his holy name's sake, and for the sake of the covenant made with their fathers. He then tells them of the [illegible] identical prophecies respecting the restoration, when the law of God shall be written in their hearts, and they shall be his people. Jer. 31: 31, 34. And the same house of Judah and of Israel is alluded to in the 8th chapter of Hebrews.

We would not know from some of these prophecies the time when they were to be fulfilled, but by collecting them together, we can locate them. Taking Jeremiah alone, we could not tell when this law would be written in the heart; but Ezekiel designates it as the time when they are gathered out of all countries, and brought into their own land, and we have no right to locate it elsewhere. Please read carefully the 34th chapter of Ezekiel and compare with those scriptures already quoted. Here Christ, the good Shepherd, goes after his stray sheep, and delivers them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day of Israel's dispersion, and he separates "them out from the people, and gathers them from the countries, and brings them back into their own land, and feeds them upon the mountains of Israel, in a fat pasture." Here is the promise also: "I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them." All these promises centre to one given point. They are not indefinite and uncertain, for "I the Lord have spoken it, and I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land, and they shall dwell safely, and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessings. The tree of the field shall yield her fruit, the earth shall yield her increase; they shall be safe in their land; they shall no more be a prey to the heathen; they shall know that I am the Lord when I have broken the bonds of their yoke and delivered them. I will raise up for them a plant of renown; they shall no more hunger, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more."

Who are these to whom the Lord makes such gracious promises? The Gentiles who boasted against the branches?—who have said, "The Lord hath cast off his people whom he foreknew?" Nay, verily. They constitute not the "house of Jacob," over whom the Lord God shall reign forever. It is the scattered, the down-trodden, the oppressed, the polluted, the idolatrous Israelite who is gathered "out from all countries," separated "from the people," brought into the land given their fathers, wherein their fathers dwelt; and there are they cleansed from their filthiness and idols, receive a new heart, a new spirit, a new covenant, and dwell forever in the promised inheritance; and the heathen, the Gentiles who despised them, shall know that the Lord doeth all these things, and doth "sanctify Israel." The Convicting Work of the Spirit.

In contributing my mite toward shedding light on the contested points about the Spirit, and baptism, I will give another extract from the Christian Freeman, of which I have spoken, as illustrating my views.

"By convicting, or quickening influence of the Spirit, I mean those influences that are first in the soul, and preliminary to all the other higher forms of spiritual agency. It means Christ standing at the door of the heart and knocking for admittance—not yet admitted. It includes such influences as are exerted upon the soul when dead in trespasses and sins. Changing the figure, it indicates that quickening which takes place previous to, and in order to conversion. Every man knows from his own experience, that into the midst of his passions, lusts, hatred, there comes at times a voice that speaks of right, duty, and a perfect life;—a voice like that of John the Baptist in the wilderness, crying within him, 'Repent! flee from the wrath to come!' This is the Spirit striving against the flesh; the 'Father drawing unto the Son,' (John 6: 44.) It is man's fearful privilege to yield to this holy Advocate, or resist and grieve him. Under this head falls the very explicit passage: 'When the Comforter is come, he will convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment,' (John 16: 8). Also 1 Thess. 1: 5—'Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the holy Spirit'; 'Lydia's heart was opened; Paul planted; God giveth the increase,' etc."

After giving much other proof on this point, and also on the regenerating, and confirming or sanctifying work of the Spirit, the writer (President Russell) concludes thus:

"There are two conclusions, corrective of errors among us, furnished by the foregoing survey of the Scriptures:

"1. Many teachers in the Reformation speak of man as receiving the Spirit, or being influenced by him, only after the remission of sins; as if the Spirit was a mere [illegible] hosts of wicked spirits over the soul. We could not believe, for a long time, that any portion of any religious body would maintain any such unscriptural position. But we have been told, by good authority in the Reformation, that the holy Spirit exerts no direct power in cleansing man from sin. And time and again we have heard that the Spirit operates upon man only after remission of sins, which is after baptism—teaching plainly that deliverance from sin takes place anterior to any influence of the Spirit, except 'through the word.' On the contrary, we have seen, in the above passages, that the chief aim of the Spirit's work is, to destroy in man the power of sin—to free the soul from the tyranny of the 'law in the members that bringeth into captivity the law of the mind.' (Rom. 7: 23);—that its office is to quicken, (convict) regenerate, and perfect man for a state of holiness, 'without which no man shall see God.'

"2. It is a common practice among us, to disprove that the Spirit operates upon the sinner, by quoting passages that speak of his being given to the obedient believer! —the suppressed premise here being, that this latter class of persons are the only ones spoken of in the Bible as coming under the influence of the Spirit. 'Because ye are sons (not to make ye sons, my they) God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father.' The fallacy in this kind of argumentation, it will be at once seen, is that of quoting only a part of the teaching of the Bible, on the subject under consideration—quoting from one class of passages only, and neglecting the two remaining; a most one-sided and merely fragmentary result being reached by this process. It is thus that a hungry theory, like a beast of prey, enters the fair domain of Scripture, and consumes everything but its own kind. Reasoning in the same way, we might prove that Christ is not our intercessor, because he is said to be our sacrifice! But we know that both sets of passages are true, and we do not think of merging one into the other. The holy Spirit may exercise different offices. He is an Advocate to plead God's cause with the heart, when it yields to his pleadings, and an in-dweller in it, to build it up in righteousness. We cannot avoid the three-fold conclusion concerning the work of the Spirit, if we let every Scripture declaration stand fast in its own integrity, and set them side by side—not let one class swallow up another, in order to answer the requirements of a theory. A full and honest induction of all the texts that bear upon this subject will give us the whole truth, and not a fragment of it; and this is the only genuine way of taking the Bible as our guide."

Among the valuable thoughts and information contained in the above extract, one should be specially noticed, namely—when a doctrine, sect, or theory is started, which is generally done by some noted leader, or paper, the followers get by heart a class of texts which seem to favor their views, and they cannot, or will not carefully study passages which plainly oppose them. Here lies the great cause of error among good men. Such is the sad weakness of man, that he too much resembles the horse that that sees a hole in a bridge, and can see nothing else, so runs into the ditch. But there is sin in this course, as self-interest, self-conceit, idleness, or pride of party, etc., so often mixed with love and zeal for truth. Noted teachers and inventors of new theories should be criticised more, and trusted less. As the views named above, and others related to them, are not confined to disciple brethren, we can see we have errors to correct, besides neglect of prophecies and the teaching of endless misery. Surely we have urgent reasons to take heed to the direction of James—"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . and it shall be given him." Here I meant to close, but this text reminds me of the logical consequence of one error—why "ask of God" if he never gives any help but the word? J. BLAIN.

Dark Ages and Meteoric Showers.

Without intending to treat upon the subject in its prophetic bearings at present, I propose to give a few facts, from the many that may be cited, based upon the most reliable historic dates, for the consideration of others, hoping thereby to awaken investigation in this direction.

Many facts are cited in reference to the memorable dark day of 1780, regarding the intensity and duration of the darkness, in particular localities; and from extracts made from various sources, it appears as readily accounted for, upon natural principles—meteorological principles—as many of the phenomena of nature we daily witness; nor was it a remarkably notable day of its kind, as a few extracts will soon suffice to show.

The late Alexander Von Humboldt, doubtless the most profound physicist of our age, in his treatise upon Aerolites, observes (Cosmos, Vol. I, page 132:) "Remarkable obscurations of the sun's disk, during which the stars have been seen at mid-day, (as, for instance, in the obscuration of 1547, which continued for three [illegible] owing either to a meteoric cause, or to a black cloud formed by the sooty exhalations of the solar body. The shorter obscurations of 1090 and 1203, which continued, the one only three, and the other six hours, were supposed by Chladni and Schnurrer to be occasioned by the passage of meteoric masses before the sun's disk. Since the period that streams of meteoric shooting stars were first considered with reference to the direction of their orbit as a closed ring, the epochs of these mysterious celestial phenomena have been observed to present a remarkable connection with the regular recurrence of swarms of shooting stars. Adolph Erman has evinced great acuteness of mind in his accurate investigation of the facts hitherto observed on this subject, and his researches have enabled him to discover the connection of the sun's conjunction with the August asteroids on the 12th of May, the latter period corresponding with the days of St. Mamert (May 11th, St. Pancras (May 12th,) and St. Servatius, (May 13th,) which, according to popular belief, were accounted 'cold days.'"

The dark day of 1780, it will be observed, occurred in May, but is passed unmentioned in this incidental notice of dark days by Humboldt, with many others that history records; although, in the localities where they occurred, they were regarded at the time with intense awe. We have already seen that the dark day of 1780 was not very much more noted, nor productive of much greater consternation than many that had preceded it; nor is it true that no reasonable cause has been assigned for its and their occurrence. An adequate discussion of the principles however, upon which these obscurations occur, would occupy several columns and need not now be made.

Meteoric showers, or the "falling of stars," are not entirely of very recent occurrence. "On the 25th of April, 1095, 'innumerable eyes in France saw stars falling from heaven as thickly as hail,' and this occurrence was regarded by the Council of Clermont as indicative of the great movement in Christendom." Humboldt again observes: "Among periodic falls, the most celebrated is that known as the November phenomenon, occurring from about the 12th to the 14th of November, and that of the festival of St. Lawrence (the 10th of August), whose 'fiery tears' were noticed in former times (tenth century) in a church calendar of England, no less than in old traditionary legends, as a metereological event of constant recurrence." Shooting stars are compared by ancient Arabian writers to "swarms of locusts." In 1766 we have a record of a remarkable shower of falling stars, or aerolites, taking place at Quito, South America, during which the inhabitants endeavored to appease heaven by religious processions. In 1797, also, a great number of aerolites fell in the same city, shortly before the terrible earthquake of Riobamba; and within a century between twenty and thirty of these remarkable meteoric showers have occurred in different parts of the world, of which there is authentic account; and there seems to be no reason for supposing that these storms have been more frequent during this period than in previous times. The attention of modern scientists has been largely directed to these bodies during the last fifty years; their origin has been investigated, and their appearances carefully noted, till their occurrence can be predicted by the careful cosnographer with almost as much certainty as the astronomer can predict the return of a comet, whose orbit and periodic time have been calculated, or the occurrence of an eclipse. Several epoch have been discovered, occurring at certain times of every year, during which these bodies are much more numerous than at other times; also that the origin of these bodies has considerable connection with the aurora borealis, earthquakes and eruptions of volcanoes, after occurring simultaneously with them; and the obscuration of the sun in "dark days" seems to be sometimes occasioned by the transit of non-luminous meteoric bodies across its disk; although Dr. Webster believes the obscurity of May 17th, 1780, to have been caused by the presence of dust in the atmosphere, which, it seems quite probable, might have been the case.

Hence it appears that accounts of dark days are not of unfrequent occurrence in history—always local, first in one part of the world and then in another, though more frequent in some parts than others; that showers of falling stars are known to have occurred many times prior to 1799, and even centuries in the past; and, al- [illegible] with almost as much certainty of correctness as for an eclipse, or the appearance of a comet at its appointed time; yet there are problems connected with their origin yet to be solved, which are continually receiving the closest attention of the most eminent philosophers of our own country and of Europe.

That so little appears to be known by people in general concerning the occurrence of these phenomena in times past, and of their origin, has led me to give the facts above stated. Had I time, I would like to treat the subject more in detail, and present my views upon its scriptural bearings.

Misapprehension.

BRO. WENDELL:—I would call attention to the following language: "Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." This is sometimes emphasized, as if to convey the idea of present lookers on, gathered around them in great numbers as a cloud, to whom he and his brethren were visible, but who were not visible to them. This is the mistake. Doubtless, all believe the witnesses of which he speaks are those enumerated in chapter 11. They were Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Rahab, Gideon, and numerous others, of whom he says time would fail him to speak. Thus he arrayed them like a cloud around his brethren; he speaks of their wonderful works, accomplished by their faith. But how did Paul know of all these things but from their affidavits? He, like a good lawyer, lays down his position thus: "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Then he arrays his evidence, his testimonies, or, if you please, his witnesses, substantiating this position till we come to the end of chapter 11. Then he says, they all obtained a good report by this faith, but did not obtain the better things provided in the promise, nor cannot without us (all the church), nor be made perfect until the perfecting day arrives. Then he adds, "Wherefore (for this cause) seeing (from what I have written that) we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," (or cloud of evidences, or cloud of testimonies), let us lay aside every weight, * * looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith," etc., "lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds."

Now what is there in all this which appears in any way like "supporting a belief in the conscious existence of spirits" after death? Does the apostle intimate that any, or all of those worthies, or their spirits, were actually surrounding and looking upon them? No, nothing of the kind; but his "cloud" was brought from the record of the Old Testament. Now a written affidavit read in court is as much a witness as though he were personally arrayed on the stand. Thus Paul arrayed a cloud of them in his letter. Yours, hoping for grace to be courteous to all, and also zealous for the truth. O. D. GIBSON.

Houghtonville, Vt., July 21, '61.

P. S. I had supposed it an essential element of a witness to testify or give in testimony. It seems D. B. disclaims what he calls "the essential idea" of Spiritualism, i. e., communication with the dead. How does he reconcile this with his idea of Paul's being compassed with conscious spirit witnesses? Can that which cannot testify or communicate be a witness?

Remarks to Sunday School Teachers.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."—ECCL. 11: 6.

If you love God, you will wish to comply with all of his demands, as far as it is in your power so to do. There cannot be found a commandment better adapted to the work of teaching than the one I have quoted. The scholars are in the morning of life; their hearts are tender; the Holy Spirit operating upon them, inspires them with that propensity which prompts them to attend, and eagerly listen to divine truths, when they are imparted in an agreeable manner. You probably recollect reading the parable of the sower, and its exposition, Matt. 13: 3–24. Teachers occupy the same position toward scholars that the sower did to the earth in that parable. The hearts of the children are the ground; the word of God the seed. The seed sown now meet with the same results that they did then.

Teachers often get discouraged, when they consider that their expectations are liable to end in disappointment, instead of [illegible] stead of such reasoning, he went about the work in earnest; not knowing which might prosper, or whether all would be alike good: for his reward, he received from "some seed an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold."

Teachers should exert all their powers in endeavoring to impress Bible truths on the hearts of their pupils, in order to prevent any of the seed from becoming worthless. The first class of seeds fell by the way-side; then came the wicked one and caught them away. To guard against such an event, explain, to the best of your ability, the crafty maliciousness of Satan, who whispers to them that they must not attend to their teachers' instructions, or they will lose the friendship of their thoughtless associates.

The second class of seeds were those that fell upon stony places; they sprung up without root; were scorched by the sun and withered away. We see this class exemplified by children in times of religious excitement, their feelings being easily wrought upon, and only knowing from the word of God their need of religion, they mistake excitement for enjoyment, until they are compelled to endure tribulation; when, not fully understanding the Scriptures, and so having no solid foundation, they turn aside and wither amid the scorching rays of the sun. To remedy this evil, allow the children to study out those passages that state most plainly the work of conversion, and explain to them the mean- of the words faith, repentance, confession, etc., and the phrases, "a new creature in Chrirst," and "being justified by his blood."

The third kind of seeds are represented by those scholars who pay good attention to good advice, and become converted, and for a while they bring forth fruit, and enjoy the approving smile of their heavenly Parent; but temptation overtakes them, they are deceived by its appearance, and neglect to perform their duties, and soon "blindness of mind" and "hardness of heart" choke up their growth. To prevent such a sad result, let each teacher faithfully instil into the minds of the class the warnings contained in the gospel against such as, having started for the Kingdom, "draw back." Heb. 10: 38, 39. Luke 9: 62. Let them also learn that religion consists in "overcoming all temptation," and "enduring unto the end," and that such only can be saved.

In your conversation with the scholars, engage their attention, and show them that you are interested in their spiritual welfare; talk to them personally and pointedly of their duties to God and themselves. By so doing, you will gain their respect, confidence and affection; and "in due time you shall reap if you faint not." When you have seen those with whom you have labored faithfully growing up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," Eph. 6: 4, and yielding the peaceable "fruits of righteousness," some even a hundred fold, it will agreeably surprise you when you reflect that they were once unconverted, but have become, through the blessing of God on your labors, like a mighty oak, under which you may repose. Then, teachers, toil, pray and struggle "yet a little longer," and you shall have many stars in your crown of rejoicing in that day when you, who went forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall return again with rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you." Ps. 126: 6. H. S. P.

Minnesota.

BRO. WENDELL:—I have often been requested to write through the Crisis, and when I think how pleased I am to hear from the brethren, I have thought perhaps it may be duty for me to write a little. Have been here in Minnesota upwards of five years; have had a great many good seasons, and have preached a great deal through this section. I have ever tried to hold up the gospel in its true light. I find some warm hearts that love the truth; still, there is and has been much opposition. But some will believe their Bibles in spite of those who "turn to fables." It may be just to say, that I find some of the ministry that are not satisfied with their position; they honestly own that they are bound by their creeds. O, I would that all such would come out in the blazing light of the gospel. I would that men every where would see and confess the glorious truth of eternal life only through Christ, and the soul-cheering truth of the speedy establishment of the kingdom of God "under the whole heaven."

all that I can. Doors are open all around, and the interest is on the increase. Our Quarterly Conference, in June, in Winona Co., was a good one, but the weather was bad. I wish to say to the brethren in the east, with whom I have labored, that they are remembered with much affection. I hope to meet them in the Kingdom with all the redeemed. Brethren and friends in Minnesota desiring my labors with them, can address me, and, if possible, I will try to meet with them and preach the word. My object is to labor where I can do the most good. My Experience.—No. 11.

Often since identifying myself with the Second Advent people have I been admonished by the inexperienced that, if I lived devoted and maintained those views, I should not be able to remain with the church. But the love I had for it, (a little sectarian,) and the confidence reposed in those loved ones, caused me to resist at once the idea as national, unnecessary, and unchristian. And with me it is still a query, why the humble, devoted christian cannot peaceably remain, the same loved and loving member of the church, though differing somewhat in theology, yet with equal chances of right.

I would pass over in silence the unfriendly treatment of mankind, if it were not an additional proof and fulfillment of the declaration, "All things work together for good to them that love God"; and, too, that I had much rather remember and dwell upon the dealings of God with me than man. However much my deportment might have merited it, yet up to this time there had not by the church been brought an accusation against me for the twenty-five years or more I had stood a member.

One afternoon, a few months after I had spoken out the "peculiar views," the pastor called, and, after the usual salutation, enquiry was made with regard to the prosperity and advancement of the cause of Christ in the vicinity. He replied, "rather poor." After a moment's silence, I suggested that it was probably in consequence of a great lack of love to God and one another. He bowed assent, and with a peculiar expression of countenance and voice added, "I am thinking that you are involved in the same difficulty." "I may be," said I: "any one in particular that you know of?" "Yes," said he, hesitatingly, and mentioned the name of a person, a professor of religion, to be sure, but well known by those familiar to be more fond of jewelry, dress, and the society of the gay, thoughtless and fashionable, than the Bible, closet, prayer-meeting and christian society. For a moment I was astonished, but enquired the accusation. He said, "the want of love, avoiding her society, and refusing to associate with her." Still more struck with the manner and nature of the complaint, but soon perceiving the design, I acknowledged the fact, and gave my reasons, which were these: I was responsible for my time, as a talent; consequently, the influence I exerted in the world depended in a great measure upon the choice of associates and the society in which I moved. Should she repent and give evidence of true piety, I can love, respect, and associate with her, as with other christians; but till then, I feel justified in the course pursued. I enquired what he wished me to do? He replied, "go and make up with her, and be good friends." I replied, that I held no hardness or ill-will against her, no way whatever—could enjoy a meeting as well in her presence as out of it. "But she wished to come into the church, and did not feel free to while I was in it." "Very well; has she a right to bring accusations of this kind against a member? If she has aught against me, let her come to me, and I will right the wrong, and confess and forsake. Years ago I came honorably into the church; and if I now stand in the way of others, I intend to go out in the same way, without being crowded or pushed." After saying a little more by way of reproof for my "wicked course," he left.

I now began to feel as I never had felt before. This truly was the beginning of days of trial to me. [illegible]

Everlasting Love.

"I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee."—Jer. 31: 3.

I love thee, O my dearest Lord!
I long thy grace to know!
I muse upon thy saving word
While waiting here below.

I know it is no love of mine
Which glows within my breast:
It comes from thee, 'tis part of thine,
A holy, heavenly guest.

For with an everlasting love
Thou drawest me to thee;
Lord, I am thine, and only thine
I ever wish to be.

'Tis little that I do to prove
That I belong to thee;
Accept the faith that works by love,
Which thou alone canst see.

And may that everlasting love
Still draw me to thy side,
Until at last I ever shall
Within that love abide.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 6.

The "house of Jacob," over which the son of David shall reign "forever," is spoken of in the 15th verse of Obadiah and associated with Mount Zion, the locale of the throne. "But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." After speaking further of the inheritance assigned to the children of Israel, the subject is closed with this language: "And saviours shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau, and the kingdom shall be the Lord's." This defines the time when this deliverance shall be wrought, and the house of Jacob possess their inheritance; it is when the kingdom is the Lord's. Not until then will those precious covenant promises made with Abraham, and renewed with Isaac and Jacob, be fulfilled. Then shall they inherit the land forever; it shall be given for an everlasting possession. When the Lord riseth up out of his holy habitation, where he has been the high priest, offering his own blood as an atonement for sin, he will return and dwell at Mount Zion, and then shall he inherit Judah, his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Zech. 2: 10-12.

In the 37th of Ezekiel, to which reference has already been made, after declaring that the children of Israel shall be gathered from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and brought into their own land, cleansed from their iniquities and idols, David their king forever, the land promised them forever, he then states that he will make an everlasting covenant with them, and multiply them, and set his sanctuary in the midst of them forever. His tabernacle also will he place among them, and he will be their God, and they shall be his people. How evident it is that Jesus referred to this very time, when he calls himself the good Shepherd, and says that he has other sheep which are not of the Jewish fold; them he must bring, and then there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. How evident, also, that the same period is referred to in the 21st of Revelations,—"Behold the tabernacle of God is with men," etc. The prophet Ezekiel describes an eternal state of blessedness, and so does the Revelator.

In the 36th chapter of Ezekiel we find the same class of promises made to the dispersed house of Israel or Jacob—promises that they shall be gathered from among all nations whither they have been scattered, and brought into their own land; and then shall they be sprinkled with clean water, and cleansed from all their filthiness, and all their idols, and a new heart shall be given them, and a new spirit be put within them, and they shall keep the statutes of the Lord. Not for their sakes will the Lord do this, but for his holy name's sake, and for the sake of the covenant made with their fathers. He then tells them of the blessings they shall receive in the land, declaring that it shall be redeemed from its desolation, and made like the garden of Eden. He then says that the house of Israel will ask him to do these things for them, and they shall increase like a flock, and fill the waste cities. Jeremiah gives identical prophecies respecting the restoration, when the law of God shall be written in their hearts, and they shall be his people. Jer. 31: 31, 34. And the same house of Judah and of Israel is alluded to in the 8th chapter of Hebrews.

We would not know from some of these prophecies the time when they were to be fulfilled, but by collecting them together, we can locate them. Taking Jeremiah alone, we could not tell when this law would be written in the heart; but Ezekiel designates it as the time when they are gathered out of all countries, and brought into their own land, and we have no right to locate it elsewhere. Please read carefully the 34th chapter of Ezekiel and compare with those scriptures already quoted. Here Christ, the good Shepherd, goes after his stray sheep, and delivers them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day of Israel's dispersion, and he separates "them out from the people, and gathers them from the countries, and brings them back into their own land, and feeds them upon the mountains of Israel, in a fat pasture." Here is the promise also: "I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them." All these promises centre to one given point. They are not indefinite and uncertain, for "I the Lord have spoken it, and I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land, and they shall dwell safely, and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessings. The tree of the field shall yield her fruit, the earth shall yield her increase; they shall be safe in their land; they shall no more be a prey to the heathen; they shall know that I am the Lord when I have broken the bonds of their yoke and delivered them. I will raise up for them a plant of renown; they shall no more hunger, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more."

Who are these to whom the Lord makes such gracious promises? The Gentiles who boasted against the branches?—who have said, "The Lord hath cast off his people whom he foreknew?" Nay, verily. They constitute not the "house of Jacob," over whom the Lord God shall reign forever. It is the scattered, the down-trodden, the oppressed, the polluted, the idolatrous Israelite who is gathered "out from all countries," separated "from the people," brought into the land given their fathers, wherein their fathers dwelt; and there are they cleansed from their filthiness and idols, receive a new heart, a new spirit, a new covenant, and dwell forever in the promised inheritance; and the heathen, the Gentiles who despised them, shall know that the Lord doeth all these things, and doth "sanctify Israel."

The Convicting Work of the Spirit.

In contributing my mite toward shedding light on the contested points about the Spirit, and baptism, I will give another extract from the Christian Freeman, of which I have spoken, as illustrating my views.

"By convicting, or quickening influence of the Spirit, I mean those influences that are first in the soul, and preliminary to all the other higher forms of spiritual agency. It means Christ standing at the door of the heart and knocking for admittance—not yet admitted. It includes such influences as are exerted upon the soul when dead in trespasses and sins. Changing the figure, it indicates that quickening which takes place previous to, and in order to conversion. Every man knows from his own experience, that into the midst of his passions, lusts, hatred, there comes at times a voice that speaks of right, duty, and a perfect life;—a voice like that of John the Baptist in the wilderness, crying within him, 'Repent! flee from the wrath to come!' This is the Spirit striving against the flesh; the 'Father drawing unto the Son,' (John 6: 44.) It is man's fearful privilege to yield to this holy Advocate, or resist and grieve him. Under this head falls the very explicit passage: 'When the Comforter is come, he will convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment,' (John 16: 8). Also 1 Thess. 1: 5—'Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the holy Spirit'; 'Lydia's heart was opened'; 'Paul planted; God giveth the increase,' etc."

After giving much other proof on this point, and also on the regenerating, and confirming or sanctifying work of the Spirit, the writer (President Russell) concludes thus:

"There are two conclusions, corrective of errors among us, furnished by the foregoing survey of the Scriptures:

"1. Many teachers in the Reformation speak of man as receiving the Spirit, or being influenced by him, only after the remission of sins; as if the Spirit was a mere bounty bestowed upon man after he had fought his way, single handed, through the struggle with sin—the sinner having no occasion to cry out in agony, who shall deliver me? The mildest term we can apply to this error is, that it is monstrous. It knows nothing of the depravity of the heart;—nothing of the power of Satan's hosts of wicked spirits over the soul. We could not believe, for a long time, that any portion of any religious body would maintain any such unscriptural position. But we have been told, by good authority in the Reformation, that the holy Spirit exerts no direct power in cleansing man from sin. And time and again we have heard that the Spirit operates upon man only after remission of sins, which is after baptism—teaching plainly that deliverance from sin takes place anterior to any influence of the Spirit, except 'through the word.' On the contrary, we have seen, in the above passages, that the chief aim of the Spirit's work is, to destroy in man the power of sin—to free the soul from the tyranny of the 'law in the members that bringeth into captivity the law of the mind.' (Rom. 7: 23);—that its office is to quicken, (convict) regenerate, and perfect man for a state of holiness, 'without which no man shall see God.'

"2. It is a common practice among us, to disprove that the Spirit operates upon the sinner, by quoting passages that speak of his being given to the obedient believer!—the suppressed premise here being, that this latter class of persons are the only ones spoken of in the Bible as coming under the influence of the Spirit. 'Because ye are sons (not to make ye sons, say they) God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father.' The fallacy in this kind of argumentation, it will be at once seen, is that of quoting only a part of the teaching of the Bible, on the subject under consideration—quoting from one class of passages only, and neglecting the two remaining; a most one-sided and merely fragmentary result being reached by this process. It is thus that a hungry theory, like a beast of prey, enters the fair domain of Scripture, and consumes everything but its own kind. Reasoning in the same way, we might prove that Christ is not our intercessor, because he is said to be our sacrifice! But we know that both sets of passages are true, and we do not think of merging one into the other. The holy Spirit may exercise different offices. He is an Advocate to plead God's cause with the heart, when it yields to his pleadings; and an in-dweller in it, to build it up in righteousness. We cannot avoid the three-fold conclusion concerning the work of the Spirit, if we let every Scripture declaration stand fast in its own integrity, and set them side by side—not let one class swallow up another, in order to answer the requirements of a theory. A full and honest induction of all the texts that bear upon this subject will give us the whole truth, and not a fragment of it; and this is the only genuine way of taking the Bible as our guide."

Among the valuable thoughts and information contained in the above extract, one should be specially noticed, namely—when a doctrine, sect, or theory is started, which is generally done by some noted leader, or paper, the followers get by heart a class of texts which seem to favor their views, and they cannot, or will not carefully study passages which plainly oppose them. Here lies the great cause of error among good men. Such is the sad weakness of man, that he too much resembles the horse that that sees a hole in a bridge, and can see nothing else, so runs into the ditch. But there is sin in this course, as self-interest, self-conceit, idleness, or pride of party, etc., are often mixed with love and zeal for truth. Noted teachers and inventors of new theories should be criticised more, and trusted less. As the views named above, and others related to them, are not confined to disciple brethren, we can see we have errors to correct, besides neglect of prophecies and the teaching of endless misery. Surely we have urgent reasons to take heed to the direction of James—"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . and it shall be given him." Here I meant to close, but this text reminds me of the logical consequence of one error—why "ask of God" if he never gives any help but the word?

Dark Ages and Meteoric Showers.

Without intending to treat upon the subject in its prophetic bearings at present, I propose to give a few facts, from the many that may be cited, based upon the most reliable historic dates, for the consideration of others, hoping thereby to awaken investigation in this direction.

Many facts are cited in reference to the memorable dark day of 1780, regarding the intensity and duration of the darkness, in particular localities; and from extracts made from various sources, it appears as readily accounted for, upon natural principles—meteorological principles—as many of the phenomena of nature we daily witness; nor was it a remarkably notable day of its kind, as a few extracts will soon suffice to show.

The late Alexander Von Humboldt, doubtless the most profound physicist of our age, in his treatise upon Areolites, observes (Cosmos, Vol. I, page 132:) "Remarkable obscurations of the sun's disk, during which the stars have been seen at mid-day, (as, for instance, in the obscuration of 1547, which continued for three days, and occurred about the time of the eventful battle of Muhlberg,) cannot be explained as arising from volcanic ashes or mists, and were regarded by Kepler as owing either to a materia cometica, or to a black cloud formed by the sooty exhalations of the solar body. The shorter obscurations of 1090 and 1203, which continued, the one only three, and the other six hours, were supposed by Chladni and Schnurrer to be occasioned by the passage of meteoric masses before the sun's disk. Since the period that streams of meteoric shooting stars were first considered with reference to the direction of their orbit as a closed ring, the epochs of these mysterious celestial phenomena have been observed to present a remarkable connection with the regular recurrence of swarms of shooting stars. Adolph Erman has evinced great acuteness of mind in his accurate investigation of the facts hitherto observed on this subject, and his researches have enabled him to discover the connection of the sun's conjunction with the August asteroids on the 12th of May, the latter period corresponding with the days of St. Mamert (May 11th, St. Pancras (May 12th,) and St. Servatius, (May 13th,) which, according to popular belief, were accounted 'cold days.'"

The dark day of 1780, it will be observed, occurred in May, but is passed unmentioned in this incidental notice of dark days by Humboldt, with many others that history records; although, in the localities where they occurred, they were regarded at the time with intense awe. We have already seen that the dark day of 1780 was not very much more noted, nor productive of much greater consternation than many that had preceded it; nor is it true that no reasonable cause has been assigned for its and their occurrence. An adequate discussion of the principles however, upon which these obscurations occur, would occupy several columns and need not now be made.

Meteoric showers, or the "falling of stars," are not entirely of very recent occurrence. "On the 25th of April, 1095, 'innumerable eyes in France saw stars falling from heaven as thickly as hail,' and this occurrence was regarded by the Council of Clermont as indicative of the great movement in Christendom." Humboldt again observes: "Among periodic falls, the most celebrated is that known as the November phenomenon, occurring from about the 12th to the 14th of November, and that of the festival of St. Lawrence (the 10th of August), whose 'fiery tears' were noticed in former times (tenth century) in a church calendar of England, no less than in old traditionary legends, as a metereological event of constant recurrence." Shooting stars are compared by ancient Arabian writers to "swarms of locusts." In 1766 we have a record of a remarkable shower of falling stars, or aerolites, taking place at Quito, South America, during which the inhabitants endeavored to appease heaven by religious processions. In 1797, also, a great number of aerolites fell in the same city, shortly before the terrible earthquake of Riobamba; and within a century between twenty and thirty of these remarkable meteoric showers have occurred in different parts of the world, of which there is authentic account; and there seems to be no reason for supposing that these storms have been more frequent during this period than in previous times. The attention of modern scientists has been largely directed to these bodies during the last fifty years; their origin has been investigated, and their appearances carefully noted, till their occurrence can be predicted by the careful cosmographer with almost as much certainty as the astronomer can predict the return of a comet, whose orbit and periodic time have been calculated, or the occurrence of an eclipse. Several epoch have been discovered, occurring at certain times of every year, during which these bodies are much more numerous than at other times; also that the origin of these bodies has considerable connection with the aurora borealis, earthquakes and eruptions of volcanoes, after occurring simultaneously with them; and the obscuration of the sun in "dark days" seems to be sometimes occasioned by the transit of non-luminous meteoric bodies across its disk; although Dr. Webster believes the obscurity of May 17th, 1780, to have been caused by the presence of dust in the atmosphere, which, it seems quite probable, might have been the case.

Hence it appears that accounts of dark days are not of unfrequent occurrence in history—always local, first in one part of the world and then in another, though more frequent in some parts than others; that showers of falling stars are known to have occurred many times prior to 1799, and even centuries in the past; and, although looked upon with such fear by the ignorant, and regarded by mankind in general as mysterious and supernatural events, that have never, nor are ever likely to be explained, they are, in fact, perfectly in accordance with known natural principles, and satisfactory reasons are given for them with almost as much certainty of correctness as for an eclipse, or the appearance of a comet at its appointed time; yet there are problems connected with their origin yet to be solved, which are continually receiving the closest attention of the most eminent philosophers of our own country and of Europe.

That so little appears to be known by people in general concerning the occurrence of these phenomena in times past, and of their origin, has led me to give the facts above stated. Had I time, I would like to treat the subject more in detail, and present my views upon its scriptural bearings.

Misapprehension.

BRO. WENDELL:—I would call attention to the following language: "Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." This is sometimes emphasized, as if to convey the idea of present lookers on, gathered around them in great numbers as a cloud, to whom he and his brethren were visible, but who were not visible to them. This is the mistake. Doubtless, all believe the witnesses of which he speaks are those enumerated in chapter 11. They were Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Rahab, Gideon, and numerous others, of whom he says time would fail him to speak. Thus he arrayed them like a cloud around his brethren; he speaks of their wonderful works, accomplished by their faith. But how did Paul know of all these things but from their affidavits? He, like a good lawyer, lays down his position thus: "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Then he arrays his evidence, his testimonies, or, if you please, his witnesses, substantiating this position till we come to the end of chapter 11. Then he says, they all obtained a good report by this faith, but did not obtain the better things provided in the promise, nor cannot without us (all the church), nor be made perfect until the perfecting day arrives. Then he adds, "Wherefore (for this cause) seeing (from what I have written that) we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," (or cloud of evidences, or cloud of testimonies), let us lay aside every weight, * * looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith," etc., "lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds."

Now what is there in all this which appears in any way like "supporting a belief in the conscious existence of spirits" after death? Does the apostle intimate that any, or all of those worthies, or their spirits, were actually surrounding and looking upon them? No, nothing of the kind; but his "cloud" was brought from the record of the Old Testament. Now a written affidavit read in court is as much a witness as though he were personally arrayed on the stand. Thus Paul arrayed a cloud of them in his letter. Yours, hoping for grace to be courteous to all, and also zealous for the truth.

P. S. I had supposed it an essential element of a witness to testify or give in testimony. It seems D. B. disclaims what he calls "the essential idea" of Spiritualism, i. e., communication with the dead. How does he reconcile this with his idea of Paul's being compassed with conscious spirit witnesses? Can that which cannot testify or communicate be a witness?

Remarks to Sunday School Teachers.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."—ECCL. 11: 6.

If you love God, you will wish to comply with all of his demands, as far as it is in your power so to do. There cannot be found a commandment better adapted to the work of teaching than the one I have quoted. The scholars are in the morning of life; their hearts are tender; the Holy Spirit operating upon them, inspires them with that propensity which prompts them to attend, and eagerly listen to divine truths, when they are imparted in an agreeable manner. You probably recollect reading the parable of the sower, and its exposition, Matt. 13: 3-24. Teachers occupy the same position toward scholars that the sower did to the earth in that parable. The hearts of the children are the ground; the word of God the seed. The seed sown now meet with the same results that they did then.

Teachers often get discouraged, when they consider that their expectations are liable to end in disappointment, instead of an abundant harvest; but suppose that when that sower had looked upon the ground, he had said, it is of no use for me to labor on this stony ground; I shall not accomplish the work; even if the seed take root between the rocks, the sun will wither it, or the thorns will choke its growth. Instead of such reasoning, he went about the work in earnest; not knowing which might prosper, or whether all would be alike good: for his reward, he received from "some seed an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold."

Teachers should exert all their powers in endeavoring to impress Bible truths on the hearts of their pupils, in order to prevent any of the seed from becoming worthless. The first class of seeds fell by the way-side; then came the wicked one and caught them away. To guard against such an event, explain, to the best of your ability, the crafty maliciousness of Satan, who whispers to them that they must not attend to their teachers' instructions, or they will lose the friendship of their thoughtless associates.

The second class of seeds were those that fell upon stony places; they sprung up without root; were scorched by the sun and withered away. We see this class exemplified by children in times of religious excitement, their feelings being easily wrought upon, and only knowing from the word of God their need of religion, they mistake excitement for enjoyment, until they are compelled to endure tribulation; when, not fully understanding the Scriptures, and so having no solid foundation, they turn aside and wither amid the scorching rays of the sun. To remedy this evil, allow the children to study out those passages that state most plainly the work of conversion, and explain to them the meaning of the words faith, repentance, confession, etc., and the phrases, "a new creature in Chrirst," and "being justified by his blood."

The third kind of seeds are represented by those scholars who pay good attention to good advice, and become converted, and for a while they bring forth fruit, and enjoy the approving smile of their heavenly Parent; but temptation overtakes them, they are deceived by its appearance, and neglect to perform their duties, and soon "blindness of mind" and "hardness of heart" choke up their growth. To prevent such a sad result, let each teacher faithfully instil into the minds of the class the warnings contained in the gospel against such as, having started for the Kingdom, "draw back." Heb. 10: 38, 39. Luke 9: 62. Let them also learn that religion consists in "overcoming all temptation," and "enduring unto the end," and that such only can be saved.

In your conversation with the scholars, engage their attention, and show them that you are interested in their spiritual welfare; talk to them personally and pointedly of their duties to God and themselves. By so doing, you will gain their respect, confidence and affection; and "in due time you shall reap if you faint not." When you have seen those with whom you have labored faithfully growing up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," Eph. 6: 4, and yielding the peaceable "fruits of righteousness," some even a hundred fold, it will agreeably surprise you when you reflect that they were once unconverted, but have become, through the blessing of God on your labors, like a mighty oak, under which you may repose. Then, teachers, toil, pray and struggle "yet a little longer," and you shall have many stars in your crown of rejoicing in that day when you, who went forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall return again with rejoicing, bringing your sheaves with you." Ps. 126: 6.

For the Crisis.

Minnesota.

BRO. WENDELL:—I have often been requested to write through the Crisis, and when I think how pleased I am to hear from the brethren, I have thought perhaps it may be duty for me to write a little. Have been here in Minnesota upwards of five years; have had a great many good seasons, and have preached a great deal through this section. I have ever tried to hold up the gospel in its true light. I find some warm hearts that love the truth; still, there is and has been much opposition. But some will believe their Bibles in spite of those who "turn to fables." It may be just to say, that I find some of the ministry that are not satisfied with their position; they honestly own that they are bound by their creeds. O, I would that all such would come out in the blazing light of the gospel. I would that men every where would see and confess the glorious truth of eternal life only through Christ, and the soul-cheering truth of the speedy establishment of the kingdom of God "under the whole heaven."

A little more about Minnesota. Here is a great field of labor; but "the laborers are few." I would be glad if there were more in this field. There should be a great many tracts distributed [illegible] worth; but who [illegible]? I have [illegible] I will do what I can [illegible] all that I can. Doors are open all around, and the interest is on the increase. Our Quarterly Conference, in June, in Winona Co., was a good one, but the weather was bad. I wish to say to the brethren in the east, with whom I have labored, that they are remembered with much affection. I hope to meet them in the Kingdom with all the redeemed. Brethren and friends in Minnesota desiring my labors with them, can address me, and, if possible, I will try to meet with them and preach the word. My object is to labor where I can do the most good. My Post Office address is St. Charles, Winona Co., Minnesota.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 11.

Often since identifying myself with the Second Advent people have I been admonished by the inexperienced that, if I lived devoted and maintained those views, I should not be able to remain with the church. But the love I had for it, (a little sectarian,) and the confidence reposed in those loved ones, caused me to resist at once the idea as national, unnecessary, and unchristian. And with me it is still a query, why the humble, devoted christian cannot peaceably remain, the same loved and loving member of the church, though differing somewhat in theology, yet with equal chances of right.

I would pass over in silence the unfriendly treatment of mankind, if it were not an additional proof and fulfillment of the declaration, "All things work together for good to them that love God"; and, too, that I had much rather remember and dwell upon the dealings of God with me than man. However much my deportment might have merited it, yet up to this time there had not by the church been brought an accusation against me for the twenty-five years or more I had stood a member.

One afternoon, a few months after I had spoken out the "peculiar views," the pastor called, and, after the usual salutation, enquiry was made with regard to the prosperity and advancement of the cause of Christ in the vicinity. He replied, "rather poor." After a moment's silence, I suggested that it was probably in consequence of a great lack of love to God and one another. He bowed assent, and with a peculiar expression of countenance and voice added, "I am thinking that you are involved in the same difficulty." "I may be," said I: "any one in particular that you know of?" "Yes," said he, hesitatingly, and mentioned the name of a person, a professor of religion, to be sure, but well known by those familiar to be more fond of jewelry, dress, and the society of the gay, thoughtless and fashionable, than the Bible, closet, prayer-meeting and christian society. For a moment I was astonished, but enquired the accusation. He said, "the want of love, avoiding her society, and refusing to associate with her." Still more struck with the manner and nature of the complaint, but soon perceiving the design, I acknowledged the fact, and gave my reasons, which were these: I was responsible for my time, as a talent; consequently, the influence I exerted in the world depended in a great measure upon the choice of associates and the society in which I moved. Should she repent and give evidence of true piety, I can love, respect, and associate with her, as with other christians; but till then, I feel justified in the course pursued. I enquired what he wished me to do? He replied, "go and make up with her, and be good friends." I replied, that I held no hardness or ill-will against her, no way whatever—could enjoy a meeting as well in her presence as out of it. "But she wished to come into the church, and did not feel free to while I was in it." "Very well; has she a right to bring accusations of this kind against a member? If she has aught against me, let her come to me, and I will right the wrong, and confess and forsake. Years ago I came honorably into the church; and if I now stand in the way of others, I intend to go out in the same way, without being crowded or pushed out." After saying a little more by way of reproof for my "wicked course," as he termed it, he left.

I now began to feel as I never had felt before. This truly was the beginning of days of trial to me. I could now define the meaning, and feel the whole. And must those whom I had regarded and esteemed as my best friends, and to whom I had looked for counsel and advice in my christian course, turn my enemies in such a way as this for giving attention to [illegible] [illegible] course in the matter, (but to no purpose,) I consented to concede to his wishes. In the meantime, the tongue of slander and reproach was not silent. So after bearing up so long against this combined influence, I concluded to go and make an effort to remove the cause of their pretended offence. So, in company with my husband, pastor and wife, we called on the lady. She appeared perfectly satisfied with the exalted position she occupied, and after the introductory remarks by the pastor, she said to me, in an overbearing and insulting manner, "I want you to tell me what you have against me." I readily replied that I was not the accuser, but the accused; therefore I should wait for the complaint to be presented. This brought forth more of the insult and mockery, to her own satisfaction alone. When she paused, I remarked that she ought to have come to me with the complaint first, but that now I was tired and ashamed of it, and had come to have it settled. To which she replied that she was not ashamed of it, and did not want it settled—rather it would stand as it was, etc. The pastor and wife both addressed us, and after several hours of fruitless labor, we left, myself being the only one, probably, who felt any relief.

I now wondered what course would be pursued next. In a few weeks the pastor called; appeared very cool; said but little, and, together with most of the members, neglected me altogether for nearly two years. Some few manifested sympathy, and tried to persuade me to leave this "delusion" and return to my former position in society. But through divine assistance I was enabled to resist all their entreaties and flatteries, and defend the cause in which I had enlisted. Such were the feelings manifested towards me, and my heart was so weighed down with grief and sorrow, that for a long time I refrained from going to any of their meetings, (excepting funeral occasions,) where this "delusion, fanaticism and heresy" were so often and so basely referred to, that the true cause of offence was plainly to be seen.

My trials now seemed greater than I could bear. Had the opposing influences been confined abroad and to those disconnected, it could have been better endured; but strong in the Lord and in the power of his might must be that heart that can endure to be deserted and left to weep and pray alone during family devotion. Nothing short of Omnipotent power can sustain in this time of trial and grief. Truly, I felt lonely. Earth seemed a prison-house; and often have I prayed for death as a release. No earthly friend near to whom I could in confidence unbosom my sorrow. Strong were the temptations now to give up my belief, and go back to the formality and fellowship of the church again; but a stronger hand held me, while a sweet, heavenly voice whispered, How can you, when you have had so much light? I could not, and in my distress was led the oftener to Jesus, who always met me with these rich promises, "My grace is sufficient for thee." "Cast thy burden upon me." "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world," etc. O, how the promises have been verified to me, and what rich blessings have been received before the throne of grace! Truly, I could say with the poet—

"I love to steal away alone,
Where none but Jesus hears,
And spread before him my complaints,
And there to shed my tears.

To shed the tears of penitence,
And feel my heart relent,
Here my poor soul finds fresh supplies
Of grace—from glory sent.

Here I can find the sweetest peace,
And glory in my God;
While earth's receding from my sight,
I learn to trust the Lord.

Glory to thee, my God and King,
For thy attentive care;
Thine ear is always sure to hear
The humble, secret prayer."

As I let go my hold upon earthly friends, and the last cord was severed which bound me to the church, I virtually gave myself into the hands of God, believing that all things would work together for my good; and so it proved, for the furnace through which I had passed had consumed much of the dross, destroyed my spiritual pride, my love of approbation and sectarian bigotry, all of which I had in possession more than I was aware. Truly the process was very grievous, but it now yielded to me the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

To a casual observer it would seem by this time that the crooked had been made nearly straight and the rough places smooth; but a moment's reflection gives us to see that this life is one of continual strife and warfare till the end—battles won and victories gained—till through Christ alone the last enemy is conquered. One text of scripture found in Matt. 5: 44, if literally and practically carried out, will be a pretty good test of christian character. I had suffered the curse and hatred, the despiteful treatment and persecution; but had I in return loved, blessed, done good to, and prayed for them? No; not really practically, so much so as was in reserve for me yet to do. I had only forgiven and dismissed them from my heart. D. N. K.

"He is Faithful that Promised."

"I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 3.

If the meeting of a long absent friend or brother on earth be a joyous event, what must be the joy of the union of the church with their Elder Brother, who, when he comes, will give to every heir an inheritance that will never pass away, with an endless life to enjoy it. "I will come again!" Oh! what an errand of love, what a promised honor and dignity is this! His saints to share, not His heavenly kingdom only, but His immediate presence. "Where I am, there ye shall be also." "Father, I will (it was his dying wish) that those whom Thou hast given me be with me where I am." Not in heaven, but in his kingdom when he comes. Happy reunion! it will be a meeting of the whole ransomed family—the Head with all its members—the Vine with all its branches—the Shepherd with all His flock—the Elder Brother with all His kinsmen. Oh, the joy too of mutual recognition among the death-divided—ties snapt asunder on earth indissolubly renewed—severed friendships reunited—the triumph of love complete—love binding brother with brother and friend with friend, and all to the Elder Brother! Oh! how do these truths occupy thy mind, you who profess to be waiting for Jesus? Does this blessed hope serve to purify you, even as He was pure? Remember who it is that Jesus says shall sit with him upon his throne,—"Him that overcometh."

For the Crisis.

Letter from Ohio.

Brethren and Sisters of Ohio:—Dear Friends:—Jesus is still upon the mercy-seat, his arm is still extended, and how few, O how few! regard the voice of mercy! How few regard the note of warning! Prophets of old are speaking, their tones ring in our ears, "Behold the day of God at hand—the King will soon appear!" Does it not become us, as disciples of Christ, to make every effort for the advancement of truth? And is it not meet we should inquire of each other by what means we can best advance the blessed cause in Ohio?

I am traveling as usual, serving tables for the support of my family; but, though my heart revolts at the thought of thus continuing in a business so unpleasant to myself and them, and so detrimental to our spiritual welfare, yet I can say from my heart, "The Lord's will be done." To Bro. P. Alling of Norwalk, Secretary of the corresponding (conference) committee, and also each member of the same, I would say, will it not be well to give early attention to our fifth annual Ohio conference? Can we dispense with it? No, never! I would say rather, let us have two. Will it not be well for eastern and western Ohio, in order that all the brethren and sisters from Dayton to Ashtabula may enjoy a feast?

Brethren, where are our affections? on what are they placed?—Christ and his kingdom, or on the earth, where sin and sorrow now reign, and the wicked triumph over all good? No, no! Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome the world, therefore let not your hearts be troubled; ye are bought with a price. The world has no claim on us, only that we render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and to God the things that are God's. We have all of us duties to perform; no one is exempt; we are stewards, and God will require of us our stewardship. Have we done all that we can do for the advancement of the truth? I say have we? If we have in the past, are there no further duties to perform in the future? As past blessings do not suffice for the present, so does not the performance, however faithful, of duties in the past excuse the folding of our hands to sleep in the present. Onward is the word; before us lies the prize, and the crown is at the end of the race.

The more I travel and learn the state of mind prevalent among many of the people, the greater is the anxiety in my own heart to work for my Master. I am burdened in spirit day after day; I can but weep tears of sorrow for the languishing state of the church and my brethren in this region of country. Though they all appear strong in faith, ready and willing to do what they can for the cause of truth, yet we do not prosper; we are not growing—not enlarging the borders of our tents. And why is it so, dear brethren? Is it for want of a few faithful laborers in the vineyard? We are so trammeled with the world, so linked in with worldly interests, that we cannot take our lives in our hands, as did the disciples of old, and go out into the highways and compel them to come in, that the Lord's house may be full. What shall we do? Continue our relations with the world—sleep on thus? or shall we sever the cord that binds us to it, and once more follow Him who has gone before, suffering the scoffs and frowns of the wicked? As the reward is sure, we can well afford to sacrifice all earthly pleasures for eternal life; and an heirship with the Son of the Highest in the eternal kingdom of the great I Am.

Brethren beloved, for Jesus' sake let us love one another, and so fulfill the law of Christ, and let us hear from you through the Crisis. Our friends in Ohio are desirous of hearing from the committee. Don't let the matter be deferred as it was last fall. My address for the present is Granville, Licking Co., Ohio. Your brother, in hope of eternal life, E. R. Southwick.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, AUGUST 7, 1861.

To Writers for the Crisis.

At the Meeting of the Christian Publication Society, last week, the following Resolutions were adopted, and were sustained by the Editorial Committee, who form part of the Board:—

Resolved, As the sense of the Christian Publication Society, that it is advisable for all writers in the World's Crisis to abstain from personal controversy and express their own sentiments independently, without any reference to the articles written by others.

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Society further discussion of the war question at present is inexpedient, as the numerous articles already received upon the subject cannot well be published without excluding other matter. We therefore respectfully recommend a truce for the present.

The suggestions contained in these resolutions have our cordial approval, and now that they have the sanction of the C. P. S., our correspondents may expect that they will be conformed to on our part. The regulation covered by the first resolution could not be applied to Bro. Curry's article, on our fourth page, as it was not adopted until after that article was in type. The phrase, "articles written by others," refers to articles published in the Crisis. Those who have articles of "the war question" in our hands, can have them returned by sending for them. "A truce for the present," it will be seen, has been decided on; this "truce" may last longer than our brethren will care to leave their productions in our hands. Their pleasure in the matter shall be ours.

To Our Correspondents.—Matter intended for publication in the Crisis must be accompanied by the writer's name, for the information of the editor. Contributions coming to us without the names of their authors will receive no attention from us. Of course, our correspondents are not required to let their names go before our readers in connection with their articles, unless they choose to do so, but we must know who is responsible for what appears in our paper as original matter. Those concerned will please observe this announcement.

Exemplary.

Just as we are going to press, a letter comes to us from Bro. J. T. Howland, of New York city, enclosing $1.00 for his subscription; also $1.00 "for the benefit of the paper," to be applied as we shall deem best. This last item is a little out of the usual order of things, but we like it, nevertheless, and only wish it were more common! Bro. H. writes as follows:—"I see by the paper 'Hard Times' are upon you as well as the rest of us. We must all strive to keep the paper from sinking." This is good will in a practical form, and if the numerous friends of the Crisis will "all strive" in this way to carry it through these "hard times," we doubt not it can be kept alive to bless and comfort the hearts of many. Let all who can do so aid us, 1, by paying their own subscriptions, and 2, by helping to send the paper to such of the Lord's poor as have not the means to pay. If we had more room in this column we would say more, but the foregoing hints must answer for this week.

Gleanings from Letters.

Eld. R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., July 29th, writes:—

"We are not discouraged or disheartened. We are at peace among ourselves, and our prayer and conference meetings are very interesting—more so than they have been for years in the hot weather. They are well attended and very spiritual and profitable."

A Methodist Minister in Minnesota, who is a firm believer in no immortality out of Christ, writing under date of July 22d, and sending two dollars to pay his subscription for one year to the Crisis, says:—"Its weekly visits are anxiously looked for and heartily welcomed."

☞ Your particular attention is called to the fact that at our Wilbraham Camp Meeting last fall, it was voted to purchase, of Bro.'s Munger and Ladd, the cooking apparatus, crockery and boarding utensils. To effect this, it was thought best to raise a fund, and hence a subscription list was opened, and many of the friends subscribed toward this object. Some of the subscribers paid their pledges, but the most of what was subscribed is still unpaid. Our object at this time is to call attention to this matter, and earnestly request the brethren and sisters to send their subscriptions immediately to Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass., so that there may be nothing lacking which will conduce to the comfort and convenience of those who shall go up to our contemplated feast of tabernacles. Let every one respond promptly. F. H. B.

"Home to Glory."

"G. H. B.," in an article in the Morning Star, on "Shepherd and Sheep," writes thus:—

"In the first three hundred years of the Christian church over three hundred millions of disciples were violently slain for their faith in Jesus; and yet millions sprung up to fill the place of the slain, and the martyrs were taken home to glory."

The italics are ours. Several thoughts are suggested by the foregoing statement:—

1. To slay means to kill, to put to death. Therefore, the "disciples" who were "slain for their faith" were not deathless—hence not immortal. If the slain disciples "were taken home to glory," the home of glory must be in the grave, for there is where they went! If "G. H. B." denies that the slain disciples went "home to glory," the expressions "the slain" and "the martyrs" must be employed by him in different senses!

2. A "martyr" is "one who, by his death, bears witness to the truth of the gospel." "G. H. B." means—when he says that "the martyrs were taken home to glory"—that immortal souls "were taken home to glory." But if by that which was "taken home to glory" is meant the immortal soul, his statement implies that an immortal soul can be a martyr. If an immortal soul can be a martyr, it can die! But if it can die, it follows that a state of death is not incompatible with a state of immortality. Now, if these can go hand in hand, why hath Christ "abolished death" in bringing "immortality to light?" It will not be easy to clear up this matter, and vindicate the immortal-soul theory from the charge of making void the word of God. That word declares that "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Why affirm that the "martyrs" have already been "taken home to glory," without at the same time affirming that "Christ, who is our life," has already appeared? But Paul looked for his "appearing" in the future. 2 Tim. 4: 8. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is not light in them." Isa. 8: 20.

Hudson's New Tract

"Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment." Prof. Hudson will put to press a Tract with this title when $25 is placed in our hands towards meeting the expenses—the money to be paid back in copies of the Tract at the rate of 100 copies for $2. When we last reported, $12 had been either pledged or paid. Since then we have received the following remittances:—

S. G. Clark	$0.35
M. C. Allen	1.00
Miles Grant	1.00
A Sister whose name we are not to publish	1.00
P. B. Hoyt	1.24
Geo. Dunlap	1.00

A sister in Iowa orders five copies. The sum now wanted to complete the enterprize is $7.41. We shall not ask Bro. Hudson to put the tract to press until every cent is raised, and we are confident that our friends will not now suffer it to fail. We wish the Tract could be ready in season for the Wilbraham Camp Meeting. Let Bro. P. B. Hoyt tell how churches can aid in this matter. He sends us $1.24, and writes:—

Bro. Wendell:—Noticing in the "Crisis" that Bro. Hudson proposes to publish a tract showing that "eternal death is eternal punishment," and feeling that no one is perhaps more capable of treating the subject than he, I proposed to the church in this place that we each of us throw in our mite—three, five, ten, twenty, or twenty-five cents, as we were favored of the Lord; and thus while we would be aiding in the publishing of the tract, we also would be receiving great benefit ourselves, and also furnish ourselves with a few copies for distribution. Thus we may in the hands of the Lord be the means of spreading light and truth. You find enclosed $1.24 which you will please apply for the above purpose.

Yours truly, P. B. Hoyt.

We take the liberty to suggest that the Church to which we belong shall try the above experiment next Lord's Day. Will some brother in Albany call attention to the subject? Brn. Spencer and Brown, suppose you take hold of the business, and raise a dollar or two for us! You have fewer cares than the rest of the brethren and can attend to it about as well as not. Shall we hear from you before our next publication day? It will make you feel well to labor a little in order to bring out a work that will effectually silence the reasoning of such as assert that sinners must live everlastingly in order that they may receive "everlasting punishment." Bro. George Dunlop, in sending his dollar, says truly that the new tract is "a desideratum in our literature."

"Was Moses Raised?"

We copied an article into our paper some weeks since, with the above caption. Our doing so has been construed by some as implying on our part the belief that Moses was "raised in incorruption" to appear at the transfiguration. It is enough for us to state that we do not hold that view of the matter, and that we did not suppose it was taught in the article in question.

Luke 16: 9.

Bro. G. Trundry writes:—

"I wish that you or some other preaching brother would give in the Crisis your view of Luke 16: 9."

Several years since we sent for and obtained a Discourse on the above text, by Rev. D. D. Buck, of the M. E. Church. It was the most excellent discussion we have ever seen of the believer's duty to "make to" himself "friends of the mammon of unrighteousness." If we can find the sermon now, we will endeavor at an early day to lay portions of it before our readers. We will add that Mr. Buck is an able writer on the second advent—having published an excellent and elaborate exposition of the 24th chapter of Matthew.

His Purpose and Coming.

The purpose of grace, by which poor fallen man is to be raised to the position of the angels, is not only interesting, but demands our candid attention. Where is the mortal who cannot adore his Maker on account of the love, wisdom and power manifested in this grand design? To save the lost, and raise the fallen sons of men from woe, and what seemed to be irretrievable destruction, is an achievement whose stupendous character exceeds all other enterprises and achievements connected with the works of God. So wonderful is its character that its glory and greatness has absorbed the mind of celestial beings who, like the prophets of old, desired to look into the scheme of redemption. Of the latter class it is said, "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently," seeking to understand both the nature and the time of the event.

If then there has been such absorbing interest manifested by angels and prophets, shall we be uninterested, and evince a spirit of carelessness with regard to this matter? If Christ who died on Calvary did, by this act, taste death for every man, ought we not to interest ourselves sufficiently to accept the life offered at his hand? He died that we might live; he suffered that we might reign.

We do not dwell, however, on the subject of his death as the most interesting part of this scheme of redemption,—but we cast our eyes to the future, not to the past. We look with increasing interest, not to Calvary's hill-top, but to "Mount Zion, the city of the living God," the "heavenly Jerusalem." It is the return of the Master, the coming of the King of Kings, the dwelling of God with men, that we long for, and that will complete the work already begun. Who wants it deferred? What can be gained by it? Not a word of complaint ought we to utter if obliged to stay here for a century. Let the will of God be done. But we have no reason to believe that our stay is that, or half of it. The word of truth has spoken sufficiently clear to quiet our apprehensions touching this matter. There is and can be no mistake as to this matter. After so much has been developed, so many prophecies fulfilled, such a variety of circumstances transpired, can there be one doubt as to the near, speedy, personal advent of the Son of God? Nay, verily, "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Faith says, I believe, while the heart rejoices with exceeding joy.

Can a soul, a person be found that does or will not rejoice in prospect of His advent? Can we not say, "Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." The day hasteth, while the dawning light is chasing the darkness far aside, lighting up the pathway of the church; and hope, exultant at the prospect of speedy deliverance, fills the heart with infinite delight. The landscape of heaven is before him in prospective, and he says with confident hope, I shall soon be there.

This, we believe, is the feeling of every heart—the sentiment of every person. In proportion as the evidence accumulates, bearing on the return of the Savior, in a like proportion the world recedes from our view and loses its charms. To be in the world, and to have to do with it, is our duty;—but to be engrossed in its spirit, and overcharged with its cares, is both wicked and dangerous. There is a power, a moral power created by and resulting from a confident faith in the truth, especially that that looks for the speedy redemption of Israel. If this be so, how ought we to cherish and foster it. It is important because of its influence upon us; because it is true. I fully believe that the signs and events which have already transpired are sufficient to warrant, without any doubt, the speedy advent of the Son of God.

F. H. B.

The Blessed Ones.

This blessing was pronounced upon the disciples by the Savior while he was endeavoring to instruct them into the mysteries of the kingdom. While he declared to the Jews that they had closed their eyes and ears, lest they should be enlightened, converted and healed, he could say to the disciples "Blessed are your eyes," etc.

The hearing and seeing of the word of the Lord depends much on the tone and disposition of heart with which we study the word of truth. If there is an earnestness and a sincerity, we shall seldom fail of seeing the light and of being blessed with the truth. The Lord "revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." They are not in darkness, but are the children of the light. They who received the seed on the good ground are they, who have honest and good hearts, who keep the word and bring forth fruit with patience. There is a battling for the truth, a continual warfare, a constant vigilance required of us. And it is owing to a great extent, to this faithfulness,—to this position, that the Savior says "Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear."

The light and blessing which has burst upon the world in the "last times" finds many, whose ears and eyes are open, who see the light. These unfoldings of God's purpose are clearly seen by the lovers of truth. They are searching the Scriptures and investigating the sacred Oracles, and thus, or by these means eliciting the truth. They are the instruments, the servants of God, in setting before the world coming events. And we may safely say that, since the days of the apostles, no such unfoldings of the glorious plan of redemption have been had as is now being realized. This is seen particularly in the nature and importance of the Savior's coming. It is now seen that if there is no reward for his followers—no coming of Christ—no future life, one involves the other. Much interest is discovered as to the time of the event. Its approximation is a settled question. The events of the past, as seen in the overthrow of kingdoms and empires, the signs of the times, whether celestial, moral or political, all bespeak the return of the Savior, and we can say with great confidence, his coming is emphatically nigh.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Nova Scotia.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—I noticed in the Crisis the insertion of my hastily written note, dated at this place, which is some five or six miles from Hillsburgh proper, it being the lower part of the township; and a brother mentions the advisability of counteracting the idea that might be taken from the assertion that there were no Adventists in this vicinity but myself; not thinking, perhaps, that it is possible for several neighborhoods or vicinities to be in one large township. There are quite a number in that part of this township more generally known as Bear River, who are anxiously (I believe) looking for their coming King soon to appear, and burst the fettering bands of death asunder, liberate the blessed captives who died in faith, (some of them dear friends and relatives,) give his saints the kingdom with all its glorious appurtenances, and destroy death and him who hath the power of it, with all his hellish train, together with all those who know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Since I last wrote, there has been quite a change in the minds of some of the people of this place. Some of the brethren and sisters came down from Bear River along with Bro. Ingham and Sister Mussey, and we had some first rate meetings. O, how it helped me! The people came out, as if expecting to see "a reed shaken of the wind," or something wonderfully ludicrous; but to their surprise they heard the "words of truth and soberness," many of them never having heard an Advent sermon or one preached by an Adventist before; and some of such old and grey headed. See what tradition, superstition, and the obil of the devil professing godliness will do. They were not lost opportunities. It did me good to see tears of contrition following each other down the furrowed cheek of the aged, and the radiant eye of the christian beaming with delight. They have created a great interest in the minds of some, who now offer to do all they can towards making suitable arrangements for grove meetings, as the schoolhouse is too small and not suitably arranged for meetings of the kind. They have thrown prejudice to the winds, and are trying to do so with tradition, but find a great struggle. They want the truth in its simplicity, as it is in God's holy word, and by their conduct say, "Did not our hearts burn within us, while the Scriptures were opened unto us;"—as one said to me the other morning, "I want them to hear for themselves, for it has done me good, and I was advising them to do so, when some told me that they dared not go, as their parents and deacons of the church would not let them."

Notwithstanding I have the leering eye and bitter reproach cast upon me by the "Our religionists," for "bringing those miserable, fanatical Millerites down here," yet I am happy in it all,—although I get brought up "all standing" sometimes,—feeling that I am on duty. The prospect of soon getting paid in full, is a good stimulant—of soon getting immortality, eternal life; seeing old father Abraham, the father of the faithful, and all of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, and faithful brethren and sisters, and, the best of all, our elder brother, the King of bright glory, and rove with them over the blissful and extensive plains of eternal verdure, enjoying the luxurious fruits of Life's fair Tree, and basking in the bright beams of eternal glory,—where "there will be no more hungering or thirsting," for "the Lamb will feed them, and lead them to living fountains of water," and God the loving Father will "wipe away all tears from their eyes." And "there will be no need of the sun or moon to lighten it, for the glory of God and the Lamb is the light thereof,"—no heat; and "there will be no night there, nor any curse." No, no. There will be "no sorrow nor sighing, no sickness nor pain," no jarring sentiments, no unholy feelings nor backbitings; nothing to mar happiness, nor interfere with the eternal flow of love, joy, peace and pleasure that will prevail. O! I sigh for that land. I often think of my coming King. I cannot keep continually looking back upon his humiliation and sufferings. I like to think of his glorious return. It is my daily meditation,—when "the lame will leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb will sing," etc.,—when the green turfy graveyards and tombs of granite and marble will be rent asunder, and the entombed righteous will come forth by the mighty voice and power of God. Ah! how that cheers my (sometimes) sad heart and drooping spirit, when I think of seeing a dear sister, who was by cruel ulcerating sores and excruciating pains deprived of the use of her limbs and vocal powers, while here,—and beholding her, with others equally near and dear by the ties of nature, and of like sufferings, skipping over the blissful fields of immortality, and singing praises to God and the Lamb, in eternal youth and vigor.

And then another thought. O, the stupendous scene beheld, when these heavens under which we move, and this old, tottering, down-trodden, sin-cursed earth, which groans and travails in pain to be delivered, and is by the word of God kept in store, reserved unto fire against that great day; when the ungodly living will realize their punishment; when the elements shall melt with fervent heat; all in one great and terrible conflagration! O, what a sight! How delightfully welcome will that heavenly voice be heard, saying, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast;" also, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you,"—after which, "Every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and such as are in the sea, (which I think includes every living being) will say, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." O may I, and all of us be found watching, and with the wedding garment on, having our loins girt about with truth; for he says, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every one as their works shall be." May God bless you, and all his dear children, increase heirs to the kingdom, and save us all. Yours in hope of a speedy redemption. Joseph C. Rice.

For the Crisis.

To the Preaching Brethren.

I wish to lay before you the contents (or a part) of a letter received from an Advent brother near Vandalia, Fayette Co., Ill. The dear brother writes as follows, after telling us of his situation in life, to wit: he had one of the best farms in Ill., good buildings, with plenty to eat and drink:—"I have got all of this world's goods I want. Now I simply ask you to move here—my house shall be your home, and you never shall want so long as there is a 'shot left in the locker.' A long, generous letter, but that's not the point I am coming at. I mentioned the above to show how kind he is. He says further:—"I must have some one that loves our blessed Lord's appearing near me, or I must go where they are. For eight years I have not heard a sermon or seen the face of an Advent believer."

He pleads for a preacher:—"If you will come here, can we not persuade a preacher to come to us? The people are anxious to hear, and if a brother would come I will see that he has his support. I am well acquainted in the county, and I know of men that will give ten and twenty dollars each. I will give fifty, and a horse and buggy as long as he wants one." Dear brother Walter, I do pray the good Lord that he will send you and others into this great field. The people would hear. There are no Advent believers in this city but ourselves. There are two or three families five or six miles north of this place. Every opportunity I have (and they are many) I tell the people of the coming of Jesus to judge the world. I have scattered all the tracts and 'Searchers,' and want more. They are always received with thanks, and the request is often made me to 'talk to us from the Bible.' When I make calls, or afternoon visits, I have had those who called themselves confirmed infidels say, 'Well, you have got something new; I like that; but this old hell-fire doctrine I won't listen to. Come in often. I like to hear you talk. Have you got any books on those subjects?' I told them I had none, but would try and get some. Word has been sent me from some people that I talked with and gave some 'Searchers,' they wished I would have a Bible class; they would gladly walk from Woodburn every Sunday to attend it. (That is several miles from here.) We attend the Methodist church on Sundays, and the children the Bible class. I handed our pastor (a real good man) Cumming's 'Signs of the Times.' He has had it several weeks. Last Sunday we had a good Judgment sermon from these words, 'Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world by that man whom he hath ordained'; and closed with that old familiar hymn, 'In expectation sweet,' the whole congregation singing. It sounded sweet to our ears. . . . My letter is hastily written, amid hurrying family cares. Am well aware that there is nothing practical or very interesting to a great portion of your readers, but if you can understand our wants, that's enough. Now at Wilbraham talk this matter over (of sending a preacher or preachers out here.) Don't forget it; make a memorandum of it. Write to C. W. Pilgrim, Vandalia, Fayette Co., and cheer him with the prospect of having his ears saluted with the 'good news of the kingdom.' There are noble generous hearts out here. . . . Another thing and I will close. Why don't you preach to us through the Crisis? The letters are good—we love them; but that's the sweet cake and honey. Give us some BREAD—will you? A LOAF every week. Let it be brown, or white, or corn, if you please; but give us BREAD. Just consider we have no preaching but the Crisis. Don't let us starve quite. . . . Well, brothers, God bless you. Gird up the loins of your minds. Take courage. You have warned, exhorted, wept, prayed and entreated, but, as Father Allen, of Chicopee, used to sing,

'Hope on a little longer,
Our work is almost done.'"

Truly

'We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time!'

The sound of the drum and fife are ringing in my ears as I write. I think of the weeping mothers and wives, children left fatherless, and maidens broken hearted—and I weep too. May the Lord prepare us for his coming, whose reign will be peace, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Minnesota.

DEAR BRO. WENDELL:—Thinking that there are some who take the Crisis that would be glad to hear from us, (to whom we cannot personally write,) to such we would say, we are away out here in Minnesota, almost alone, but trying to live for God—although somewhat discouraged on account of having no meetings to attend, and we are so far from any preaching brethren that we cannot often have any preaching. It is now almost one year since we have had any preaching about the good news of the kingdom. We have various other kinds of preaching, but it is all mixed with politics, and they can hardly preach a sermon without the stars and stripes waving over their heads. In fact, their leaders are leaders of companies that have volunteered to fight, if necessary, and they are drilling every week. Under the labors of our dear Bro. Teeple we had a little band gathered together; but some have gone away, and others have embraced the seventh day Sabbath. One has joined the Methodists for the sake of his companion, she being a Methodist, but they say that they rather hear Bro. Teeple preach than any other man they ever heard; he still advocates the Advent doctrine. There are, however, a great many Advent believers within twelve miles around. At Ottawa, on the Minnesota river, there are a number who are anxious to have a church organized. We think a minister might be well sustained among us all. If any brother who may read this feels like coming west, we will do all we can for them, and welcome them to our homes, such as they are. When I look over the list of appointments and see how many there are east, it seems as though some of them might be spared to come west, to set things in order before the Master comes. The tracts are doing a great deal of good, but they cannot do all. There are a great many who are convinced of the truth by reading tracts, but they want some one to set them to work, and put into practice what they believe. If ever there was a time when we should practice what we believe it is now, when there are so many evil influences to draw our minds off from every thing that is good. We need on the whole armor and not a part, for the enemy of all righteousness is ever ready to pierce us through with his arrow just at the time when we are trusting in our own strength and feel the safest.

Dear Brethren and sisters, how I would like to see you all, and meet with you for prayer and praise to Him who hath kept us by his grace, and hath given his Son to redeem us from all sin and eternal death. Among the names that we sometimes see in the Crisis are Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, under whose labors we were converted; would be glad to hear your voices once more; may the Lord bless your labors and give you strength to work for him while time lasts. We prize the Crisis very highly and would not know what to do without it. It is the only preaching we have. May the Lord bless you, Bro. Wendell, in your arduous undertaking, and enable you to give meat in due season to those that are hungry. Dear brethren, pray for us that our faith fail not in these trying times. Yours, looking for speedy deliverance,

LYDIA MASKER.

For the Crisis.

"The Coming Struggle."

BRO. WENDELL:—Please accept for your readers the following rich thoughts, in a letter from our former Pastor, Eld. S. A. Chaplin. We esteem them too rich for our eyes alone.

R. S. W.

"With regard to the 'Coming Struggle,' I do not know that I can say anything definite at the present. The forces of Evil seem gathering for a terrible blow at 'their hour and the power of darkness.' Our dear Savior had his experience of this at the close of a former dispensation. His people must 'be baptized with his baptism, and drink his cup.' 'The disciple is not greater than his Master, nor the servant greater than his Lord.' The telescope of prophecy has always disclosed a storm-cloud of vengeance hanging in terrific foldings over the 'end of this age.' That cloud which has so long been telescopic, is looming up now, and dark'ning all the heavens with its dismal drapery. What floods of wrath, what bolts of vengeance are treasured there! We are entering the time of 'The distress of nations.' The 'wine-cup of fury' is now held to the lips of the wicked nations, and they must drink it to the dregs. Asiatic nations are drinking,—European nations are drinking,—our nation is drinking! The cry of the poor and oppressed has gone up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. A nation of oppressors were once drowned in the Red Sea,—another nation, that have blasphemed heaven by claiming that it ordained the vile system of slavery, will perish in a Red Sea of Blood! Neither will the North go unpunished. O, my country—my country! Thy glory is departed! Is my 'citizenship' in heaven? God's 'kingdom will never be moved. If we are the happy recipients of this, let us have grace that we may serve God with reverence and godly fear. I am interested in the events of the day. God will overrule all for the good of his people. He will so restrain the forces of evil as to save his church. The Gospel will accomplish all it was designed to achieve—'then will the end come!'"

Hammonton, N. J., June 20, '61.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. B. Hoyt.

BRO. WENDELL:—I have often thought I would say a few words through the Crisis to the brethren scattered abroad, many of whom I was once acquainted with. Many will remember of having heard my voice in defence of the glorious truths of the gospel in the years '47–49. Brethren, you have not heard from me since—and why? Because I was captivated and led by Satan at his will. I have spent twelve years in the dark paths of scepticism. But you will ask me, "What brought you back to the fold of God?" That is what I am going to tell you. It was the doctrine of life only through Jesus Christ, and really it seems to me this lies at the foundation of all our hope. For if Jesus was not raised from the dead, then surely, as is taught by the apostle, our faith, our hope, our all is vanity. 1 Cor. 15: 13–18. It will only be by Jesus Christ that we shall "live" at all, and only by and through him that we shall "live eternally." In the darkest day of my scepticism, I was always ready to argue from the Bible, and though I denied its authenticity, yet I delighted to hector professors, members of the popular churches; and the "state of the dead and punishment of the wicked" were topics I always sought to confound them with. I would tell them they did not believe the Bible any more than I, "for," said I, "you say when a man dies he knows more than when he was alive, while the Bible says, 'the dead know not any thing.' Again, you say, 'the wicked will live forever,' while the Bible says, 'they shall not see life, and shall be as though they had not been.'"

It was in a conversation with a very excellent christian lady on the Bible and Bible truths, that these subjects came up, especially the Resurrection. Never in my life did I have such clear apprehensions of truth; never before had I seen such beauty and excellency in the doctrine, and that 15th of 1 Cor. seemed like another story. I discoursed to her and other listeners with wisdom and power, such as I had never before enjoyed. I saw how adapted to our case is the gospel of the Son of God. Surely, may I say, "Life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel." If we ever live, it must be by Jesus Christ. Brethren, you may well calculate what effect this conversation had on me, and from that night I determined to investigate the foundation of our hope, beginning with the Bible. As I used my reasoning faculties, (and I also required more evidence to substantiate the truth of the Bible than would be required to substantiate any other question) my scepticism melted away like wax before the fire, and to be honest, I found I must confess that "Jesus is the Christ." And so I have done, and so I by the grace of God will do till "Christ who is our life shall appear."

Brethren, you have not a single reason to be discouraged. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise." "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." "For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." "Stand fast therefore," having your lamps burning; yes, and if they are burning they will be giving light. And the Lord hath said, "Ye are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Watch and pray.

North Fairfield, O., July 29.

From Wm. M. Ingham.

BRO. WENDELL:—We have had some interesting meetings. The people turn out quite well to hear, and some pay good attention. We held a grove meeting last Saturday and Sunday in Clement's Port, Nova Scotia. Had some help from Bro. Fitch, from Scott's Bay, N. S.; Bro. Woodworth, of Granville; Bro. Rice, from Bear River; Sister Mussey, and the brethren and sisters helped in the meeting. Good turn out. Sunday good attention by the most—some exceptions. Hope that some good will result from the effort. Have another at the same place in two weeks.

I am still striving for the better country, hoping that deliverance is near. I have baptized one that embraced the doctrine of the speedy coming of the Lord, sleep of the dead, and destruction of the wicked. Was converted from scepticism by reading Bro. Hastings' tracts; others have become interested in the same way. Be encouraged, Bro. H., to send forth the little messengers. Brethren and Sisters, let us do our duty too in helping on this work, and we shall reap in due season if we faint not. The harvest day is coming soon. We would all like to hear our Master say to us "well done." We may if we do well. Lord, help us. Amen.

Clement's Port, N. S., July 11, '61.

From Janett Mayo.

DEAR BRO. WENDELL:—I love God's word and pray for wisdom to understand it aright. For the last twenty years Advent preaching and writing have been on "The Lord is at hand and may come any day." I ask, can we not know what is yet to be done before that event? Jerusalem is still trodden down by the Gentiles. We read in Ezek. 38th, that the word of the Lord came to him, and then (v. 8) we have what the word was, alluding to Gog, or in other places, the King of the North. "In the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them." Also 11th verse, "And thou shalt say, (still alluding to Gog) I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, having neither bars nor gates." I ask if these promises are not in the future? Is it not the real land of literal Israel that is spoken of? Is it not the Jew that is to be gathered there and dwell in a state of rest, or safety, when Gog comes like a storm? Is this not parallel with Rev. 20?

From Geo. W. Turner.

BRO. WENDELL:—I would say to you, (although unacquainted with you) that the cause of truth is still on the gain in this part of the west. I have been doing what I can, in company with Brethren Sheldon, Barnes and Smith, in holding four grove meetings in this section. The field is large here and laborers but few. There are many in this vicinity that would like to take the paper, but there is one serious objection; that is, our money here will hardly go in the State, at present, and we can very seldom get hold of eastern currency. I desired to remit more at this time, but I think you will hear from me again soon.

Obituary Notices.

July 25th, 1861, in the 36th year of her age, Sister SELINA JENKS, wife of Bro. Norman Jenks of West Poultney, Vt.

Her disease was consumption. Sister Jenks embraced the faith of Christ's reign on the earth and immortality only through him, under the labors of our dear Bro. Grant, in the winter of 1858; and in just two years from the day that she was buried with Christ in baptism by Bro. Grant, the writer of this preached her funeral sermon, and she was buried in the cold, silent grave, to await the resurrection of the dead. Since her acceptance of Christ, she has led an exemplary christian life, hoping very soon to see her Savior, and frequently during her sickness she expressed very earnestly her desire to have Jesus come. Her religion was without ostentation, and her benevolence exhibited so fully the christian element, that her left hand knew not what her right hand did, and with a quite intuitive perception she recognized the wants of those on whom she lavished her favors. When her work was done, her sufferings were finished by "the shadow of death" gently gathering over her as the lengthening shadow of evening, and with her spirit returned to God who gave it, she fell quietly

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

The church in this place has lost an exemplary christian, her friends a pure, loving friend, but the loss of her dear husband, who can tell? He sorrows in hope, and may God bless and watch over him, and when the feelings of loneliness entwine themselves around him, may Jesus, who can be touched with "the feeling of our infirmities," be abundantly present with him to impart aid and consolation. May the father and sisters of the deceased, who are far away, find [illegible] comfort in the promise [illegible] that "those also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. 4: 14. Michigan Grove and Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove and Campmeeting in the town of Holly, Oakland County, Michigan, to commence Sept 4th, 1861, and continue over Lord's day, and longer if thought proper. The meeting is to be held on the farm of Bro. Hiram Austin, five miles north and east of Holly Depot, situated on the Detroit and Milwaukie, R. R., and about one and a half miles east of the plank road leading from Holly to the city of Flint. And now, my dear brethren and sisters throughout the State of Michigan, I wish to give you all a short, but warm and earnest invitation to come to this gathering of the saints. As this is the first meeting of the kind ever held in the State, we do hope and pray most fervently that all brethren and sisters who can possibly arrange their domestic affairs, will come with tents and provisions to the encampment, and spend a week with each other in a warm-hearted love feast. The times call for such an assemblage. The signs in the natural, moral and political world are agitating multitudes, and they are inquiring, "What things are coming on the earth?" The times are most eventful. Our blessed Savior is soon coming on the earth, and now is a good time, my brethren, to work for God, for one another and for perishing humanity around us. Come, then, to this meeting; come with warm hearts, come filled with and praying in the Holy Ghost; come with a zeal worthy of the hope you cherish; come with Jesus stamped upon your affections; come abundantly prepared to take care of yourselves and others. Come from Grand Blanc, Flint, Saginaw, Flushing, Davison, Richfield, Tyrone, Pleasant Valley, Ypsilanti, Nankin, Grand Rapids, Detroit. Come from all over the State. This is not a sectional meeting because of peculiar views, but it embraces all that love the Lord's appearing and want to be saved when Jesus appears. Come, one and all, to glorify God, and come so as to be on the ground at the commencement of the meeting; do not fail in this. Let our noble and enterprising Sisters take hold of this cause and we are sure of success, by the blessing of God. Brethren Wolverton, Anable, Jerome, Roberts, Skinner, Doty, Richards, Adams, Austin, Servis, and the church generally through that section, are alive for such a gathering.

We hope to see as many of our preaching brethren from the different parts of the State as can come, and this invitation does not exclude any out of the State. We hope that if any of the servants of Christ in other States, or coming from the east about that time, will arrange to attend this meeting.

In behalf of the church,
A. N. SEYMOUR.

The Maine Annual Advent Conference.

The next session of this Conference will be held in Yarmouth, (in the Institute occupied by the Advent Church) Wednesday, Sept. 11th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. The brethren there intend to make ample provision for all the friends who attend. Those who come by cars, if on the Kennebec and Portland R. R., will leave the cars at Yarmouth Junction, about half a mile from the meeting. Those coming on the Waterville, Farmington, or Grand Trunk R. R., will leave at Yarmouth Station, a few rods from the meeting. Those coming from the Penobscot can take the boat to Portland, then the Grand R. R., eleven miles to Yarmouth. Call on George W. Harvey, George Humphrey, and R. R. York. It will be a good place for another friendly greeting of the pilgrims in this time of trouble. It may be the last. We hope to see all the Advent ministers of Maine who can work and worship in harmony and union, and as many other such brethren and sisters as can well attend.

H. B. SEVEY, President.
I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

Richmond, Me., Aug. 1st, '61.

Conference.

The Northern Illinois Conference of Adventists will be held in Shabbona, at Shabbona Grove, west side, near Bro. Norton's, commencing Sept. 4th, at 7 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Bro. Chandler is expected with the New England mission tent. Provision will be made for those who cannot carry their provisions. All other preachers are invited to come. [illegible]

H. G. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of Conference.

Campmeeting in Maine.

There will be a Campmeeting in Exeter, Me., near the old spot, by the Chamberlin meeting-house, commencing the first Monday in September next and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren coming from the West by cars will stop at Newport, where there will be teams provided to convey them to the meeting. Those coming by water will come to Bangor, where they also will find teams in waiting. There will be a Boarding Tent on the ground to accommodate all who wish for board. We hope all who purpose to attend this meeting will be on the ground as early in the week as possible; and all who can will bring their tents and bedding as they will be very convenient for ourselves and for those who will not be able to bring them.

P. S. We shall meet the brethren on the steamboat wharf on the arrival of the first boat in the week, and if there are any who cannot come on that day, if they will inform us through the Crisis, or by private letter to D. E. Ireland, North Hermon, on what day they will be at Bangor, we will send a team for them. In behalf of the brethren,

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to GEORGE T. ADAMS, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

ESPECIAL BOOK NOTICE.

English Bibles.

We have just received a well assorted selection of genuine English Bibles, the prices of which we affix below. Having paid cash for them, we get them at the lowest prices, and therefore can afford to sell them for cash at the lowest retail rates. There is a heavy duty levied upon all printed matter coming from the English side of the line; but, all things taken into account, we offer them lower than sold elsewhere, as follows:—

Pearl, (reference betwixt the verses) roan binding, $1 25; postage 14 cts.
Pearl, do. do. colored calf, $1 50; postage 15 cts.
Pearl, do. do. morocco, $1.64; postage 15 cts.
Nonpareil, do. do. roan, $1.50; postage 21 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.25; postage 21 cts.
Minion, do. do. roan, $1.75; postage 26 cts.
Do. do. do. morocco, $2.50; postage 26 cts.

Please send in your orders, which shall be promptly attended to.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

R. WENDELL, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

Psalms 119 : 18.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
Thy wondrous love to see,
Revealed to all who search thy word,—
The Savior died for me!

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
My sinful self to see;
Oh! let the covenant of thy wings
My refuge ever be.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes"
"What time I am afraid"
To read the promise of thy word,"—
"On me thy trust be staid."

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
When war's dread notes resound,
To see thine angel spirit bands
Encamped thy saints around.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
When dark the storm appears,
To see "my Father at the helm,"
Whose wisdom quells my fears.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
Lest in "temptation's hour"
I bring reproach upon thy cause,
O'ercome by Satan's power.

"Lord, open thou my eyes,"
From error's path to steer;
Upheld and guided by thy hand,
I'm safe from danger here.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
When "fiery trials" come,
To see Love written on them all,
And say, "Thy will be done."

"Lord, open thou mine eyes"
To view thy presence nigh,
When earth and all its joys depart,
My summons comes to die.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes"
"To read my title clear"
To mansions in that kingdom blest,
Whose coming draweth near.

For the Crisis.

"Who will Live Again?"

Before we enter this discussion, we wish it to be perfectly understood, that we have the most kindly feelings toward Bro. Preble, and all other brethren. Our prayer is, Lord, help us "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

For brevity's sake, we shall use the letter "P" to distinguish Bro. Preble.

In the article to which P replied, we used the following language: "We are very anxious that some good brother would show us how he can maintain the reliving of the wicked dead, without doing one of two things, viz., affirm universal salvation, or give up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death." P steps forward, (and I honor him for his promptness and candor,) and says, "In answer to Bro. C. I would just say, I think, on reflection, it will appear evident to all that universal salvation is clearly taught in the Scriptures." Let us try this.

What is salvation? "Preservation from destruction, danger, or great calamity."—Webster. Then "universal 'preservation from destruction' is clearly taught in the Scriptures." And this in the face of God's word, "All the wicked will he destroy." But P will say "This is after they are saved." Let us look at this "salvation" a moment. Suppose a man, having been sentenced to death for the crime of murder, is accosted by a doctor, thus: "My friend, I will save you." Hope emits its brightest ray on the face of the condemned. He eagerly asks, "How?" The doctor replies, "I am a good physician. After the sentence of the law is executed and you are dead, by my great skill I will restore you to life." The man dances for joy. He exults in this happy escape. He begins to pour forth his thanks to his kind preserver. But the doctor continues, "After I have restored you to life, I will kill you again." The poor victim of the doctor's (not the law's) cruelty curses him, and calls him MURDERER. Let any one consider this illustration and then deny that this is what P's "salvation" amounts to, if he can. If we were permitted to give it a name we should call it, (what it really is,) Double Damnation.

P says that Christ is the medium through which this equivocal salvation comes. If Christ had not come he must admit that one death would have satisfied the claims of justice. But Christ in coming as a Life-giver has also brought death in his train. This envelops Him in a new character. We can no longer say, "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world." Jesus, according to this view, has actually brought CONDEMNATION and DEATH with Him. "He that believeth not" is not only "condemned already," but there is another condemnation in store for him, in, by, and through Jesus Christ alone. Then "the Son of man" has "come to destroy men's lives." "Mark this; damned AFTER they have been raised from the dead."

We are afraid that P has been over anxious to find a meaning for 1 Tim. 4: 10. He says, "Christ the 'Savior of all men, ESPECIALLY of them that believe.'" The text does not say so. It reads thus: "We trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." Christ is not mentioned. We shall discover [illegible] by referring [illegible]

His mercy He saved us."—Titus 3: 4, 5. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him."—1 John 4: 9. What does all this mean? Why, that "the living God" has provided a way of escape for us from sin and death, and He is willing that all should accept the proffered mercy, and come to the knowledge of the truth. For this purpose He has sent His Son "that whosoever believeth on Him" may "not perish," but "live through Him." Thus "God is the Savior of all men" inasmuch as He has provided a way of salvation; but he is "specially" the Savior "of those that believe" on the Lord Jesus Christ, because they will "live through Him." "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

We trust enough has been said to convince P that he cannot logically claim "salvation" for the wicked. We will now endeavor, briefly, to show that he has no scriptural right to use that word in connection with unbelievers. He admits there is no "universal salvation to holiness and life!" He is right in linking the words "holiness and life," for life is just as naturally the effect of holiness, as death is the effect of sin. But how can there be "salvation" without "life?" The Scriptures clearly teach us that the "wages of sin is death." Now to be saved from death is to have life. Will P please explain how any one can be saved from death, without having life? If he cannot do this, (and he certainly cannot) we trust that he will acknowledge "that he has no scriptural nor logical right to affirm universal salvation."

Having shown that P does not "affirm universal salvation," we proceed to notice what he has done. In our article we presented the two horns of a dilemma, one of which must be grasped by any one who "maintains the reliving of the wicked dead." P supposes that he has hold of the first horn, but, unfortunately, he has seized the other. Instead of "affirming universal salvation," he has "given up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death."

Is the noun "death" singular or plural? Is there not a difference between "death" and "deaths"? But P identifies them if he says that the penalty of sin is "literal death." For he believes that the penalty is literal deaths, a "first literal death," and a "second literal death." God declared the penalty to Adam thus: "Thou shalt surely die." P's system would construe it, "Thou shalt surely die twice." Paul says "The wages of sin is death." P's view would force us to read "The wages of sin is deaths." In all candor, we would ask if he has not "given up the foundation that the penalty of sin is literal death?"

P speaks of "the first 'literal death,' or Adamic death." Is there any other literal death except Adamic death? We know of no other. "In Adam all die." We do not read in the word of God of any other source of death. Death is sown in the animal nature. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," cannot "die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 36. They who are raised from the dead have a "spiritual" nature. "Death hath no more dominion over" them. See 1 Cor. 15th ch. for a detailed account of the great resurrection scheme. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. There is a sowing in dishonor; there is a raising in glory: there is a sowing in weakness; there is a raising in power: there is sown a natural (animal) body; there is raised a spiritual body," etc.

Where then does this "second literal death" come from? Hath it a father? Who hath begotten it? Is it found in the Old Testament? Not a word of it. Is it found in the four gospels? Not a word of it. Is it found in Paul's epistles? Hastings' "Pauline Theology" was the means, under God, of confirming me in the belief that death is the future and eternal punishment of the unbeliever. The argument is irresistible. It prostrates the doctrine of eternal torment as the ark of God prostrated Dagon. The author remarks concerning Paul, "From such a man we should expect a corresponding exposition of Christian doctrine. He would not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. To him we look for a full and perfect exposition of Christian doctrine. If we find it not here, we shall find it no where. Now, mark how the "second literal death" falls before the above extract. Paul, who "kept back nothing that was profitable;" who "shunned not to declare all the counsel of God," does not whisper a word about any "second literal death." And here we take occasion to say, there is better ground for "eternal torment" in the Scriptures, than for a "second literal death."

The phrase "second death" occurs only in the highly figurative and symbolic book [illegible]

age of the Gospel dispensation, the people of God might know their latitude and longitude, and thus reckon with tolerable certainty their distance from the shore and heaven. It has been shamefully perverted from its legitimate use. It has been forced to teach doctrine, a thing that was not intended by its great Author. It has been literally, instead of figuratively interpreted. The 11th verse of the 14th chap. has been the theme of countless sermons, and by a base literal construction has been converted into a vehicle of the most atrocious fable that ever cursed Christendom. We, of all other men, ought to take warning from the follies of the past. We are justified in quoting whatever we find in the Apocalypse that harmonizes with the literal Scriptures, but we are not at liberty to raise a system of Biblical interpretation, on the solitary basis of the 20th of Revelation, especially, when we consider that its fulfillment is in the future. We may, or may not have the right view of that chapter. Time, which weighs all theories in its perfect balances, will tell the story. Meanwhile, let us take care, lest we "add to" or "take away from" that sublime and marvellous book.

If P wishes us to give an explication of the phrase "second death" that will harmonize with the view of "No future life to the wicked" we shall be pleased to do so. At present we leave it, pausing, however, to notice his closing remark. He says "I do not understand how any one can die a 'second death,' without being made alive from the first death!" To this we reply, We do not understand how "death and hell" can die a "second death" without previously dying the first death!!!

P has not only given up "literal death" as the penalty of sin, but he has also surrendered a point to the common enemy. He has yielded the position that literal "life" is the reward of the righteous. Have we not been battling, and are we not now battling with theologastricism (Pardon me, kind friend, I have read "Landis,") on this very point? They deny, and we as stoutly affirm, (God help us!) that "life" is to be literally understood. What then does P do with the following texts? "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life." "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." "And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you." "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

We have gone far enough to show P his real position. He has not "affirmed universal salvation." When we said "universal salvation" we meant what we said. But he has "given up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death."

"IN CHRIST SHALL ALL BE MADE ALIVE."

M. D. W. assaults two "points in" my "article bearing the above caption." I have not discovered any breach in the fortification, as a result of the attack. Let all take notice of the First Point. We spoke, in our article, of "the absurdity of bringing up the antediluvian world after they have literally 'perished.' (2 Pet. 3: 6.)" If the least idea of controversy had been in our mind, we should have written thus: "the absurdity existing in the supposition that the antediluvian world will ever live again, as they have literally perished." The rendering of M. D. W., however, is acceptable. She (I believe my reviewer is a lady) asks, "Is it an 'absurdity' to believe that such who have 'perished' will live again?" We reply, it depends upon the meaning attached to the word "perished." In our article we used it in its literal sense. We said "literally perished." Our reviewer quotes three texts from the Old Testament to prove that "the just man perisheth." Now the word "perish," in those texts, cannot be literally understood, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 15. Jesus says of the "just, good, and righteous," that "they shall never perish." John 10: 28. "If Christ be not raised * * then they also which are fallen asleep IN CHRIST are perished." "But now is Christ risen from the dead;" consequently, they are not "perished." 1 Cor. 15: 18, 20. We now answer the inquiry in the affirmative. It is "an 'absurdity' to believe that such who have 'perished' will live again."

Second Point. In our article, we referred to "the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, who are 'set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire,' which utterly precludes the idea that they can ever exist again." To this M. D. W. objects, and asks, "If their destruction by eternal fire is their final end and punishment, how can it be more tolerable for them at the judgment than for Chorazin and Bethsaida?" As this objection has been answered by George Storrs, in his excellent essay, "Life from the Dead: or, the Righteous only will Live Again," we take the liberty of quoting his remarks.

"Sodom and Capernaum. [illegible] amples will explain the principle of interpreting for all. Take that of Sodom and Capernaum.

"What is the subject? It is the judgment of certain cities. 'Thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be brought down to hell'—hades—'for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day: but I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee'—Capernaum. Now observe, the day 'of judgment' here spoken of is the day of Capernaum's visitation for its disregard of Jesus works.' Sodom was judged, overthrown, and did not 'remain until this day' in which Christ spoke; therefore judgment had been executed on that city. Now, what? The day of Capernaum's judgment was at hand, and it should be more intolerable than the infliction on Sodom. The day of judgment on Sodom was sudden and entire, at once. Capernaum's was protracted and covered a length of time; but, says Kitto, in his Biblical Literature, 'The denunciation has been so completely accomplished, that even the site of Capernaum is quite uncertain.'

"Such texts, then, have no reference to a future infliction on Sodom and other previously destroyed cities, but are only an emphatic expression of terrible judgment on cities thereafter to be visited, and who had disregarded the 'ensample' of Sodom's judgment."

As the remaining remarks of M. D. W. are an elaboration of the same argument presented in the previous Crisis by Bro. Preble, and as we have already joined issue with him, we shall close this article, after offering one of the many objections we have to her main argument.

She says, "The entire argument of the apostle in the 15th of Cor. is to establish, 1st, the resurrection of Jesus Christ; and 2d, the resurrection of all mankind." With the first proposition we agree; with the second, we do not. Verses 42–46 are a part of "the apostle's entire argument." "So also is the resurrection of the dead." Query. All mankind? Observe. "There is a sowing in corruption; there is a raising in incorruption." A raising of what? Ans. The dead who were sown. Now, if we say "all mankind" are included in this argument, what follows? Why, that "all mankind" are raised incorruptible; "all mankind" are raised in glory; "all mankind" are raised in power; "all mankind" are raised "spiritual" bodies. In a word, "all mankind" are saved, and saved eternally.

The mind of our sister will soon be relieved of the "abundance of Scriptures which" are supposed to "prove as conclusively the reliving of the wicked as of the righteous," if she will "carefully examine" the "essay" we have already mentioned. We do not say that it is "sufficient to convince every one who would be convinced at all," but we do say that any one who proposes to overthrow the argument, ought to prepare himself for the mightiest polemical conflict he ever experienced.

JOSEPH T. CURRY.

For the Crisis.

Is it not thus?

Christ does not reign upon the throne of David until all his enemies are put under his feet by the Father. For this reason the Son, when he comes, delivers up the kingdom to God, even the Father, that he may put down all rule, authority and power; for he (the Father) must reign till he hath put all enemies under Christ's feet. When he (Christ) delivers up the kingdom to God, then the Father takes his great power and reigns; consequently "the nations are angry," and thy wrath is come, "and the time of the dead, that they should be judged," and give reward. Showing the plain import and harmony of this text: "The seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world (by being delivered up to God) have become the kingdom of our Lord"; and when all rule and power, with the last enemy, death, are destroyed, then his Christ is crowned King on the throne, fulfilling,—"The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

This seems to harmonize with Jesus in his exposition of the parable of the tares and wheat; that both should grow together till the harvest; that the harvest is the end of the world, or age—this age. What is to be done then? "He shall send his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and they that do iniquity." And if the devil offends or does iniquity, he must be among the all things, and casts them into a furnace of fire. Malachi and Peter's burning day is this furnace; in this age, all the tares, all that is offensive, go into the fire together. This fire makes clean work when Paradise begins to bloom. What next? "Then shall the righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

This looks like strait work, and scriptural to me. The throne established, Christ seated upon it, his reign eternal, no end to the kingdom, earth restored, the saints take it and possess it forever and ever. Glory be to God. Immortality has begun. The good are all there, and life is theirs as long as they desire it—life eternal. The wheat gathered into the garner, the chaff burned up, the glory of God fills the earth. Amen [illegible]

The Day of Rest.

A LECTURE BY REV. H. H. DOBNEY, ENGLAND.

(Concluded.)

THE RESULT OF THE WHOLE, then, is this, viz.: Omitting all reference to the Mosaic law, as law, and except as we may derive therefrom valuable ideas, and learn important lessons, and receive intimations worthy the most reverential pondering; we have three things:—

First:—The original "blessing and sanctifying" of the seventh day, as one of sacred and sweet repose, and in delightful remembrance of Creation, and of God as Creator.

Second:—The fact of the adoption, by the theocratic king for his peculiar people, of a day of most entire cessation from all work whatever; and which was designed in love to all classes, and out of especial compassion and tender mercy to servants and the laboring classes in general, and all cattle. In addition to the work of creation, there was now the national deliverance of Israel to be remembered, and other national mercies, and the peculiar relation of Jehovah as their King and Law-giver and God. So that, though the institution does not come to us precisely and formally as a command, it does come to us as a lesson of highest wisdom, and recommended by all the authority that can attach to the wisdom and goodness of God.

And, Third:—A "Lord's Day," in still happier commemoration of a redemption begun for a fallen world, (begun, I say, but in some respects also completed—completed, that is to say, in the person of the new Head of the race, the second Adam, who, as our Forerunner, rose triumphant over Death and entered into glory)—the day on which one in the likeness of man rose from the grave, and ascended into the pure and heavenly regions, thenceforth to "draw all men unto him." The first day of the week identifies itself, as it were, with the first of creation, instead of the last; in other words, as the original Sabbath was retrospective, ours is prospective; that was commemorative, ours anticipatory. We are not at the end of something that is past, but at the beginning of something that is future. We have the first day of a "new creation," and when its six days' work are ended, glorious indeed will be the "rest that remaineth for the people of God," when even "the creation also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8: 21. Towards that everlasting Sabbath, how earnestly are we exhorted to look, and for it diligently to labor! Heb. 4: 1–11.

Some Christians perhaps would still prefer to place the observance of the day on the ground of positive injunction, as safest. But truth alone is safe. And I confess that the high ground of a divine idea, and spiritual law, and Christian liberty, appears by far the highest. The full idea of the day of sacred rest, as deduced from the three facts I have brought out, remains in all its fullness, and fraught to overflowing with innumerable blessings. But, still, perhaps, some will deem that I leave much unsaid. They will ask for the word that should be spoken to both those who are piously anxious to see the day honored by the masses, and those who unhappily find no pleasure in the Christian's joyous rest and worship.

To the former, then, I respectfully submit, that the "desecration of the day" which is so sincerely deplored is not itself the evil to be lamented and remedied, but only one of the symptoms of it. The task to be achieved, or at least aimed at, is more difficult, even, than the obtaining of an outward decorum on the day which God, in Eden, blessed and sanctified. The many have to be won to God and holiness, to be attracted to religion, by plainer and happier evidences, that, in yielding their whole selves to the Lord we love, they would truly "find rest unto their souls," and "joy, and peace." "First make the tree good, and the fruit will be good also," said the Master, whose own way was to work from within, outward; whereas most moral and religious reformers have unwisely sought to work from without, inward. I do not think that to begin with enforcing a law of "Sabbath observance" is the method that heavenly wisdom points out. They who find no pleasantness in religion are repelled, rather than won, by all attempts to restrain their freedom of action in the few hours that, alone of all the week, so many of them can command. The real problem is, How to so gain their respect and confidence, so engraft on their minds the conviction that "wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness," that they will of themselves do homage to "the beauty of holiness;" and long to be as we are, and yearn to share our manifest happiness? This is not the case at present, as is too evident. And I think we Christians have to become far more happy illustrations of the power of godliness to bless, ere they will say, "We will go with you, for we perceive that God is with you." But to begin with them by what they resent as an intrusive interference with their liberty and their chosen recreations, is, it humbly appears to me, "putting the cart before the horse," and pursuing a method the exact reverse of that which our Lord adopted. And this the more so, if the brief view I have but suggested of the real idea of the day be the true one, and Christianity be, indeed, a thing of spirit rather than letter, of "life" rather than of form.

And to the other class, I would as respectfully submit the following suggestions: Very few of God's laws are given us in writing, or come to us in the form of a command. We speak, e. g. of the laws of gravitation, heat, health, etc., and every body knows that if any of them be violated painful consequences result. These laws, however, have to be discovered by observation and experience and thought and reasoning. They are not written commands. They are not express injunctions. But not the less really are they laws, as all the world is agreed. Nor are they any the less operative for good, if observed, or for evil if violated. And thus within the sphere of religion also, and social morals, there are in like manner laws which are not given in the form of express commands, but are nevertheless deducible as the will of God from the facts and laws of Scripture [illegible]

Sabbath law, where there is no Sabbath command. The grateful and cheerful observance of one day in seven, as a season of holy rest from all work and secular labor—and from all recreation, too, that does not tend to promote the repose of both body and mind, and to further the intellectual, moral, and spiritual well-being of the individual and community—comes commended by the highest of all imaginable motives. For in Eden itself God blessed and sanctified it. To the Israelites it was "given" as a boon and blessing; and for fifteen hundred years it was a cardinal institution with that chosen and peculiar people, loved by all the good, honored by all the great, and earnestly enforced by all the true and noble prophet spirits among them. As a rigid and inflexible command, indeed, it is not imposed on us; but it would tax the rarest invention to conceive a happier, grander, or more beautiful boon, to a busy and overworked nation, than the law of one day in seven as a holy day. It is as important to secure it now as it ever was. Nay, in such an eager, restless, inordinately competitive age as this, it is far more imperatively required, as a universal mercy, than ever before in the history of the world.

If the private worship of God bring with it innumerable blessings, over-running and bedewing the soul, and stretching forward into the future and the infinite, how much additional advantage is there in social devotion, and the common worship of one God and Father, where "the rich and the poor meet together, and the Lord is the Maker of them all." England owes all to her deep religiousness and reverence, as the wisest of the continentals acknowledge. But the general public worship of God (on so many grounds indispensable) demands for its possibility, a general concurrence; and every man whose own conduct, if it were commonly adopted, would render the general religious observance of the day impossible or more difficult, is not only seriously injuring himself but acting perniciously on the nation at large. Surely then, nothing but extreme and most unworthy selfishness (unfraternal, as well as unpatriotic) would say to this, "I don't care!" For, as I have said; In the degree in which the reasons exist which have ever been alleged for the observance of the Sabbath, in that degree the sacred importance of regarding it as one of holy rest still stands as a reason, though not as an express enactment, as a spiritual, though not a verbal law. And though your personal liberty shall not be brought in question, yet neither must the liberty be infringed on of all those in whatever class, though the very humblest, who desire, in fellowship with their Father, to bless and sanctify a seventh day, and, in fellowship with His Son, to devote the Lord's day to holy purposes. The law of liberty is this: That no man's liberty to do, or not to do, shall trench upon any other man's equal liberty for the same. And I think this rule, if applied, will settle many practical questions that are being now agitated among us. If Christians have no right to exact from non-Christians, these latter have no right to exact upon the former.

God give us all true wisdom, and endow us with "the mind that was in Christ Jesus our Lord," and then we shall love as brethren, and God will be honored amongst us, and his laws and counsels be revered, and God will bless us, and ours shall be called a delightsome land, and England shall still be "THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD, AND THE SALT OF THE EARTH."

Religious Reading.

Any minister who will take the pains to investigate the matter, may learn some curious facts in regard to the supposed inability of christian families to supply themselves with religious reading. He may find two or even three daily secular prints in a household where no scrap from the religious press is seen. He may find centre-tables supplied with "Parlor Annuals," or "Christian offerings," or other expensive ornamental books, which are never read, it, indeed, worth reading; while the religious paper, at one-fourth of their expense, and of ten thousand-fold greater value, is more than can be afforded. He may find young men, and professors, too, whose cigars for one week would pay for the best religious paper in the land, yet living with no paper, and no knowledge of, or interest in, the advancement of religion, or truth, or civilization in the world. He may find young ladies of few educational advantages mourning over their want of opportunity for mental culture, but never dreaming of the fact that a well-read religious paper would do more for their real advancement than any amount of finery in dress or imitation of merely superficial accomplishments. May it not be safely said that no investment in tuition even, or in books (the Bible excepted,) can secure so great a good in proportion to the outlay, as the subscription price of an able religious paper?—N. Y. Evangelist.

A Brief Pastoral Charge.

I charge you, my young brother, to take care of your Body. Eat nothing which does not agree with your digestive apparatus—masticate it well—take regular and sufficient exercise daily—go to bed at 10 o'clock P. M.—and maintain "a prudent, cautious self-control" over your animal passions.

I charge you to take care of your Mind. Discipline and furnish it daily. "Let the word of God dwell in you richly with all wisdom." Make continual and choice additions to your store of knowledge—otherwise, constantly pouring out as you will be called to do, "your barrel will soon run emptyings."

I charge you to take care of your Heart. Keep it with all diligence. Be watchful and prayful. Unless the principle of grace implanted within you is kept vigorous and thriving, you will not be happy in your sacred calling, nor successful in it, nor be a fit example to christians, in charity, in faith and purity.

I charge you to take care of your Doctrine. Let it be that which was once delivered unto the saints—preserve it uncorrupt—faithfully preach it in season, out of season [illegible] that your flock be rooted and grounded in it.

Taking this course—keeping your body under subjection, stocking your mind with [illegible] tuary, and from house to house, "as the rain upon the grass, and as the dew upon the tender herb"—you will make full proof of your ministry, and when the chief Shepherd appears, will receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Amen.—Hartford Religious Herald.

"The Child is Father of the Man."

The late Dr. Spencer said that when he was a lad, his father gave him a little tree that had just been grafted. One day, in his father's absence, he let the colt into the garden, and the young animal broke off the graft. It was mended, however, on the following day, and continued to grow finely. Years passed, and young Spencer became a man and a minister. Some time after he became a pastor he made a visit to the old homestead where he spent his boyhood. His little sapling had become a large tree, and was loaded with apples. During the night after his arrival at the homestead, there was a violent thunder-shower, and the wind blew fearfully. He rose early in the morning, and on going out found his tree lying prostrate upon the ground. The wind had twisted it off just where the colt broke it when it was a sapling. Probably the storm would not have broken it at all, if it had not been broken when it was small. It will usually be found that those who are grossly vicious in manhood, dropped a seed of vice in the morning of life; that the fallen youth who was religiously trained, and has become corrupt, broke off his connection with virtuous ways just where he did a very wicked thing in boyhood. Here is a fact to be pondered. The oldest man in the prison could not say that childhood and youth had no connection with his present condition. Perhaps he could point to the very day and hour when he decided his present character.

Christ not Silent.

Christ is not silent upon earth. He that has an ear for his voice, hears it in a variety of ways in every place. Witnessing for himself and his cause, he speaks at one time in obvious judgments, which he inflicts upon his foes; and at another, in tangible blessings and answers to prayers, with which he favors his friends. He speaks in the Sabbatic rest of soul which those enjoy who trust in him, as well as by the want of peace, the distressing care and fear of death, which are the lot of the ungodly. He speaks by the surprising confirmations which science, in its progress, is often involuntarily obliged to afford his Word; as well as by the manifold signs of the times, which manifest nothing but a literal fulfillment of his prophecies. By fresh revivals of his church, in spite of his enemies, who always begin to cry "Ichabod!" over her, he speaks within the bounds of Christendom, and bears witness in this heathen world, by new spiritual creations, which he wondrously calls into being, as of old, from apparently hopeless and worthless materials. Hence what we read in Psalm 19th literally becomes true: "There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their sound is gone forth through all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world."—Krummacher.

The Prayers of Slaves.

One of the most striking and affecting types of piety to be found among any people is that exhibited by the Christian slaves at the South. Their outward privations make them the richer in spiritual joys; the hardness of their earthly lot leads them to prize the more their heavenly hope. Their very ignorance gives often a touching simplicity to their prayers, and a child-like beauty to their trust in God. Such faith prevails with God; such humble cries enter the ear of the Lord of Sabaoth, and are mightier than cabinets or armies. When the Israelites in Egypt sighed and cried to God by reason of their bondage, God heard their groaning and had respect unto them.

The pious slaves of the South have long been praying for the day of their emancipation. They have never found in the Bible the doctrine that slavery was ordained of God for their good. They always long for freedom. They continually pray for it. Of late, under a vague impression that Mr. Lincoln's election would in some way work out their deliverance, they have prayed with renewed faith and fervor for the day of freedom. Of this a touching example is given in the pious preacher who was the first to take the benefit of the "contraband act." He reported that his people had long been watching and praying, and that "when they heard Massa Lincoln was 'lected, they knew the Lord was 'gwine to come; and when they heard that war was begun, they knew the Lord had come sartin." What a power is arrayed against our enemies, in the prayers of the slaves! "When He maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them. He forgetteth not the cry of the humble." Let us see to it that we place ourselves as a nation upon the side of these prevailing prayers, by assuming our whole responsibility for the oppressed, and working for their deliverance.—Independent.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address, so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should add as much in addition as their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, whom we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Psalms 119 : 18.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
Thy wondrous love to see,
Revealed to all who search thy word,—
The Savior died for me!

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
My sinful self to see;
Oh! let the covenant of thy wings
My refuge ever be.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes"
"What time I am afraid"
To read the promise of thy word,"—
"On me thy trust be staid."

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
When war's dread notes resound,
To see thine angel spirit bands
Encamped thy saints around.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
When dark the storm appears,
To see "my Father at the helm,"
Whose wisdom quells my fears.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
Lest in "temptation's hour"
I bring reproach upon thy cause,
O'ercome by Satan's power.

"Lord, open thou my eyes,"
From error's path to steer;
Upheld and guided by thy hand,
I'm safe from danger here.

"Lord, open thou mine eyes,"
When "fiery trials" come,
To see Love written on them all,
And say, "Thy will be done."

"Lord, open thou mine eyes"
To view thy presence nigh,
When earth and all its joys depart,
My summons comes to die

"Lord, open thou mine eyes"
"To read my title clear"
To mansions in that kingdom blest,
Whose coming draweth near

For the Crisis

"Who will Live Again?"

Before we enter this discussion, we wish it to be perfectly understood, that we have the most kindly feelings toward Bro. Preble, and all other brethren. Our prayer is, Lord, help us "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

For brevity's sake, we shall use the letter "P" to distinguish Bro. Preble.

In the article to which P replied, we used the following language: "We are very anxious that some good brother would show us how he can maintain the reliving of the wicked dead, without doing one of two things, viz., affirm universal salvation, or give up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death." P steps forward, (and I honor him for his promptness and candor,) and says, "In answer to Bro. C. I would just say, I think, on reflection, it will appear evident to all that universal salvation is clearly taught in the Scriptures." Let us try this.

What is salvation? "Preservation from destruction, danger, or great calamity."—Webster. Then "universal 'preservation from destruction' is clearly taught in the Scriptures." And this in the face of God's word, "All the wicked will he destroy." But P will say "This is after they are saved." Let us look at this "salvation" a moment. Suppose a man, having been sentenced to death for the crime of murder, is accosted by a doctor, thus: "My friend, I will save you." Hope emits its brightest ray on the face of the condemned. He eagerly asks, "How?" The doctor replies, "I am a good physician. After the sentence of the law is executed and you are dead, by my great skill I will restore you to life." The man dances for joy. He exults in this happy escape. He begins to pour forth his thanks to his kind preserver. But the doctor continues, "After I have restored you to life, I will kill you again." The poor victim of the doctor's (not the law's) cruelty curses him, and calls him MURDERER. Let any one consider this illustration and then deny that this is what P's "salvation" amounts to, if he can. If we were permitted to give it a name we should call it, (what it really is,) Double Damnation.

P says that Christ is the medium through which this equivocal salvation comes. If Christ had not come he must admit that one death would have satisfied the claims of justice. But Christ in coming as a Life-giver has also brought death in his train. This envelops Him in a new character. We can no longer say, "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world." Jesus, according to this view, has actually brought CONDEMNATION and DEATH with Him. "He that believeth not" is not only "condemned already," but there is another condemnation in store for him, in, by, and through Jesus Christ alone. Then "the Son of man" has "come to destroy men's lives." "Mark this; damned AFTER they have been raised from the dead."

We are afraid that P has been over anxious to find a meaning for 1 Tim. 4 : 10. He says, "Christ the 'Savior of all men, ESPECIALLY of them that believe.'" The text does not say so. It reads thus: "We trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." Christ is not mentioned. We shall discover the meaning of the passage by referring to other places. "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth."—1 Tim. 2 : 3, 4. "But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness [illegible]

His mercy He saved us."—Titus 3 : 4, 5. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him."—1 John 4 : 9. What does all this mean? Why, that "the living God" has provided a way of escape for us from sin and death, and He is willing that all should accept the proffered mercy, and come to the knowledge of the truth. For this purpose He has sent His Son "that whosoever believeth on Him" may "not perish," but "live through Him." Thus "God is the Savior of all men" inasmuch as He has provided a way of salvation, but he is "specially" the Savior "of those that believe" on the Lord Jesus Christ, because they will "live through Him." "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

We trust enough has been said to convince P that he cannot logically claim "salvation" for the wicked. We will now endeavor, briefly, to show that he has no scriptural right to use that word in connection with unbelievers. He admits there is no "universal salvation to holiness and life!" He is right in linking the words "holiness and life," for life is just as naturally the effect of holiness, as death is the effect of sin. But how can there be "salvation" without "life?" The Scriptures clearly teach us that the "wages of sin is death." Now to be saved from death is to have life. Will P please explain how any one can be saved from death, without having life? If he cannot do this, (and he certainly cannot) we trust that he will acknowledge "that he has no scriptural nor logical right to affirm universal salvation."

Having shown that P does not "affirm universal salvation," we proceed to notice what he has done. In our article we presented the two horns of a dilemma, one of which must be grasped by any one who "maintains the reliving of the wicked dead." P supposes that he has hold of the first horn, but, unfortunately, he has seized the other. Instead of "affirming universal salvation," he has "given up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death."

Is the noun "death" singular or plural? Is there not a difference between "death" and "deaths"? But P identifies them if he says that the penalty of sin is "literal death." For he believes that the penalty is literal deaths, a "first literal death," and a "second literal death." God declared the penalty to Adam thus: "Thou shalt surely die." P's system would construe it, "Thou shalt surely die twice." Paul says "The wages of sin is death." P's view would force us to read "The wages of sin is deaths." In all candor, we would ask if he has not "given up the foundation that the penalty of sin is literal death?"

P speaks of "the first 'literal death,' or Adamic death." Is there any other literal death except Adamic death? We know of no other. "In Adam all die." We do not read in the word of God of any other source of death. Death is sown in the animal nature. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," cannot "die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20 : 36. They who are raised from the dead have a "spiritual" nature. "Death hath no more dominion over" them. See 1 Cor. 15th ch. for a detailed account of the great resurrection scheme. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. There is a sowing in dishonor; there is a raising in glory: there is a sowing in weakness, there is a raising in power: there is sown a natural (animal) body; there is raised a spiritual body," etc.

Where then does this "second literal death" come from? Hath it a father? Who hath begotten it? Is it found in the Old Testament? Not a word of it. Is it found in the four gospels? Not a word of it. Is it found in Paul's epistles? Hastings' "Pauline Theology" was the means, under God, of confirming me in the belief that death is the future and eternal punishment of the unbeliever. The argument is irresistible. It prostrates the doctrine of eternal torment as the ark of God prostrated Dagon. The author remarks concerning Paul, "From such a man we should expect a corresponding exposition of Christian doctrine. He would not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. To him we look for a full and perfect exposition of Christian doctrine. If we find it not here, we shall find it no where. Now, mark how the "second literal death" falls before the above extract. Paul, who "kept back nothing that was profitable;" who "shunned not to declare all the counsel of God," does not whisper a word about any "second literal death." And here we take occasion to say, there is better ground for "eternal torment" in the Scriptures, than for a "second literal death."

The phrase "second death" occurs only in the highly figurative and symbolic book of "The Revelation." The book was not given to teach doctrine. (By "doctrine," we mean all that relates to personal salvation and condemnation.) God gave it to Jesus Christ "to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." [illegible]

age of the Gospel dispensation, the people of God might know their latitude and longitude, and thus reckon with tolerable certainty their distance from the shore and heaven. It has been shamefully perverted from its legitimate use. It has been forced to teach doctrine, a thing that was not intended by its great Author. It has been literally, instead of figuratively interpreted. The 11th verse of the 14th chap. has been the theme of countless sermons, and by a base literal construction has been converted into a vehicle of the most atrocious fable that ever cursed Christendom. We, of all other men, ought to take warning from the follies of the past. We are justified in quoting whatever we find in the Apocalypse that harmonizes with the literal Scriptures, but we are not at liberty to raise a system of Biblical interpretation, on the solitary basis of the 20th of Revelation, especially, when we consider that its fulfillment is in the future. We may, or may not have the right view of that chapter. Time, which weighs all theories in its perfect balances, will tell the story. Meanwhile, let us take care, lest we "add to" or "take away from" that sublime and marvellous book.

If P wishes us to give an explication of the phrase "second death" that will harmonize with the view of "No future life to the wicked" we shall be pleased to do so. At present we leave it, pausing, however, to notice his closing remark. He says "I do not understand how any one can die a 'second death,' without being made alive from the first death!" To this we reply, We do not understand how "death and hell" can die a "second death" without previously dying the first death!!!

P has not only given up "literal death" as the penalty of sin, but he has also surrendered a point to the common enemy. He has yielded the position that literal "life" is the reward of the righteous. Have we not been battling, and are we not now battling with theologastricism (Pardon me, kind friend, I have read "Landis,") on this very point? They deny, and we as stoutly affirm, (God help us!) that "life" is to be literally understood. What then does P do with the following texts? "He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life." "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." "And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you." "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

We have gone far enough to show P his real position. He has not "affirmed universal salvation." When we said "universal salvation" we meant what we said. But he has "given up the foundation of our whole system of interpretation, that the penalty of sin is literal death."

"IN CHRIST SHALL ALL BE MADE ALIVE."

M. D. W. assaults two "points in" my "article bearing the above caption." I have not discovered any breach in the fortification, as a result of the attack. Let all take notice of the First Point. We spoke, in our article, of "the absurdity of bringing up the antediluvian world after they have literally 'perished' (2 Pet. 3 : 6.)" If the least idea of controversy had been in our mind, we should have written thus: "the absurdity existing in the supposition that the antediluvian world will ever live again, as they have literally perished." The rendering of M. D. W., however, is acceptable. She (I believe my reviewer is a lady) asks, "Is it an 'absurdity' to believe that such who have 'perished' will live again?" We reply, it depends upon the meaning attached to the word "perished." In our article we used it in its literal sense. We said "literally perished." Our reviewer quotes three texts from the Old Testament to prove that "the just man perisheth." Now the word "perish," in those texts, cannot be literally understood, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3 : 15. Jesus says of the "just, good, and righteous," that "they shall never perish." John 10 : 28. "If Christ be not raised * * then they also which are fallen asleep IN CHRIST are perished." "But now is Christ risen from the dead," consequently, they are not "perished." 1 Cor. 15 : 18, 20. We now answer the inquiry in the affirmative. It is "an 'absurdity' to believe that such who have 'perished' will live again."

Second Point. In our article, we referred to "the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, who are 'set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire,' which utterly precludes the idea that they can ever exist again." To this M. D. W. objects, and asks, "If their destruction by eternal fire is their final end and punishment, how can it be more tolerable for them at the judgment than for Chorazin and Bethsaida?" As this objection has been answered by George Storrs, in his excellent essay, "Life from the Dead: or, the Righteous only will Live Again," we take the liberty of quoting his remarks.

"Sodom and Capernaum.—The texts which make a contrast, in the case of different cities, in the day of judgment, some of which had been overthrown and others were yet unvisited, are supposed to show that the wicked of the overthrown cities must [illegible] an answer to one of these examples will explain the principle of interpreting for all. Take that of Sodom and Capernaum.

"What is the subject? It is the judgment of certain cities. 'Thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be brought down to hell'—hades—'for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day: but I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee'—Capernaum. Now observe, the day of judgment here spoken of is the day of Capernaum's visitation for its disregard of Jesus works.' Sodom was judged, overthrown, and did not 'remain until this day' in which Christ spoke; therefore judgment had been executed on that city. Now, what? The day of Capernaum's judgment was at hand, and it should be more intolerable than the infliction on Sodom. The day of judgment on Sodom was sudden and entire, at once. Capernaum's was protracted and covered a length of time; but, says Kitto, in his Biblical Literature, 'The denunciation has been so completely accomplished, that even the site of Capernaum is quite uncertain.'

"Such texts, then, have no reference to a future infliction on Sodom and other previously destroyed cities, but are only an emphatic expression of terrible judgment on cities thereafter to be visited, and who had disregarded the 'ensample' of Sodom's judgment."

As the remaining remarks of M. D. W. are an elaboration of the same argument presented in the previous Crisis by Bro. Preble, and as we have already joined issue with him, we shall close this article, after offering one of the many objections we have to her main argument.

She says, "The entire argument of the apostle in the 15th of Cor is to establish, 1st, the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and 2d, the resurrection of all mankind." With the first proposition we agree, with the second, we do not. Verses 42–46 are a part of "the apostle's entire argument." "So also is the resurrection of the dead." Query. All mankind? Observe. "There is a sowing in corruption; there is a raising in incorruption." A raising of what? Ans. The dead who were sown. Now, if we say "all mankind" are included in this argument, what follows? Why, that "all mankind" are raised incorruptible, "all mankind" are raised in glory; "all mankind" are raised in power; "all mankind" are raised "spiritual" bodies. In a word "all mankind" are saved, and saved eternally.

The mind of our sister will soon be relieved of the "abundance of Scriptures which" are supposed to "prove as conclusively the reliving of the wicked as of the righteous," if she will "carefully examine" the "essay" we have already mentioned. We do not say that it is "sufficient to convince every one who would be convinced at all," but we do say that any one who proposes to overthrow the argument, ought to prepare himself for the mightiest polemical conflict he ever experienced.

JOSEPH T. CURRY.

For the Crisis.

Is it not thus?

Christ does not reign upon the throne of David until all his enemies are put under his feet by the Father. For this reason the Son, when he comes, delivers up the kingdom to God, even the Father, that he may put down all rule, authority and power; for he (the Father) must reign till he hath put all enemies under Christ's feet. When he (Christ) delivers up the kingdom to God, then the Father takes his great power and reigns, consequently "the nations are angry," and thy wrath is come, "and the time of the dead, that they should be judged," and give reward. Showing the plain import and harmony of this text: "The seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world (by being delivered up to God) have become the kingdom of our Lord"; and when all rule and power, with the last enemy, death, are destroyed, then his Christ is crowned King on the throne, fulfilling,—"The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

This seems to harmonize with Jesus in his exposition of the parable of the tares and wheat; that both should grow together till the harvest; that the harvest is the end of the world, or age—this age. What is to be done then? "He shall send his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and they that do iniquity." And if the devil offends or does iniquity, he must be among the all things, and casts them into a furnace of fire. Malachi and Peter's burning day is this furnace; in this age, all the tares, all that is offensive, go into the fire together. This fire makes clean work when Paradise begins to bloom. What next? "Then shall the righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

This looks like strait work, and scriptural to me. The throne established, Christ seated upon it, his reign eternal, no end to the kingdom, earth restored, the saints take it and possess it forever and ever. Glory be to God. Immortality has begun. The good are all there, and life is theirs as long as they desire it—life eternal. The wheat gathered into the garner, the chaff burned up, the glory of God fills the earth. Amen and amen.

The Day of Rest.

A LECTURE BY REV. H. H. DOBNEY, ENGLAND.

(Concluded.)

THE RESULT OF THE WHOLE, then, is this, viz.: Omitting all reference to the Mosaic law, as law, and except as we may derive therefrom valuable ideas, and learn important lessons, and receive intimations worthy the most reverential pondering; we have three things:—

First:—The original "blessing and sanctifying" of the seventh day, as one of sacred and sweet repose, and in delightful remembrance of Creation, and of God as Creator.

Second:—The fact of the adoption, by the theocratic king for his peculiar people, of a day of most entire cessation from all work whatever; and which was designed in love to all classes, and out of especial compassion and tender mercy to servants and the laboring classes in general, and all cattle. In addition to the work of creation, there was now the national deliverance of Israel to be remembered, and other national mercies, and the peculiar relation of Jehovah as their King and Law-giver and God. So that, though the institution does not come to us precisely and formally as a command, it does come to us as a lesson of highest wisdom, and recommended by all the authority that can attach to the wisdom and goodness of God.

And, Third:—A "Lord's Day," in still happier commemoration of a redemption begun for a fallen world, (begun, I say, but in some respects also completed—completed, that is to say, in the person of the new Head of the race, the second Adam, who, as our Forerunner, rose triumphant over Death and entered into glory)—the day on which one in the likeness of man rose from the grave, and ascended into the pure and heavenly regions, thenceforth to "draw all men unto him." The first day of the week identifies itself, as it were, with the first of creation, instead of the last; in other words, as the original Sabbath was retrospective, ours is prospective; that was commemorative, ours anticipatory. We are not at the end of something that is past, but at the beginning of something that is future. We have the first day of a "new creation," and when its six days' work are ended, glorious indeed will be the "rest that remaineth for the people of God," when even "the creation also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8 : 21. Towards that everlasting Sabbath, how earnestly are we exhorted to look, and for it diligently to labor! Heb. 4 : 1–11.

Some Christians perhaps would still prefer to place the observance of the day on the ground of positive injunction, as safest. But truth alone is safe. And I confess that the high ground of a divine idea, and spiritual law, and Christian liberty, appears by far the highest. The full idea of the day of sacred rest, as deduced from the three facts I have brought out, remains in all its fulness, and fraught to overflowing with innumerable blessings. But, still, perhaps, some will deem that I leave much unsaid. They will ask for the word that should be spoken to both those who are piously anxious to see the day honored by the masses, and those who unhappily find no pleasure in the Christian's joyous rest and worship.

To the former, then, I respectfully submit, that the "desecration of the day" which is so sincerely deplored is not itself the evil to be lamented and remedied, but only one of the symptoms of it. The task to be achieved, or at least aimed at, is more difficult, even, than the obtaining of an outward decorum on the day which God, in Eden, blessed and sanctified. The many have to be won to God and holiness, to be attracted to religion, by plainer and happier evidences, that, in yielding their whole selves to the Lord we love, they would truly "find rest unto their souls," and "joy, and peace." "First make the tree good, and the fruit will be good also," said the Master, whose own way was to work from within, outward, whereas most moral and religious reformers have unwisely sought to work from without, inward. I do not think that to begin with enforcing a law of "Sabbath observance" is the method that heavenly wisdom points out. They who find no pleasantness in religion are repelled, rather than won, by all attempts to restrain their freedom of action in the few hours that, alone of all the week, so many of them can command. The real problem is, How to so gain their respect and confidence, so engraft on their minds the conviction that "wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness," that they will of themselves do homage to "the beauty of holiness;" and long to be as we are, and yearn to share our manifest happiness? This is not the case at present, as is too evident. And I think we Christians have to become far more happy illustrations of the power of godliness to bless, ere they will say, "We will go with you, for we perceive that God is with you." But to begin with them by what they resent as an intrusive interference with their liberty and their chosen recreations, is, it humbly appears to me, "putting the cart before the horse," and pursuing a method the exact reverse of that which our Lord adopted. And this the more so, if the brief view I have but suggested of the real idea of the day be the true one, and Christianity be, indeed, a thing of spirit rather than letter, of "life" rather than of form.

And to the other class, I would as respectfully submit the following suggestions: Very few of God's laws are given us in writing, or come to us in the form of a command. We speak, e. g. of the laws of gravitation, heat, health, etc., and every body knows that if any of them be violated painful consequences result. These laws, however, have to be discovered by observation and experience and thought and reasoning. They are not written commands. They are not express injunctions. But not the less really are they laws, as all the world is agreed. Nor are they any the less operative for good, if observed, or for evil if violated. And thus within the sphere of religion also, and social morals, there are in like manner laws which are not given in the form of express commands, but are nevertheless deducible as the will of God from the facts and lessons of Scripture, and the facts of [illegible] Sabbath law, where there is no Sabbath command. The grateful and cheerful observance of one day in seven, as a season of holy rest from all work and secular labor—and from all recreation, too, that does not tend to promote the repose of both body and mind, and to further the intellectual, moral, and spiritual well-being of the individual and community—comes commended by the highest of all imaginable motives. For in Eden itself God blessed and sanctified it. To the Israelites it was "given" as a boon and blessing; and for fifteen hundred years it was a cardinal institution with that chosen and peculiar people, loved by all the good, honored by all the great, and earnestly enforced by all the true and noble prophet spirits among them. As a rigid and inflexible command, indeed, it is not imposed on us; but it would tax the rarest invention to conceive a happier, grander, or more beautiful boon, to a busy and overworked nation, than the law of one day in seven as a holy day. It is as important to secure it now as it ever was. Nay, in such an eager, restless, inordinately competitive age as this, it is far more imperatively required, as a universal mercy, than ever before in the history of the world.

If the private worship of God bring with it innumerable blessings, over-running and bedewing the soul, and stretching forward into the future and the infinite, how much additional advantage is there in social devotion, and the common worship of one God and Father, where "the rich and the poor meet together, and the Lord is the Maker of them all." England owes all to her deep religiousness and reverence, as the wisest of the continentals acknowledge. But the general public worship of God (on so many grounds indispensable) demands for its possibility, a general concurrence; and every man whose own conduct, if it were commonly adopted, would render the general religious observance of the day impossible or more difficult, is not only seriously injuring himself but acting perniciously on the nation at large. Surely then, nothing but extreme and most unworthy selfishness (unfraternal, as well as unpatriotic) would say to this, "I don't care!" For, as I have said; In the degree in which the reasons exist which have ever been alleged for the observance of the Sabbath, in that degree the sacred importance of regarding it as one of holy rest still stands as a reason, though not as an express enactment, as a spiritual, though not a verbal law. And though your personal liberty shall not be brought in question, yet neither must the liberty be infringed on of all those in whatever class, though the very humblest, who desire, in fellowship with their Father, to bless and sanctify a seventh day, and, in fellowship with His Son, to devote the Lord's day to holy purposes. The law of liberty is this: That no man's liberty to do, or not to do, shall trench upon any other man's equal liberty for the same. And I think this rule, if applied, will settle many practical questions that are being now agitated among us. If Christians have no right to exact from non-Christians, these latter have no right to exact upon the former.

God give us all true wisdom, and endow us with "the mind that was in Christ Jesus our Lord," and then we shall love as brethren, and God will be honored amongst us, and his laws and counsels be revered, and God will bless us, and ours shall be called a delightsome land, and England shall still be "THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD, AND THE SALT OF THE EARTH."

Religious Reading.

Any minister who will take the pains to investigate the matter, may learn some curious facts in regard to the supposed inability of christian families to supply themselves with religious reading. He may find two or even three daily secular prints in a household where no scrap from the religious press is seen. He may find centre-tables supplied with "Parlor Annuals," or "Christian offerings," or other expensive ornamental books, which are never read, if, indeed, worth reading; while the religious paper, at one-fourth of their expense, and of ten thousand-fold greater value, is more than can be afforded. He may find young men, and professors, too, whose cigars for one week would pay for the best religious paper in the land, yet living with no paper, and no knowledge of, or interest in, the advancement of religion, or truth, or civilization in the world. He may find young ladies of few educational advantages mourning over their want of opportunity for mental culture, but never dreaming of the fact that a well-read religious paper would do more for their real advancement than any amount of finery in dress or imitation of merely superficial accomplishments. May it not be safely said that no investment in tuition even, or in books (the Bible excepted,) can secure so great a good in proportion to the outlay, as the subscription price of an able religious paper?—N. Y. Evangelist.

A Brief Pastoral Charge.

I charge you, my young brother, to take care of your Body. Eat nothing which does not agree with your digestive apparatus—masticate it well—take regular and sufficient exercise daily—go to bed at 10 o'clock P. M.—and maintain "a prudent, cautious self-control" over your animal passions.

I charge you to take care of your Mind. Discipline and furnish it daily. "Let the word of God dwell in you richly with all wisdom." Make continual and choice additions to your store of knowledge—otherwise, constantly pouring out as you will be called to do, "your barrel will soon run emptying."

I charge you to take care of your Heart. Keep it with all diligence. Be watchful and prayful. Unless the principle of grace implanted within you is kept vigorous and thriving, you will not be happy in your sacred calling, nor successful in it, nor be a fit example to christians, in charity, in faith and purity.

I charge you to take care of your Doctrine. Let it be that which was once delivered unto the saints—preserve it uncorrupt—faithfully preach it in season, out of season—contend earnestly for it—and see that your flock be rooted and grounded in it.

Taking this course—keeping your body under subjection, stocking your mind with [illegible] furniture, keeping your heart [illegible] in the sight of God, and [illegible] according to divine [illegible] tuary, and from house to house, "as the rain upon the grass, and as the dew upon the tender herb"—you will make full proof of your ministry, and when the chief Shepherd appears, will receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Amen.—Hartford Religious Herald.

"The Child is Father of the Man."

The late Dr. Spencer said that when he was a lad, his father gave him a little tree that had just been grafted. One day, in his father's absence, he let the colt into the garden, and the young animal broke off the graft. It was mended, however, on the following day, and continued to grow finely. Years passed, and young Spencer became a man and a minister. Some time after he became a pastor he made a visit to the old homestead where he spent his boyhood. His little sapling had become a large tree, and was loaded with apples. During the night after his arrival at the homestead, there was a violent thunder-shower, and the wind blew fearfully. He rose early in the morning, and on going out found his tree lying prostrate upon the ground. The wind had twisted it off just where the colt broke it when it was a sapling. Probably the storm would not have broken it at all, if it had not been broken when it was small. It will usually be found that those who are grossly vicious in manhood, dropped a seed of vice in the morning of life; that the fallen youth who was religiously trained, and has become corrupt, broke off his connection with virtuous ways just where he did a very wicked thing in boyhood. Here is a fact to be pondered. The oldest man in the prison could not say that childhood and youth had no connection with his present condition. Perhaps he could point to the very day and hour when he decided his present character.

Christ not Silent.

Christ is not silent upon earth. He that has an ear for his voice, hears it in a variety of ways in every place. Witnessing for himself and his cause, he speaks at one time in obvious judgments, which he inflicts upon his foes; and at another, in tangible blessings and answers to prayers, with which he favors his friends. He speaks in the Sabbatic rest of soul which those enjoy who trust in him, as well as by the want of peace, the distressing care and fear of death, which are the lot of the ungodly. He speaks by the surprising confirmations which science, in its progress, is often involuntarily obliged to afford his Word, as well as by the manifold signs of the times, which manifest nothing but a literal fulfillment of his prophecies. By fresh revivals of his church, in spite of his enemies, who always begin to cry "Ichabod!" over her, he speaks within the bounds of Christendom, and bears witness in this heathen world, by new spiritual creations, which he wondrously calls into being, as of old, from apparently hopeless and worthless materials. Hence what we read in Psalm 19th literally becomes true: "There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their sound is gone forth through all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world."—Krummacher.

The Prayers of Slaves.

One of the most striking and affecting types of piety to be found among any people is that exhibited by the Christian slaves at the South. Their outward privations make them the richer in spiritual joys, the hardness of their earthly lot leads them to prize the more their heavenly hope. Their very ignorance gives often a touching simplicity to their prayers, and a child-like beauty to their trust in God. Such faith prevails with God; such humble cries enter the ear of the Lord of Sabbaoth, and are mightier than cabinets or armies. When the Israelites in Egypt sighed and cried to God by reason of their bondage, God heard their groaning and had respect unto them.

The pious slaves of the South have long been praying for the day of their emancipation. They have never found in the Bible the doctrine that slavery was ordained of God for their good. They always long for freedom. They continually pray for it. Of late, under a vague impression that Mr. Lincoln's election would in some way work out their deliverance, they have prayed with renewed faith and fervor for the day of freedom. Of this a touching example is given in the pious preacher who was the first to take the benefit of the "contraband act." He reported that his people had long been watching and praying, and that "when they heard Massa Lincoln was 'lected, they knew the Lord was 'gwine to come; and when they heard that war was begun, they knew the Lord had come sartin." What a power is arrayed against our enemies, in the prayers of the slaves! "When He maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them. He forgetteth not the cry of the humble." Let us see to it that we place ourselves as a nation upon the side of these prevailing prayers, by assuming our whole responsibility for the oppressed, and working for their deliverance.—Independent.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

For the Crisis.

Hasten Thee Onward!

Hasten thee onward, old Time, in thy flight,
Bear me to regions of endless delight,
Onward, still onward, where storms never fall
Where on our fond hopes shall ne'er rest a pall;
Where comes no dark cloud to shroud the glad day
Where lies no serpent trail cross our pathway,
Where with bright blossoms no thorns ever grow,
Our hearts piercing so!

On, on with fleetness, nor pause in thy way,
I am so longing for dawning of day!
Longing to cease me from this mortal strife,
Longing to drink of the waters of life,
Longing to range through those amaranth bowers,
Measured my stay by those noonday hours,
Longing to sit me at Jesus' feet,
My joy all complete!

O onward hast'ning, how joyful the word!
Now is the conflict—then the reward,
Now the heart throbbing by keen anguish prest,
Then the deep calmness of unending rest.
Here all the dimness, the darkness of night,
There shall the Lamb be our glorious light,
Here now as pilgrims we ever must roam,
Then all, all at home!

Here oft we languish, bound long years by pain,
There never more is felt the dread chain,
Here death prevaileth on every hand,
He enters never in that happy land
Then haste thee onward, all on fleetest wing!
Christ, our beloved, the glad morning bring
That wakens the sleepers, and gathers His own
To that glorious home! CAROLINE HALL.

For the Crisis.

A SERMON,

Delivered in Chapman (large) Hall, Boston, Sunday morning, July 7th, 1861,

BY ELD. F. B. MORGAN.

EPH. 3: 14-19.—"Filled with the fullness of God."

The one work of the entire economy of grace is, the saving, sanctifying and exalting men to fellowship and unity with God. (1 John 1: 3.) Morally and spiritually, this is effected in this life by receiving "with meekness the engrafted word," (Jas. 1. 21) "by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Titus 3. 5.) But physically, at the period of the translation and resurrection of the saints, where they shall be clothed with "glory, honor, and immortality."

This is accomplished by God's coming down to man, by the incarnate Word—"MADE FLESH" and dwelling among us. And surely, had not God condescended to come to our relief we must have perished, for who could ascend up to him? The doctrine of the incarnation of the Son of God has doubtless vastly more in it than is commonly supposed. It is not only the root and foundation of the entire fabric of christianity, but of every ministry and ordinance of the church. It pleased the Father that "in Him should ALL FULLNESS DWELL,"—"For in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the God-head bodily." (Col. 1 19; 2. 9.) And though there can be but one "only begotten Son of God," yet Christ being made flesh—partaker of our nature—we may hence, by the invisible workings of the life of God, (Eph. 4 18,) be made one with him. It is with such an arrangement in mind that we can understand the meaning of the apostle when he saith, "God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." (1 Cor. 1: 9.) "That I might know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." (Phil. 3. 16.) And again: "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come. And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body—THE FULNESS OF HIM THAT FILLETH ALL IN ALL." (Eph. 1: 18-23.) But some more, out of the [illegible] of Scripture bearing upon this point. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." (John 17: 20, 21) "I in them, and thou in me." (v 23)

This is realized by the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, entering and abiding with the church. Hence the language of Christ "Nevertheless I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send him unto you. (John 16 7) Also the command to "not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized of the Holy Ghost not many days hence." (Acts 1 4, 5)

Coeval with this was the bestowment of gifts, which were to become the channels through which, in the normal state of the church, this divine life was to flow. Wherefore it is written, "When he ascended up on high he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." Eph. 4: 8) The sequel is this: God, proposing to do a work for man, is pleased to work through means,—intermediately As in the communication of the natural life, so God imparts spiritual life according to fixed laws. As for example. Let us pray for the heathen, yet we are in no wise assured that this alone will avail any thing. The reason is this. It hath "pleased" God by the foolishness of preaching to save those that believe," (1 Cor 1 21), and being so ordained, no other means could possibly supersede this first arrangement of God. And so after the first outpouring of the Holy Spirit,—first upon the Jews and then upon the Gentiles,—we are never informed that the same grace was exhibited except "according to the measure of the gift of Christ," (Eph 4 7,) God choosing to work through the instrumentality of living men. And indeed it could not be otherwise, for it was for such and amongst such Christ came into the world. His church is built—a holy temple—of lively stones—living men. The great principles of the economy of grace are embodied in the Gospels, while the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles serve to illustrate the practical operation of those principles when deposited in the hearts of a living generation. And of this one of two things must be conceded—either that christianity was not fairly illustrated in the first generation of christians, or else, that its organic and normal actings must compare with those of the apostolic times when as fairly brought to bear upon human nature now.

The principles of christianity we fully know. And although it is for taking heed to the doctrines that the church laid her foundation stones, and cemented them with her blood, this was only because of the practical tendency and effect of these principles when brought into intimate contact with the consciences of men. Against principles most men of the world, even indolent christians, have little to say. There is to such men nothing particularly alarming in what you believe, be you a heretic, infidel, or Turk. And the same statement is true reversed. But it is when these principles are pressed upon the hearts of men—living, responsible men—that their sympathy or opposition is fully developed. Pure christianity is pre-eminently a practical matter. Our Lord said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," (John 5 17), and we are "workers together with him" (2 Cor 6. 1) But how can men work without God! "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." (Ps. 127: 1) In other words, how can we enjoy God's blessings and at the same time repudiate the instrumentality through which he proposes to communicate them to us? How is the church to be "filled with the fullness of God" and at the same time refuse his governance? How can we have a New Testament church without the New Testament plan—both as relates to its external form and its internal life? Or, to illustrate the question in hand—how, in the animal economy, can the brain, heart, lungs, or muscles, contribute their quota to the unit-life of the body, so long as they do not perform their several functions? So in the church of God. If he has placed therein ministries and ordinances for her well-being, is it reasonable to suppose that her well-being can as well be promoted without them? I hesitate not to say most emphatically, No.

The ordinances placed for the development and nourishing of this divine life, are Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The ministries were Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, with Pastors and Teachers, which were severally appointed by God. See Eph. 4: 7-14. To these may be added Deacons, elected by the church, but ordained by Apostles.

The office of Apostle was that of an Elder in the church universal—ministering Christ's rule therein, setting in order churches, directing in worship and the right use of ordinances, ordaining ministries, laying on hands for conferring the gift of the Holy Ghost, and together constituted the visible centre of unity to the church.

The office of the New Testament Prophet was not so much for foretelling future events, as for present illumination, being the utterance of God's mind upon a point in question. Or, as says a writer upon this subject,* "The essence of their gift was supernatural utterance in the power of the Spirit, whether in predicting future events, in designating men to holy offices, in opening the Scriptures, or in speaking to edification, exhortation and comfort." (See Acts 13. 1, 2; 15 28, 32, 16: 6, 20: 23; 1 Tim. 1 18; Eph. 3 5; John 16: 14.) This was in accordance with the promise that in the last days the Spirit should be "poured out upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy." (Acts 2 17) Of all that was said by the prophets dwelling at Jerusalem, Antioch, and Cesarea, (Acts 11 27, 13 1, 21 8, 9), we have but little recorded doubtless for the reason that the most they said did not belong to the New Testament, but was simply for the time then being. And because the Holy Ghost which spoke through them, was to abide with the church forever.

The office of Evangelist was that of one going everywhere, preaching the word, convincing, converting, and gathering into Christ's fold those that were without.

The office of Pastor was that of the under-shepherd, whose duty it was to look after Christ's sheep and tend his fold.

While such were the primary organs of the church imparted by the pouring forth of the Holy Ghost, yet the divine manifestations were not limited here, but flowed on until all hearts fitted for its reception were made partakers of its heavenly influences, and were all moved by the one Spirit, after the ordering of God, according to their several gifts. "God hath set some in the Church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." And thus with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, the church as the body of Christ continued to the "edifying of itself in love." Thus it was visibly manifest that God was with them. Thus they were "filled with the fullness of God." As God was in Christ, so was Christ manifested in his church.

But the question arises, was this to continue throughout this dispensation the constitutional and abiding means of the church's being "filled with the fullness of God," and of her manifesting it to the world? I answer show us any other way, who can? The church is "the body of Christ, and the members in particular." And "God hath set the members [gifts] in the body every one, as it hath pleased Him." (1 Cor 12: 18) And not a single organic member, or gift, (for gifts he is speaking of,) can be removed without, according to the language of the figure, maiming the body of Christ. But is it said those precious gifts of Christ have been lost, and yet Christ has been with the church and prospered her? I know the gifts here enumerated have fallen into obscurity if not out of existence, but alas! what prosperity has the church had without them? The darkness of the twelve hundred and sixty years that came as the result of what we call "the great apostacy" we well know and feel. And what has protestantism done except by agitation and revolution, ever and anon with paroxysms of agony giving birth to a new sect which were striving for some lost gem of the ancient church, but in their turn acknowledging they were not strictly after the apostolic plan. Yet who, who of all the sects will not admit that that church should expect to be most blessed that was most perfectly after the New Testament order? But are these divine gifts lost? So was Paradise! but whose was the fault? If so, does not the sin lie at the door of the church?

But I am persuaded we must not concede too much upon this point. The declaration and promise of Christ was made unqualifiedly—"I am with you alway [every day, even unto the end of the world." I know that He has been with His church much as he that was "wounded in the house of his friend,"—that his Spirit has been grieved, and quenched, and he hindered in his merciful dispensations; yet he has not been, and will not be without a seed to serve him, with whom he will abide after the manner he best can. But organically—in his person, and consequently in his corporate body, Christ is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." He is yet (1.) the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, (2.) the Prophet like unto Moses, (3.) the blessed Evangelist who dispenses the gospel to the poor; and (4.) the sympathizing Pastor, Shepherd, and Counsellor or teacher. He is such to the church, however much they may grieve his Spirit, because the church (his church) is one with him.

I have long been persuaded, and am happy to say, upon every becoming occasion, that I firmly believe there is nothing that constitutionally, expressly, or implicitly teaches that the New Testament pattern of christianity and of the church should not be sufficient to the end of this dispensation.

But do I hear you say, "Fanaticism," "Mormonism." My brother, let me warn you that you be not deceived by that subterfuge of the devil. Mormonism has long since proved itself with all abominable things to be a spue out of hell, however many honest men it may have ensnared notwithstanding. It is among the devil's grand counterfeits, but at the same time demonstrates to us the true coin is somewhere.

Why should we fear to interest ourselves and speak out upon a subject fraught with so mighty practical interest to the church at this present time, so long as we can say, "Thus it is written"? Who can tell how much our Lord desired to make a Luther, a Knox, and a Wesley, apostles to the people of their generation? Who, familiar with modern ecclesiastical history has not seen that utterances evidently from God—like those, as we may suppose, of the New Testament prophetic office—were heard again and again—in Scotland particularly, and also in England, and somewhat in this country? Did you ever read the Life of the Rev. William Brownwell and not feel there was a demonstration of the willingness of God to impart gifts and blessings to his church, as anciently, if they would only receive them? But I know again, that "spiritual things are spiritually discerned"—that these things are not for any but those whose whole being is upon God's altar, who desire to dwell in the innermost temple of God. And I doubt not the time has come, fully come, when it shall be manifest that "the Lord, he is God." Satan, with all deceivableness and his wonted diabolical energy, is threatening to deceive the world. Jannes and Jambres must have somewhat to meet. See 2 Tim 3. God must have, yes, and thanks be to his name, will have a seed to witness for him. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." (Isa. 59 19.) Satanic lies must be met with Divine truth, and a satanic spirit with a Divine Spirit. "The Spirit and the Word agree." The Word of God is the sword of the Spirit. With these, the Word and the Spirit, we are fully armed.

My brethren, we are living hard on to the end of this age. The hosts of sin are marshalled, and are pressing on. The church of God are called upon to come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Angels are spectators. Soldier of the cross, will you slumber in your tent?

"Up, O up, then, drowsy soldier!
Worlds are charging to the shock."

Already are we in the "latter rain." The harvest will soon be upon us. Shall we not lift up and put in their places the stones of God's temple. Help, Lord, for thou knowest thy servants take pleasure in the stones of Zion, and favor the dust thereof. Let us arise to pluck souls from the burning, and make ready a people prepared for the Lord. And in our last witness to the world, let it be seen that God is true; that his promises fail not, and that now, as at the beginning, his church knows the love of Christ that passeth knowledge, and as then, is now again FILLED WITH THE FULLNESS OF GOD. Amen.

For the Crisis.

From Eld. J. Parry.

BRO. WENDELL:—I send you an article in the Christian Intelligencer, on the "Final Doom of the Wicked", on which, if you will allow me, I will make a few remarks. I am glad that "rumor" has of late brought this subject before the public, and that "the ministry of the evangelical church" begin to feel the power of truth. I had feared that the three P's that rule the world, Pride, Prejudice, and Popularity, had so blinded the popular churches, in these last days, as to effectually shut out the light of God's word on the "final doom of the wicked"; but it seems, by the remarks of "W.," that we may hope for better things; and that some of the evangelical ministry begin to discover that God means what he says, and says what he means, when he declares that "the soul that sinneth it shall die"; and that "all the wicked he will destroy." The doctrine of the final destruction of all who do wickedly has, it seems, even in the eyes of "W," "some semblance of truth", and he acknowledges that "some of the fathers" believed it, so it is not quite so new a doctrine as some would try to persuade us. So far, so good, from such a source, we are thankful for small favors, and yet live in hope of greater.

I perfectly agree to another sentiment advanced, namely "that all error is insidious, and will give color to all the preaching and work of a minister of Christ. We have seen the truth of this remark exemplified on a large scale in the unscriptural and heathen dogma of "the immortality of the soul." This one first lie of the serpent in Eden has been the fruitful source of nearly all the false systems of religion that have pervaded the world for so many ages. Hero worship, purgatory, eternal torture, invocation of saints, going to heaven at death, and ancient and modern Spiritualism, all live, and move, and have their being in this most pernicious error, which is not to be found in the word of God, which declares that He only hath immortality, and the only way to obtain this inestimable blessing is by patient continuance in well doing, faith in Christ as the life-giver, and by a resurrection from the dead, at the revelation of the Son of God from heaven.

"W." says, "the belief of the church has been, and is, that the wicked, body and soul, shall be destroyed not merely, but destroyed in hell forever and ever." This is just what we believe and preach, and for this we have been denounced as infidels and atheists by the very churches we are now told are of like faith! Is it possible that the God of this world can so bewilder the understanding as to invent eternal misery out of such language as this? If so, then it is in vain to use argument—language has no power to convey literal truth—the word of God is turned into cunningly devised fables, and when Paul says the wicked "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," he means no such thing, but just the opposite. If God in his word does not mean what he says, I am surely not obliged to believe what he does not say, and thus contradict his word, and make him a liar. For my part, I wish not to go to the judgment of the great day with a lie in my right hand. Let God be true, if all men and devils prove liars, a plain and clear "Thus saith the Lord," is worth more than all human creeds, though they may be covered with the dust of ages—they will prove dark ages.

"W." says —"Certainly, no reasonable man can attempt to maintain that cessation of existence is equivalent to everlasting punishment." I answer, can any "reasonable" man maintain that death is no punishment? The Bible says, "The wages of sin is death,"—this is the penalty—not pain or torment, but death. Now if from this penalty there is no reprieve, no resurrection, no future life, then it is an everlasting punishment, just as much as eternal life is an everlasting reward. The one loses just as much as the other gains—eternal life. Is not this an endless loss? "W." seems to think that all motive for repentance would cease, if the fear of endless torture did not keep it alive. If he speaks from his own experience in this case, I fear his repentance needs to be repented of,—his religion is mere slavish fear, and will not stand the trial that shall try every man's work of what sort it is. My Bible tells me that the goodness of God leads men to repentance, and that filial fear is alone acceptable to God. It was in mercy, and not in wrath, that God shut man from the tree of life, lest he should eat and live for ever a sinner. The mercy of God endureth forever, but he retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy,—to say that God does retain his anger for ever, as the popular theology teaches, is to contradict the word of God, and make it of none effect by human tradition.

It is passing strange that "W." and the rest of his school, should steal one of our strongest texts to prove the utter destruction of the wicked, and constantly use it to prove the contrary. "Gehenna, where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched," was well understood by the Jews to be the place where all the filth of the city of Jerusalem was cast out to be destroyed by fire; and what the fire did not consume the worms did. An unquenchable fire is a consuming and destroying fire; not to torment them, but to burn them up, and leave neither root nor branch. I wish it were possible for the readers of the Christian Intelligencer, and other kindred papers, to see the flimsy arguments and flat contradictions to the word of God that are made use of to bolster up the mal-[illegible] doctrine of endless torment, so derogatory to the character of God, as a being full of love and mercy, and which, instead of being a means of conversion, as "W." assumes, is, without doubt, the cause of much of the infidelity and hardness of heart that, in these last days, so lamentably prevails, both in the church and in the world. I thank God for deliverance from this dark abyss. J. PARRY.

The following is the article referred to by Bro Parry —

Final Doom of the Wicked.

It has been rumored of late, and perhaps with truth, that the doctrine of the final annihilation of the wicked is received to an increasing extent by the ministry of the evangelical Church. All error is insidious in its approaches, as it usually is in its influence upon the soul of its recipient, and the attention and alarm of all who are set for the defence of the truth should be aroused at even the suspicion of its presence in the house of God. A doctrinal error will, without his knowledge, give color to all the preaching and work of a minister of Christ. He cannot hide its effect, but like the ointment of the right hand, it bewrayeth itself. The doctrine in question has some semblance of the truth, and is therefore all the more dangerous.

Our first remark upon it is, that it is contrary to the standards of all evangelical christians, and to the voice of the church of Christ in all ages, as she has interpreted the word of her Master and of his apostles, and while we may not plead prescription as a ground of faith, we certainly have a right to claim that the belief of the great body of the faithful in a doctrine for eighteen centuries is presumptive evidence that it is to be found in the Sacred Scripture. The belief of the church has been, and is, that the wicked, body and soul, shall be destroyed, not merely, but destroyed in hell forever and ever. That some of the fathers held to the annihilation of the wicked is admitted, but their opposition to the general faith served but to make it more conspicuous.

Our second remark is, that the doctrine of annihilation lowers infinitely one of the sanctions of the divine law, it makes that punishment to be temporal which the word of God declares to be eternal. Certainly, no reasonable man can attempt to maintain that cessation of existence is equivalent to everlasting punishment. The very idea of endless retribution supposes consciousness upon the part of the being who pays the penalty for violating law. Upon the contrary supposition, it would follow that the felon who dies in prison suffers everlasting punishment, because he never escapes from his imprisonment, and with equal propriety we might declare that we all of us suffered everlasting punishment before our creation, as we were then without life or light or joy.

Our third remark is, that this doctrine destroys one of the most powerful motives by which God appeals to the conscience of man. The "forever and ever" which the New Testament makes positive, the annihilationist makes negative. It is plain that according to this doctrine, the final judgment by whose sentence he is to be annihilated soul and body, is the last thing to be feared by the transgressor. Beyond that, there is nothing to do him harm, he is where Job longed to be in the anguish of his soul, at rest with kings and counsellors, where the prisoners rest together, and hear not the voice of the oppressor. Eternity is no longer a word of meaning or power to the guilty, nay, to the souls now under the wrath of God, the judgment day is to be longed for as the great day of deliverance. Many a sinner has in this world, under the power of conscience, in the anguish of conviction of sin, sighed for annihilation, how much more must they who are in despair long for the day when their inexpressible pains shall cease, and they shall sink into an eternal sleep! What must the effect of such an error be upon the wicked? Who will assert that the prospect of annihilation, of ceasing to be conscious of good or ill, is as a motive to restrain from evil, to be compared with the tremendous prospect of existence under the wrath of God? The Epicurean managed to be very comfortable in view of the former—"Let us eat and drink, for-tomorrow we die"—but who ever found peace in his guilt, under the conviction of the existence of an eternal hell?

One of the most overwhelming revelations of the Bible (and to these revelations we are shut up in regard to the future,) is that the wicked shall not cease to be, but they are cast into Gehenna, where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched. How can the evident meaning of such a passage be explained away? We are asked, How will you explain the peculiar terms employed to express the doom of the wicked, such as death, destruction, perishing, etc? and the reply is not difficult, for if God is to employ human language, he will select that which answers nearest the whole truth, parts of which only we can here grasp. Death is used in various senses in the Scripture, nor are we aware that in any case it means annihilation. Destruction has likewise various meanings, "O Israel! thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help." Where words are thus used in different senses, it is plain that we are to arrive at their meaning by comparing Scripture with Scripture, and by comparing them with the great established principles of the Divine word; and one of those first principles is that man is immortal; that the righteous and the wicked are alike to come forth from their graves, each to be judged, each to have a destiny beyond the judgment. Vengeance, like mercy, is seen stretching on into eternity, the wrath of God still abiding on the unbelieving through the ages of ages. W.

"A man's pride shall bring him low: but honor shall uphold the humble in spirit."

"Every word of God is pure; he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him."

For the Crisis.

This Do and Live.

Let your Bible be the talisman that shall actuate you in all manner of circumstances. Let it be the whole groundwork of Christian faith and practice. Accept no opinion from professed Christians whose precept does not comport favorably with the admonitions of Jesus. If they will not receive you because of dissenting opinions, love them, but keep clear of their unwarranted bigotry. If they love not their Bro. whom they have seen, "how can they love God whom they have not seen?" If their love is not diffusive beyond the circle of their ministerial court, they certainly are lacking in that important element Christian charity. Such have not the "spirit of Christ." Better be "fools for Christ's sake," than hazard eternal life on the altar of religious innovation. The whole struggle is to attain a home in our Redeemer's kingdom, not to gratify every whimsical dogma of church practice. If they deem eternal life loss of an individual concern than church polity, remember He says:—"He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my sayings, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." Act in reference to salvation by keeping clear of popular worship. Go where the body and blood of Christ are freely and indiscriminately offered to all who follow meekly in the footsteps of their illustrious Lord.

If immortality is worth anything at all,—if it is the last pre-eminent element of God's beneficence to dying men,—if the crowning glory of man's hopes is an ascending future life of peace, why need the restrictions of the gospel conflict with the most dignified pursuit of the human mind? To believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, is to be saved. No ceremonious law can ever advance us in grace or perfect us for our Redeemer's kingdom. A simple faith in Christ abrogates all formal ceremonies and elaborate argument, for the more practical belief of Jesus and him crucified. To be fully acquainted with this truth, is to act with an eye single to the glory of God. But when, for the establishment of religious tolerance, feigned pieces of merchandise in the shape of petty maxims and theological sentiments are allowed to be the decalogue of Christian faith, then it is that the body of Christ is rent in fragments, and the tressel work of the pyramidal edifice of Christianity is in ruins.

It is too bad! God calls us home. He says: "I love them that love me; and they that seek me early shall find me." But to quarrel to inaugurate a deadly feud through the manner of serving God, is destructive to the plan of salvation. LORD JESUS, deliver me from the thraldom of this venomous principle. It makes no difference to me, if I am only saved: but such is human nature, that among Christians even religious opposition cannot be borne, and I fear I may, inadvertently or otherwise, throw myself into this whirlpool of evil. Let us humbly pray that a perfect knowledge of the truth may direct our conversation in the spirit of Christ with resistless power. I have long since become weaned from the perishable frivolities of this thoughtless, truthless life, and only so far as earthly necessities compel me to indulge in these do I take a part. Another world, brighter and more fair—sinless and more true—is offered me free as God's mountain air. Shall I not accept it? Is there anything too great or dear for me to sacrifice, that I may, when the angel in dark livery hovers over me on noiseless wing, go to sleep with my fathers with an unfaltering hope of a glorious resurrection? O, no, I cannot believe it.

Brethren, this is my hope. It is the silvery chain that girdles my life of dispassionate appeal for the salvation of a lost world. It is true I differ from some of my Advent friends on one or two minor doctrinal points; and through what I deemed a spirit of forbearance, I have not hesitated to avow my sincere belief: but I must not suffer repudiation at the hands of my Christian kindred for this dissenting opinion. Why should I? I love Christ and his appearing, and how much or little I may deviate from the general doctrine of the Adventists concerning the order of the resurrection, I can say with dear Bro. C. F. Hudson, "they must rest satisfied." My opinion is my own, as derived from the Bible, and until I am convinced of an error (if this be one) by the Word of God, no human logic can dislodge me from my position.

And now let me say, I [illegible]

Hasten Thee Onward!

Hasten thee onward, old Time, in thy flight,
Bear me to regions of endless delight;
Onward, still onward, where storms never fall,
Where on our fond hopes shall ne'er rest a pall;
Where comes no dark cloud to shroud the glad day
Where lies no serpent trail cross our pathway;
Where with bright blossoms no thorns ever grow,
Our hearts piercing so!

On, on with fleetness, nor pause in thy way,
I am so longing for dawning of day!
Longing to cease me from this mortal strife,
Longing to drink of the waters of life,
Longing to range through those amaranth bowers,
Measured my stay by those unending hours;
Longing to sit me at Jesus' feet,
My joy all complete!

O onward hast'ning, how joyful the word!
Now is the conflict—then the reward;
Now the heart throbbings, by keen anguish prest,
Then the deep calmness of unending rest.
Here all the dimness, the darkness of night,
There shall the Lamb be our glorious light;
Here now as pilgrims we ever must roam,
Then all, all at home!

Here oft we languish, bound long years by pain,
There never more is felt the dread chain;
Here death prevaileth on every hand,
He enters never in that happy land.
Then haste thee onward, all on fleetest wing!
Christ, our beloved, the glad morning bring
That wakens the sleepers, and gathers his own
To that glorious home! CAROLINE HILL.

A SERMON,

Delivered in Chapman (large) Hall, Boston, Sunday morning, July 7th, 1861,

BY ELD. P. B. MORGAN.

EPH. 3: 14-19.—"Filled with the fullness of God."

The one work of the entire economy of grace is, the saving, sanctifying and exalting men to fellowship and unity with God. (1 John 1: 3.) Morally and spiritually, this is effected in this life by receiving "with meekness the engrafted word," (Jas. 1: 21) "by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Titus 3: 5.) But physically, at the period of the translation and resurrection of the saints, where they shall be clothed with "glory, honor, and immortality."

This is accomplished by God's coming down to man; by the incarnate Word—"MADE FLESH" and dwelling among us. And surely, had not God condescended to come to our relief we must have perished, for who could ascend up to him! The doctrine of the incarnation of the Son of God has doubtless vastly more in it than is commonly supposed. It is not only the root and foundation of the entire fabric of christianity, but of every ministry and ordinance of the church. It pleased the Father that "in Him should ALL FULLNESS DWELL,"—"For in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the God-head bodily." (Col. 1: 19; 2: 9.) And though there can be but one "only begotten Son of God," yet Christ being made flesh—partaker of our nature—we may hence, by the invisible workings of the life of God, (Eph. 4: 18,) be made one with him. It is with such an arrangement in mind that we can understand the meaning of the apostle when he saith, "God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." (1 Cor. 1: 9.) "That I might know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." (Phil. 3: 16.) And again: "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come. And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church [illegible] his body—[illegible] or Him [illegible] ALL IN ALL." (Eph. 1: 18-23.) [illegible]

this point. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." (John 17: 20, 21.) "I in them, and thou in me." (v. 23.)

This is realized by the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, entering and abiding with the church. Hence the language of Christ: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send him unto you. (John 16: 7.) Also the command to "not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me: For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized of the Holy Ghost not many days hence." (Acts 1: 4, 5.)

Coeval with this was the bestowment of gifts, which were to become the channels through which, in the normal state of the church, this divine life was to flow. Wherefore it is written, "When he ascended up on high he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." Eph. 4: 8.) The sequel is this: God, proposing to do a work for man, is pleased to work through means,—intermediately. As in the communication of the natural life, so God imparts spiritual life according to fixed laws. As for example: Let us pray for the heathen, yet we are in no wise assured that this alone will avail any thing. The reason is this: It hath "pleased" God by the foolishness of preaching to save those that believe;" (1 Cor. 1: 21); and being so ordained, no other means could possibly supersede this first arrangement of God. And so after the first outpouring of the Holy Spirit,—first upon the Jews and then upon the Gentiles,—we are never informed that the same grace was exhibited except "according to the measure of the gift of Christ," (Eph. 4: 7,) God choosing to work through the instrumentality of living men. And indeed it could not be otherwise, for it was for such and amongst such Christ came into the world. His church is built—a holy temple—of lively stones—living men. The great principles of the economy of grace are embodied in the Gospels; while the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles serve to illustrate the practical operation of those principles when deposited in the hearts of a living generation. And of this one of two things must be conceded—either that christianity was not fairly illustrated in the first generation of christians, or else, that its organic and normal actings must compare with those of the apostolic times when as fairly brought to bear upon human nature now.

The principles of christianity we fully know. And although it is for taking heed to the doctrines that the church laid her foundation stones, and cemented them with her blood, this was only because of the practical tendency and effect of these principles when brought into intimate contact with the consciences of men. Against principles most men of the world, even indolent christians, have little to say. There is to such men nothing particularly alarming in what you believe, be you a heretic, infidel, or Turk. And the same statement is true reversed. But it is when these principles are pressed upon the hearts of men—living, responsible men—that their sympathy or opposition is fully developed. Pure christianity is pre-eminently a practical matter. Our Lord said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," (John 5: 17), and we are "workers together with him." (2 Cor. 6: 1.) But how can men work without God! "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." (Ps. 127: 1.) In other words, how can we enjoy God's blessings and at the same time repudiate the instrumentality through which he proposes to communicate them to us? How is the church to be "filled with the fullness of God" and at the same time refuse his governance? How can we have a New Testament church without the New Testament plan—both as relates to its external form and its internal life! Or, to illustrate the question in hand—how, in the animal economy, can the brain, heart, lungs, or muscles, contribute their quota to the unit-life of the body, so long as they do not perform their several functions? So in the church of God. If he has placed therein ministries and ordinances for her well-being, is it reasonable to suppose that her well-being can as well be promoted without them? I hesitate not to say most emphatically, No.

The ordinances placed for the development and nourishing of this divine life, are Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The ministers were Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, [illegible] Teachers, which were severally appointed by God. See Eph. 4: 7-14. To these may be added Deacons, elected by the church, but ordained by Apostles.

The office of Apostle was that of an Elder in the church universal—ministering Christ's rule therein, setting in order churches, directing in worship and the right use of ordinances, ordaining ministries, laying on hands for conferring the gift of the Holy Ghost, and together constituted the visible centre of unity to the church.

The office of the New Testament Prophet was not so much for foretelling future events, as for present illumination, being the utterance of God's mind upon a point in question. Or, as says a writer upon this subject,* "The essence of their gift was supernatural utterance in the power of the Spirit, whether in predicting future events, in designating men to holy offices, in opening the Scriptures, or in speaking to 'edification, exhortation and comfort.'" (See Acts 13: 1, 2; 15: 28, 32; 16: 6; 20: 28; 1 Tim. 1: 18; Eph. 3: 5; John 16: 14.) This was in accordance with the promise that in the last days the Spirit should be "poured out upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." (Acts 2: 17.) Of all that was said by the prophets dwelling at Jerusalem, Antioch, and Cesarea, (Acts 11: 27; 13: 1; 21: 8, 9), we have but little recorded: doubtless for the reason that the most they said did not belong in the New Testament, but was simply for the time then being. And because the Holy Ghost which spoke through them, was to abide with the church forever.

The office of Evangelist was that of one going everywhere, preaching the word, convincing, converting, and gathering into Christ's fold those that were without.

The office of Pastor was that of the under-shepherd, whose duty it was to look after Christ's sheep and tend his fold.

While such were the primary organs of the church imparted by the pouring forth of the Holy Ghost, yet the divine manifestations were not limited here, but flowed on until all hearts fitted for its reception were made partakers of its heavenly influences, and were all moved by the one Spirit, after the ordering of God, according to their several gifts. "God hath set some in the Church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." And thus with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, the church as the body of Christ continued to the "edifying of itself in love." Thus it was visibly manifest that God was with them. Thus they were "filled with the fullness of God." As God was in Christ, so was Christ manifested in his church.

But the question arises, was this to continue throughout this dispensation the constitutional and abiding means of the church's being "filled with the fullness of God," and of her manifesting it to the world? I answer: show us any other way, who can? The church is "the body of Christ, and the members in particular." And "God hath set the members [gifts] in the body, every one, as it hath pleased Him." (1 Cor. 12: 18.) And not a single organic member, or gift, (for gifts he is speaking of,) can be removed without, according to the language of the figure, maiming the body of Christ. But is it said these precious gifts of Christ have been lost, and yet Christ has been with the church and prospered her! I know the gifts here enumerated have fallen into obscurity if not out of existence; but alas! what prosperity has the church had without them? The darkness of the twelve hundred and sixty years that came as the result of what we call "the great apostacy" we well know and feel. And what has protestantism done except by agitation and revolution, ever and anon with paroxysms of agony giving birth to a new sect which were striving for some lost gem of the ancient church, but in their turn acknowledging they were not strictly after the apostolic plan. Yet who, who of all the sects will not admit that that church should expect to be most blessed that was most perfectly after the New Testament order! But are these divine gifts lost? So was Paradise! but whose was the fault? If so, does not the sin lie at the door of the church?

But I am persuaded we must not concede too much upon this point. The declaration and promise of Christ was made unqualifiedly—"I am with you alway [every day, even unto the end of the world." I know that He has been with His church much as he that was "wounded in the house of his friend,"—that his Spirit has been grieved, and quenched, and he hindered in his merciful dispensations; yet he has not been, and will not be, without a seed to serve him, with whom he will abide after the manner he best can. But [illegible]—in his person, and consequently in his corporate body, Christ is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." He is yet (1.) the Apostle and High Priest of our profession; (2.) the Prophet like unto Moses; (3.) the blessed Evangelist who dispenses the gospel to the poor; and (4.) the sympathizing Pastor, Shepherd, and Counsellor or teacher. He is such to the church, however much they may grieve his Spirit, because the church (his church) is one with him.

I have long been persuaded, and am happy to say, upon every becoming occasion, that I firmly believe there is nothing that constitutionally, expressly, or implicitly teaches that the New Testament pattern of christianity and of the church should not be sufficient to the end of "this dispensation.

But do I hear you say, "Fanaticism," "Mormonism." My brother, let me warn you that you be not deceived by that subterfuge of the devil. Mormonism has long since proved itself with all abominable things to be a spue out of hell; however many honest men it may have ensnared notwithstanding. It is among the devil's grand counterfeits; but at the same time demonstrates to us the true coin is somewhere.

Why should we fear to interest ourselves and speak out upon a subject fraught with so mighty practical interest to the church at this present time, so long as we can say, "Thus it is written"! Who can tell how much our Lord desired to make a Luther, a Knox, and a Wesley, apostles to the people of their generation? Who, familiar with modern ecclesiastical history has not seen that utterances evidently from God—like those, as we may suppose, of the New Testament prophetic office—were heard again and again—in Scotland particularly, and also in England, and somewhat in this country! Did you ever read the Life of the Rev. William Brownwell, and not feel there was a demonstration of the willingness of God to impart gifts and blessings to his church, as anciently, if they would only receive them! But I know again, that "spiritual things are spiritually discerned"—that these things are not for any but those whose whole being is upon God's altar, who desire to dwell in the innermost temple of God. And I doubt not the time has come, fully come, when it shall be manifest that "the Lord, he is God." Satan, with all deceivableness and his wonted diabolical energy, is threatening to deceive the world. Jannes and Jambres must have somewhat to meet. See 2 Tim. 3. God must have, yes, and thanks be to his name, will have a seed to witness for him. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." (Isa. 59 19.) Satanic lies must be met with Divine truth, and a satanic spirit with a Divine Spirit. "The Spirit and the Word agree." The Word of God is the sword of the Spirit. With these, the Word and the Spirit, we are fully armed.

My brethren, we are living hard on to the end of this age. The hosts of sin are marshalled, and are pressing on. The church of God are called upon to come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Angels are spectators. Soldier of the cross, will you slumber in your tent?

"Up, O up, then, drowsy soldier!
Worlds are charging to the shock."

Already are we in the "latter rain." The harvest will soon be upon us. Shall we not lift up and put in their places the stones of God's temple. Help, Lord, for thou knowest thy servants take pleasure in the stones of Zion, and favor the dust thereof. Let us arise to pluck souls from the burning, and make ready a people prepared for the Lord. And in our last witness to the world, let it be seen that God is true; that his promises fail not; and that now, as at the beginning, his church knows the love of Christ that passeth knowledge, and as then, is now again FILLED WITH THE FULLNESS OF GOD. Amen.

For the Crisis.

From Eld. J. Parry.

BRO. WENDELL:—I send you an article in the Christian Intelligencer, on the "Final Doom of the Wicked"; on which, if you will allow me, I will make a few remarks. I am glad that "rumor" has of late brought this subject before the public, and that "the ministry of the evangelical church" begin to feel the power of truth. I had feared that the three P's that rule the world, Pride, Prejudice, and Popularity, had so blinded the popular churches, in these last days, as to effectually shut out the light of God's word on the "final doom of the wicked"; but it seems, by the remarks of "W.," that we may hope for better things; and that some of the evangelical ministry begin to discover that God means what he says, and says what he [illegible] sinneth it shall die"; and that "all the wicked he will destroy." The doctrine of the final destruction of all who do wickedly has, it seems, even in the eyes of "W," "some semblance of truth"; and he acknowledges that "some of the fathers" believed it; so it is not quite so new a doctrine as some would try to persuade us. So far, so good; from such a source, we are thankful for small favors, and yet live in hope of greater.

I perfectly agree to another sentiment advanced, namely: "that all error is insidious, and will give color to all the preaching and work of a minister of Christ. We have seen the truth of this remark exemplified on a large scale in the unscriptural and heathen dogma of "the immortality of the soul." This one first lie of the serpent in Eden has been the fruitful source of nearly all the false systems of religion that have pervaded the world for so many ages. Hero worship, purgatory, eternal torture, invocation of saints, going to heaven at death, and ancient and modern Spiritualism; all live, and move, and have their being in this most pernicious error; which is not to be found in the word of God; which declares that He only hath immortality, and the only way to obtain this inestimable blessing is by patient continuance in well doing, faith in Christ as the life-giver, and by a resurrection from the dead, at the revelation of the Son of God from heaven.

"W." says, "the belief of the church has been, and is, that the wicked, body and soul, shall be destroyed, not merely, but destroyed in hell forever and ever!" This is just what we believe and preach, and for this we have been denounced as infidels and atheists by the very churches we are now told are of like faith! Is it possible that the God of this world can so bewilder the understanding as to invent eternal misery out of such language as this? If so, then it is in vain to use argument—language has no power to convey literal truth—the word of God is turned into cunningly devised fables; and when Paul says the wicked "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," he means no such thing, but just the opposite. If God in his word does not mean what he says, I am surely not obliged to believe what he does not say, and thus contradict his word, and make him a liar. For my part, I wish not to go to the judgment of the great day with a lie in my right hand. Let God be true, if all men and devils prove liars; a plain and clear "Thus saith the Lord," is worth more than all human creeds, though they may be covered with the dust of ages—they will prove dark ages.

"W." says:—"Certainly, no reasonable man can attempt to maintain that cessation of existence is equivalent to everlasting punishment." I answer, can any "reasonable" man maintain that death is no punishment? The Bible says, "The wages of sin is death."—this is the penalty—not pain or torment, but death. Now if from this penalty there is no reprieve, no resurrection, no future life, then it is an everlasting punishment, just as much as eternal life is an everlasting reward. The one loses just as much as the other gains—eternal life. Is not this an endless loss? "W." seems to think that all motive for repentance would cease, if the fear of endless torture did not keep it alive. If he speaks from his own experience in this case, I fear his repentance needs to be repented of,—his religion is mere slavish fear, and will not stand the trial that shall try every man's work of what sort it is. My Bible tells me that the goodness of God leads men to repentance, and that filial fear is alone acceptable to God. It was in mercy, and not in wrath, that God shut man from the tree of life, lest he should eat and live for ever a sinner. The mercy of God endureth forever, but he retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy,—to say that God does retain his anger for ever, as the popular theology teaches, is to contradict the word of God, and make it of none effect by human tradition.

It is passing strange that "W." and the rest of his school, should steal one of our strongest texts to prove the utter destruction of the wicked, and constantly use it to prove the contrary. "Gehenna, where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched," was well understood by the Jews to be the place where all the filth of the city of Jerusalem was cast out to be destroyed by fire; and what the fire did not consume the worms did. An unquenchable fire is a consuming and destroying fire; not to torment them, but to burn them up, and leave neither root nor branch. I wish it were possible for the readers of the Christian Intelligencer, and other kindred papers, to see the flimsy arguments and flat contradictions to the word of God [illegible] made use of to bolster up the soul-[illegible] doctrine of endless torment, so derogatory to the character of God, as a being full of love and mercy; and which, instead of being a means of conversion, as "W." assumes, is, without doubt, the cause of much of the infidelity and hardness of heart that, in these last days, so lamentably prevails, both in the church and in the world. I thank God for deliverance from this dark abyss. J. PARRY.

The following is the article referred to by Bro. Parry:—

Final Doom of the Wicked.

It has been rumored of late, and perhaps with truth, that the doctrine of the final annihilation of the wicked is received to an increasing extent by the ministry of the evangelical Church. All error is insidious in its approaches, as it usually is in its influence upon the soul of its recipient; and the attention and alarm of all who are set for the defense of the truth should be aroused at even the suspicion of its presence in the house of God. A doctrinal error will, without his knowledge, give color to all the preaching and work of a minister of Christ. He cannot hide its effect, but like the ointment of the right hand, it bewrayeth itself. The doctrine in question has some semblance of the truth, and is therefore all the more dangerous.

Our first remark upon it is, that it is contrary to the standards of all evangelical christians, and to the voice of the church of Christ in all ages, as she has interpreted the word of her Master and of his apostles; and while we may not plead prescription as a ground of faith, we certainly have a right to claim that the belief of the great body of the faithful in a doctrine for eighteen centuries is presumptive evidence that it is to be found in the Sacred Scripture. The belief of the church has been, and is, that the wicked, body and soul, shall be destroyed, not merely, but destroyed in hell forever and ever. That some of the fathers held to the annihilation of the wicked is admitted, but their opposition to the general faith served but to make it more conspicuous.

Our second remark is, that the doctrine of annihilation lowers infinitely one of the sanctions of the divine law; it makes that punishment to be temporal which the word of God declares to be eternal. Certainly, no reasonable man can attempt to maintain that cessation of existence is equivalent to everlasting punishment. The very idea of endless retribution supposes consciousness upon the part of the being who pays the penalty for violating law. Upon the contrary supposition, it would follow that the felon who dies in prison suffers everlasting punishment, because he never escapes from his imprisonment; and with equal propriety we might declare that we all of us suffered everlasting punishment before our creation, as we were then without life or light or joy.

Our third remark is, that this doctrine destroys one of the most powerful motives by which God appeals to the conscience of man. The "forever and ever" which the New Testament makes positive, the annihilationist makes negative. It is plain that according to this doctrine, the final judgment by whose sentence he is to be annihilated soul and body, is the last thing to be feared by the transgressor. Beyond that, there is nothing to do him harm; he is where Job longed to be in the anguish of his soul, at rest with kings and counsellors, where the prisoners rest together, and hear not the voice of the oppressor. Eternity is no longer a word of meaning or power to the guilty; nay, to the souls now under the wrath of God, the judgment day is to be longed for as the great day of deliverance. Many a sinner has in this world, under the power of conscience, in the anguish of conviction of sin, sighed for annihilation; how much more must they who are in despair long for the day when their inexpressible pains shall cease, and they shall sink into an eternal sleep! What must the effect of such an error be upon the wicked? Who will assert that the prospect of annihilation, of ceasing to be conscious of good or ill, is as a motive to restrain from evil, to be compared with the tremendous prospect of existence under the wrath of God? The Epicurean managed to be very comfortable in view of the former—"Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die"—but who ever found peace in his guilt, under the conviction of the existence of an eternal hell?

One of the most overwhelming revelations of the Bible (and to these revelations we are shut up in regard to the future,) is that the wicked shall not cease to be, but they are cast into Gehenna, where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched. How can the evident meaning of such a passage be explained away? We are asked, How will you explain the peculiar terms employed to express the doom of the wicked, such as death, destruction, perishing, etc? and the reply is not difficult, for if God is to employ human language, he will select that which answers nearest the whole truth, parts of which only we can here grasp. Death is used in various senses in the Scripture, nor are we aware that in any case it means annihilation. Destruction has likewise various meanings, "O Israel! thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help." Where words are thus used in different senses, it is plain that we are to arrive at their meaning by comparing Scripture with Scripture, and by comparing them with the great established principles of the Divine word; and one of these first principles is that man is immortal; that the righteous and the wicked are alike to come forth from their graves, each to be judged, each to have a destiny beyond the judgment. Vengeance, like mercy, is seen stretching on into eternity, the wrath of God still abiding on the unbelieving through the ages of ages. W.

"A man's pride shall bring him low: but honor shall uphold the humble in spirit."

"Every word of God is pure; he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him."

For the Crisis.

This Do and Live.

Let your Bible be the talisman that shall actuate you in all manner of circumstances. Let it be the whole groundwork of Christian faith and practice. Accept no opinion from professed Christians whose precept does not comport favorably with the admonitions of Jesus. If they will not receive you because of dissenting opinions, love them, but keep clear of their unwarranted bigotry. If they love not their Bro. whom they have seen, "how can they love God whom they have not seen?" If their love is not diffusive beyond the circle of their ministerial court, they certainly are lacking in that important element Christian charity. Such have not the "spirit of Christ." Better be "fools for Christ's sake," than hazard eternal life on the altar of religious innovation. The whole struggle is to attain a home in our Redeemer's kingdom, not to gratify every whimsical dogma of church practice. If they deem eternal life less of an individual concern than church polity, remember He says:—"He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my sayings, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." Act in reference to salvation by keeping clear of popular worship. Go where the body and blood of Christ are freely and indiscriminately offered to all who follow meekly in the footsteps of their illustrious Lord.

If immortality is worth anything at all,—if it is the last pre-eminent element of God's beneficence to dying men,—if the crowning glory of man's hopes is an unending future life of peace, why need the restrictions of the gospel conflict with the most dignified pursuit of the human mind? To believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, is to be saved. No ceremonious law can ever advance us in grace or perfect us for our Redeemer's kingdom. A simple faith in Christ abrogates all formal ceremonies and elaborate argument, for the more practical belief of Jesus and him crucified. To be fully acquainted with this truth, is to act with an eye single to the glory of God. But when, for the establishment of religious tolerance, feigned pieces of merchandise in the shape of petty maxims and theological sentiments are allowed to be the decalogue of Christian faith, then it is that the body of Christ is rent in fragments, and the trowel work of the pyramidal edifice of Christianity is in ruins.

It is too bad! God calls us home. He says: "I love them that love me; and they that seek me early shall find me." But to quarrel to inaugurate a deadly feud through the manner of serving God, is destructive to the plan of salvation. LORD JESUS, deliver me from the thraldom of this venomous principle. It makes no difference to me, if I am only saved: but such is human nature, that among Christians even religious opposition cannot be borne, and I fear I may, inadvertently or otherwise, throw myself into this whirlpool of evil. Let us humbly pray that a perfect knowledge of the truth may direct our conversation in the spirit of Christ with resistless power. I have long since become weaned from the perishable frivolities of this thoughtless, truthless life, and only so far as earthly necessities compel me to indulge in these do I take a part. Another world, brighter and more fair—sinless and more true—is offered me free as God's mountain air. Shall I not accept it? Is there anything too great or dear for me to sacrifice, that I may, when the angel in dark livery hovers over me on noiseless wing, go to sleep with my fathers with an unfaltering hope of a glorious resurrection? O, no, I cannot believe it.

Brethren, this is my hope. It is the silvery chain that girdles my life of dispassionate appeal for the salvation of a lost world. It is true I differ from some of my Advent friends on one or two [illegible] doctrinal points; and through what I deemed a spirit of forbearance, I have not hesitated to avow my sincere belief: but I will not suffer repudiation at the hands of my Christian kindred for this dissenting opinion. Why should I? I love Christ and his appearing, and how much or little I may deviate from the general doctrine of the Adventists concerning the order of the resurrection, I can say with dear Bro. C. F. Hudson, "they must rest satisfied." My opinion is my own, as derived from the Bible, and until I am [illegible] of an error (if this be one) by the Word of God, no human logic can dislodge me from my position.

And now let me say, I am by no means exempt from the ironical [illegible]

courted by the votaries of popular will, in hope I would seek shelter within the pale of autocratic influence. Their patience was exhausted, and I am denounced a victim of inflexible heterodoxy. But these things do not move me. If I can win Christ, my mission is completed. I stand a living defender of the truth of our resurrection to "eternal life" through Jesus Christ; and I am satisfied to offer myself a spectacle of popular indignation—a model of avaricious contempt—a worker of sedition. So they counted the Son of God. And if the results of enduring for His sake issue in eternal life, I am satisfied. On my own part I am fearless of any dangerous contingency arising from an over-aptitude to create a schismatic influence in the church of Christ, from the fact that an humble knowledge of God's behests urges me to attach a pre-eminent importance to religious fundamental principles. If this is the prime object of God's people, no dangerous reprisals will be enacted through a false notion of opinion.

I have an object in this life—an object that absorbs all other duties and obligations, namely, to persuade men to be christians. This I do independently, and fearless of the time and place, or of dogmatical foolish ceremonies. It is enough if we are christians. As Fredericka Bremer observed to Pope Pius IX.—"If I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, I shall be saved." This is enough. Do thou "let me die the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

For the Crisis.

An Explanation.

A number have responded to my recent note in the Crisis, but having been informed some do not understand what may properly be meant by the "Order and endowments of the primitive Church," I wish to say,—by the order of the primitive church I mean such as is laid down in the New Testament, (the 4th chapter of Paul to the Ephesians, for example.) By the endowments, I would be understood as meaning such graces and helps as are afforded by the continual presence and operation of the Holy Ghost in the church. These are matters I have, from the first of my religious experience, believed and rejoiced in with unspeakable joy.

For further particulars, I refer the inquirer to an article I published in the Crisis of March 24th, 1855; also to "The Gift of Power," by the Rev. Mr. Platt, a Methodist clergyman of New York; "The Promise of the Father," by Mrs. Palmer, (Methodist); Memoirs of Rev. Wm. Bramwell; "Remarkables of Dr. Increase Mather"; Boy's "Suppressed Evidence—or Proof of the Miraculous Faith and Experience of the Church in all ages—including notable things in the lives of John Welch (son-in-law to John Knox), George Wishart, and other early Scotch divines;" "The True Constitution of the Church," by Rev. W. W. Andrews; "Palmer on the Church"; the testimony of the fathers, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and Origen; also Gibbon's history of the first four centuries of the Church.

Brief Comments.

David in describing some of his afflictions, says in one place, "I am become like a bottle in the smoke." Ps. 119: 83. From any experience which people in this country have in regard to bottles, it would not be apparent what effect smoke would have upon a bottle, or what David meant by this language. It is all plain, however, when we remember that in the eastern countries bottles are made of skins of animals. These being hung up in the smoke must soon be parched and shrivelled up. David uses this figure to represent the exhausted state of body and mind to which he had been reduced by bodily and mental distress. This fact in regard to bottles must be borne in mind also in our Savior's parable, Matt. 9: 17. "Neither do men put new wine into old bottles, else the bottles break and the wine runneth out." By receiving the liquor poured into it, a skin bottle must be greatly swolled or distended: and still more, if the liquor be wine, by its fermentation while advancing to ripeness: so that if no vent be given to it, the liquor may overpower the strength of the bottles and burst them, and thus the wine would run out and the bottles perish. New bottles on the contrary, being in the prime of their strength, may resist the expansion of the fermentation, and preserve the wine to maturity.

Luke 6: 38. "Give and it shall be given unto you: good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over shall men give into your bosom." To understand what is meant by giving into the bosom, it must be recollected that the orientals generally wore long, wide, and loose garments; and when they wished to carry anything that their hands could not contain, they made a fold for that purpose in the bosom of their robe, above the girdle.

Ps. 103: 5. David when gratefully reviewing the mercies of Jehovah, says, "Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things, so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's." David does not mean here to say, of course, [illegible] the youth of the eagle is actually re[illegible] so that an old bird becomes young. [illegible] alludes to the fact that eagles at [illegible] times shed their feathers, which are supplied by a new growth, by which means even old age assumes the appearance of youth.

The oft-quoted text, Ps. 84: 10, seems to be improved by the marginal reading. The text reads, "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." Now a door-keeper in some instances is quite an honorable, and withal a profitable position. But the margin reads, "I choose rather to sit at the threshhold;" that is, he would choose the very lowest and humblest seat in the house of his God, rather than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

A Sabbath-Day's Journey.—We often hear persons express the desire to make a Sabbath-day's journey toward the kingdom. Such persons express a wish, unconsciously no doubt, for very slow progress. A Sabbath-day's journey, as regulated by the traditions of the Jews, was only about two miles; while an ordinary day's journey was regarded by that people as about twenty. Of the limited distance which constituted a Sabbath-day's journey, we have an account in the New Testament. Luke chap. 24: 50 says that our Savior just previous to his ascension, led his disciples out as far as Bethany. Bethany is declared in John 11: 18, to be from Jerusalem about fifteen furlongs off. In Acts 1: 12, we read that after the ascension of the Lord, the disciples returned unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, (on which Bethany was situated) which is from Jerusalem a Sabbath-day's journey. These three passages show that a Sabbath-day's journey was about fifteen furlongs. There are eight furlongs in a mile, which makes the distance to be about two miles. Desires for great and rapid advancement would be therefore better expressed by a day's journey, than Sabbath-day's journey, which was not more at most than one tenth as far.—U. Smith.—Review and Herald.

The Resurrection.

[Selected from the writings of John Hurley of New York, by J. K. Belloms.]

We understand from the holy scriptures that, "as in Adam all die, even so in or by Christ shall all be made alive," i. e., on account of Adam's transgression all men died, even so, on account of Christ's obedience, shall all men be restored to life again. By the creation of Adam and Eve God created the whole race of man in one day, for he made them capable of producing or pro-creating their species, and commanded them to do so. "Be ye fruitful and multiply, and fill the whole earth and subdue it. By Adam's transgression all his posterity transgressed in one day; and, as all were created and sinned in Adam before they were born, so they all died in him before they were born. Now this is the meaning of,—"As in Adam all died, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." . . . And as the human family passively sinned in Adam, so they have obeyed passively in Christ. And, as they have suffered death for Adam's transgression, so they shall be brought to life through Christ's obedience. None of Christ's family can be redeemed till all are redeemed, neither can any of the non-redeemed be brought to life till all are brought to life together. It does not follow that because the whole of Adam's race must have the life they lost in him restored to them by Christ, that therefore all mankind will be saved. It is true all will be saved from the first death, but not from the second death. It would not be just that any one should lose his life for the sin of another, unless that life is again restored to its possessor. * * * *

According to our understanding of the gospel plan of redemption, the life and position that every man lost by Adam's transgression shall be restored to them by Christ; but immortality and eternal life are given to the righteous only; immortality is the reward of faith and well doing here. Christ redeemed Adam from immediate annihilation in death by the promise of obeying the law which he (Adam) had transgressed, and also of dying in his stead to atone for the guilt which he endured. Now in prospectively dying for Adam (as the lamb slain from the foundation of the world) and obeying the law for him, he obeyed and died for every one that come from Adam's loins. Adam, as the federal head of the human race, is called the "figure or type of him (Christ) that was to come."—Rom. 5: 14. Adam's transgression involved the transgression and death of himself and all his posterity; and he as the destroyer of the human family, was by contrast the type of Christ as their redeemer to life. Therefore Christ's obedience must embrace the whole human race; and, according to the terms of the divine covenant, as also the strict and plainest rules of analytical reasoning, in the order of the divine arrangement, not one of the redeemed can enter the kingdom of God till all enter together, neither can any of the wicked be finally condemned till all are condemed together. In God's day and arrangement all men were created together, all sinned together, all died together, and all were respited or redeemed together from Adam's death. To man in this state of probation Christ offers eternal life as the reward of believing and obeying the gospel. "To-day while it is called to-day." The day of Christ "while it is called to-day," in reference to the redeemed, extends from the time that Adam sinned till the day of righteous judgment. Or, in other words, the day of Christ commenced in paradise, when Adam was expelled, and it will close when Adam with all the redeemed is restored to the paradise of God, the antitype of Adam's paradise. This time embraces the whole day of negotiation between God the eternal and Christ the Redeemer. Adam was expelled in the morning from the paradise of creation; he will be redeemed from death and restored to the paradise of grace in the evening, or the end of the TO-DAY with God. So the thief on the cross; he will be brought into the kingdom at the same time.

"The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: but the prayer of the upright is his delight."

"The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good."

The World's Crisis.
BOSTON, AUGUST 14, 1861.

The War Question.

We have the following note from Bro. I. C. Wellcome:—

"I think it will be found a great mistake to close the gate against the question of fighting christians. If ever there was a question demanding thorough examination and admonition, it seems to me it is this, at this time. And so our brethren generally think, as far as I have seen them. The multitudes are to fight, and it will be difficult to keep the minds of christians from the spirit of war without frequent admonition."

In relation to the above we would say that "the question of fighting christians" is only excluded from our columns "for the present," as will be seen by the Resolution touching the matter which we published in our last. We think Bro. Wellcome will concur in the wisdom of letting the subject rest for a while. Meantime it will not be necessary for our correspondents to send us articles on the question just now, for our supply is abundant, as we intimated several weeks since. Among the articles long since received, but not yet published, are two from Bro. Wellcome himself. The above note from him will suggest on which side of the question he stands. We hope to afford him a hearing by and by.

The New Tract a Success!

Since our last we have received for the New Tract of Bro. Hudson from the Albany Church, $1.06, per Bro. D. Spencer; from Bro. T. S. Axe, $1. In addition to this we have pledges of $1 each from a brother in Albany and Bro. Abel R. White. We want $3.35 more, and hope to receive it before our next paper goes to press.

Encouraged by our report last week, Bro. Hudson has decided to put the Tract immediately into the hands of the stereotyper, and has authorized us to arrange for its publication. He intends to have it ready for the Wilbraham meeting. We expect to receive an installment of the manuscript to-day, (Tuesday,) and shall do what we can to hurry along the printing. We wish those who have pledged amounts for the Tract to send us the money as soon as possible, so that it may be used in meeting the expense of publication. Those who want the Tract at $2 per 100 can secure it by sending their orders and the cash at once; we do not know what the price of the Tract will be after its publication, but feel confident it ought not to be sold at the rate named for those who step forward and aid in its issue. Now is the time to get it cheap.

A New Enterprise.

We find the following in the Harbinger of the 7th inst:—

"Old Version of the Bible.—Bro. D. T. Taylor, of Dansville, N. Y., has for sale a copy of 'The Holy Scriptures, faithfully translated by Miles Coverdale, Bishop of Exeter, 1535.' Reprinted by Samuel Bagster, London, 1838, large 4 to, cloth, some 1500 pages, includes the Apocrapha. Price only $6 00, $2.00 less than the New York market. Bro. T. needs funds to get east. We would gladly obtain it, but cannot afford to. Who will take it?"

Neither can we afford to procure this "Old Version of the Bible," for our own library, but we will cheerfully be one of six persons to buy it of our dear Bro. Taylor and present it to his excellent wife. In this way the book would change owners without depriving its present possessor of access to it, and—what we care more for—Bro. T. could be helped "to get east." This latter item we deem "a consummation devoutly to be wished." The dollars may be sent to Miles Grant, Boston, whom we will take the liberty to appoint Treasurer of the "Miles Coverdale" fund; and we propose that all monies paid him before and during Wilbraham Camp Meeting upon the the strength of this suggestion, shall be devoted to the object named above. After that we will ask him to report the result through the Crisis, giving the names of the shareholders in the enterprise. He shall have our dollar the first time we see him. How long shall it remain alone in the Treasury? Remember, friends, that living at a Water Cure for about a year and a half costs some money, and when such a "book worm" as Daniel T. Taylor is willing to sell a work like the one here named, it must be because his pocket book makes a much poorer show than his library! "A word to the wise," etc.

The Darkening of the Sun.

Has the sun been darkened? This question is often asked by the anxious ones who are looking for the Savior's coming. This is a question of more than ordinary interest. Its importance is seen at a glance. If the sun has been darkened, then we have a kind of land-mark, and may determine, somewhat definitely, as to the great event of which this is the forerunner. This event would be, to the church, what an elevated object on land is to the mariner; while it may not tell the exact distance to the desired haven, it is sufficiently exact to assure the toil-worn and weary that home will soon be reached, and that the anticipated greeting will shortly take place. To admit that the sun has not been darkened is, it seems to me, to defer hope, the very influence of which is to make the heart sick, and to discourage the tried ones as to the return of the "Just One."

In proposing this question, then, it is not to create doubt—enough of which we have already—but to say some things that will cheer the heart and revive the drooping spirits of the tempted and the tried.

The arguments urged against the darkening of the sun in 1780, as being the fulfillment of Matt. 24: 29, are two. (1.) It is claimed that it was not of sufficient magnitude, and (2.) that it has been darkened a great many times.

The first of these objections involves two thoughts. 1. The darkening was seen by only a small portion of the human family. 2. It was confined entirely to the western or a portion of the western world. But how these considerations can amount to objections in the mind of a considerate person, is more than I can tell. To say the darkening of the sun, in 1780, could not, or did not fulfill the prophecy, because it was not universal, is to argue that all signs must be universal, or, otherwise they are not signs. But this mode of reasoning is evidently incorrect. As well might it be said, that the star that led the wise men was not the fulfillment of the prophecy, as to deny the darkening of the sun on the ground before suggested. The fact is, almost all the signs and events connected with the prophecies are somewhat local. Some of the signs of the Savior's first advent were fulfilled in Jerusalem, some in Bethlehem, and others in other parts of Palestine. Some of the events noted by the prophets received their accomplishment in Asia, some in Europe,—and why should it be thought a thing incredible that some are fulfilled in this part of the world? It is no more against the fulfillment of the prophecy to say that all mankind did not see the sun darkened, than it would be to deny the fulfillment of Balaam's prophecy because all mankind did not see that.

2. It is sometimes urged that the sun has been darkened a great many times. Be it so. Does this destroy the fact that it was not darkened in 1780? As well might it be urged that because kingdoms and nations have warred with one another ever since the days of Nimrod, that therefore there is no relevancy in Christ's declaration, "nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom" This prophecy of the Savior loses none of its power because events of a similar nature or character have transpired before. The point to be looked at is not so much the similarity of the events, but the time when they are or were to be developed. Let us then with this thought before us examine this subject.

The sun was to be darkened immediately after the tribulation of certain days. Now that the tribulation of those days refers to the persecution endured by the church, during the dark and middle ages, I think there can be no question. Whenever the tribulation ends, we may look for the accomplishment of the prophecy. It will be found exceeding difficult to extend the time marked by the word immediately. It is just the word that would be used to indicate the fact that an event was to take place without any delay. The word is of such a character as to preclude the idea that the tribulation ends seventy-five or a hundred years before the sun is darkened. So that, if the tribulation ended some seventy or eighty years ago, we may look with confidence to that time as the most probable point for the fulfillment of the prediction. Let us look at the event of 1780, on the 19th of May, and see if there is not sufficient evidence to answer the declaration, "The sun shall be darkened."

Those who have described the dark day speak of the darkness as commencing about the "middle of the forenoon,"—that it "continued through the day" and a part of the night. The darkness is described as "intense," "terrific," "remarkably dark"!! "The birds were silent, and disappeared"; "the fowls returned to rest." The "farmers left their fields" and their work and retired to their dwellings. Persons were "filled with fear"; there was "great distress"; "all faces seemed to gather blackness"; "it was the general opinion that the day of judgment had come." What more can be expected if the sun is again darkened? Surely the darkness cannot be more than "intense," or "terrific"; and the influence of the event would be just what it was in 1780. Community then were filled with fear and distress, and all faces "gathered blackness," "and it was the general opinion that the day of judgment had come." Now no future darkening can effect more than was effected on the 19th of May, 1780. Indeed, there is only one feature that can be different, namely, the extent of the darkening. But we have seen that to object to the darkening of the sun of 1780, because it was not universal, is to introduce a principle which, if applied, would unsettle and destroy the greater portion of what is regarded fulfilled prophecy. It will not do to object to the event of May 19th, 1780, simply because it was not universal. In all the dark days referred to, we shall fail to discover the facts and circumstances which we see connected with this. It took place after the tribulation—it was immediately after. To say the sun has not been darkened is to affirm that the falling of the stars in November, 1833, amounted to nothing; that that event was not marked in prophecy. And does it not sound a little strange to hear some of our brethren expatiate on the unprecedented roughness and boisterous character of the ocean, for the last few years, and hear them dwell especially on the "distress of nations with perplexity," as if these events were in process of fulfillment, when the fact appears that these events do not take place until after the sun has been darkened. Either say nothing about the distress and perplexity of the nations, or else admit that the sun has been darkened. Let us be consistent with ourselves, and then shall we be able to convince others.

After all that has been said against the event of the 19th of May, 1780, I am fully convinced and unshaken in my faith, that the prediction of the Savior as to the sun, Matt. 25: 29, was fulfilled in 1780. We, without doubt, have passed all these events or celestial signs spoken of by the Savior. Perhaps the shaking of the powers of heaven has not been realized; but as to the others, they have been or are being fulfilled. If then we relinquish the fact that the sun has been darkened, we at the same time must confess that we know nothing about "Redemption drawing nigh," and hence the time has not come for us to lift up the head; for, if the sun has not been darkened, we don't know that the kingdom of God is at hand. Let us not always be learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth; but let us be found giving meat in due season, which, at least in part, consists in proclaiming the near approach of the Son of God—a work that does and will continue to meet with the approval of heaven.

Gleanings from Letters.

Ivory Hezelton, Jr., writes:—"The Crisis I would not part with for the paltry sum of $2 a year. By it I have learned to read the Bible as it is, and to understand it, too,—which is worth more than all the gold or silver of this earth."

Lucinda F. W. Bacon writes:—"I have taken the World's Crisis for a number of years, and hope it will continue as long as I can have money to pay for it. I enclose two dollars to pay you for the paper. I have never been sorry I have been looking for this same Jesus to establish his kingdom under the whole heaven; and whilst the kingdoms of this world are dashing to pieces, I feel that we should have our lamps trimmed and burning, and our vessels filled with oil, that when he returns from the wedding we may be all ready to hail the glad day. O, joyful day—blessed promise! when those that have been waiting for the Master's return will see the King in his beauty."

C. Hill writes:—"The Crisis is our only preacher of present truth, and we have many ways for it. Would like to send you five dollars instead of one."

E. Miller, West Martinsburgh, N. Y., writes:—"Enclosed you will find one dollar to pay for the Crisis for six months, to be directed to Abel Bigford, West Lowville, N. Y. He and his family have of late become interested in the Bible truths that the Crisis advocates, and some of his neighbors, through the labors of Bro. C. B. Turner, have embraced the truth. I am in hopes that I may induce others to take your valuable paper."

M. A. Conillard, Monroe, Me., writes:—"Although a stranger personally, I address you as a sister, hoping that the Lord may bless you in your labor of love. I am well pleased with the Crisis. I peruse its contents with joy. I am deprived of the privilege of meeting with those who preach the truth. I am surrounded with Spiritualism, and hear nothing about the Lord's coming; and of all that profess the name of Christ, I feel I am the least. My prayer is, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? I feel like Jeremiah of old: 'Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughters of my people.'"

A. F. Servis, Holly, Mich., writes:—"I will try soon to obtain something from those taking the Crisis in this section, for there must be considerable due, I think, and no doubt you need it. Have spoken to some who take the paper regularly, also to others who I wish would take it, but am met with the universal cry of 'hard times.' Too hard times, truly, for half alive professors to pay for valuable reading, when the necessaries (?) of life must be paid for, such as tea, coffee, tobacco, snuff, and costly clothing. But, thank the Lord, some of the brethren in this locality are giving up those things. God help us all to be pure and sacrificing for the truth."

Bro. Luther Boutell writes us "in much love," and among other things says:—"I shall do all I can to promote peace, joy, love, and good will in the household. If any personal allusions, or hasty expressions to hurt should find way into my communications, expunge, only let the sentiments be mine. I shall strive to be a peace maker. I am on a mission, having a good time. God bless you in all your labors of love for the good of the church."

To M. H. Irish, Toronto, C. W.: I have your letter of the 9th inst., and shall endeavor, if the Lord will, to comply with your request. I will write when I hear from you again.

Sad Consequences of Error.

Bro. Wendell:—I copy the following communication, verbatim, from the Christian Freeman, of October, 1860, so that brethren can see what is going on in our land, and be prepared to judge the better as to doctrines which are being agitated and introduced among us:—

"Bro. Russell:—By your permission I will offer a very few suggestions upon the 'gospel of Christ,' as preached by Mr. Franklin on last evening, August 22d, to quite a large audience of the good people of Jacksonville, Ill. I will only notice, however, one point in particular that seems to me to involve the mournful and but too blighting consequences of infidelity and atheism itself. But I would not, by any means, convey the impression that this gentleman accepts such consequences. The utmost obvious and self-evident proposition that 'the work of the spirit of truth has been of the like kind, though not in a degree equally exalted in all ages since his advent,' was not only denied, but held up to ridicule and scorn.

Now let us sincerely inquire, as disinterested lovers of the truth, what is involved in the denial of this proposition? That God, the common Father of us all, since the demise of the apostle John, has seen best to retire from the world and humanity to some unknown part of his vast domains, and left us, yea, all succeeding generations of men, to be saved, if saved at all, through the only instrumentality, the printed word—in which the truth is symbolized—and we poor erring orphans are left without God, and without hope even, in this present evil world. No longer is left us the right, the duty and consolation of prayer for the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, to quicken us into newness of life, and a gracious perception and love of the truth—no, no. Our ground of confidence in the hope and belief of the truth that we, as disciples of our Divine Master, may learn and experience all those sacred influences and 'fruits of the Spirit'—such as 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, patience, faith,' etc., is henceforth to be destroyed and entirely wrested from us in this life of probation and trial. Our Heavenly Father—having been taught such endearing appellation by our Savior—is now, forsooth, for us a chimera, a mockery; as, since John the Revelator is no more, he having exhausted the divine influence or divinity, thought it expedient to seal up such gracious influences forever, so far as we his creatures are concerned. Oh! what desolation—what an orphanage is this!—to be forever condemned hopelessly to struggle—vainly to struggle on 'against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world;' and of our own infirm, evil disposition within us—with no divine or gracious influences to comfort, to cheer and strengthen us in this unequal conflict. O what an orphanage is this for us, for all men, forever hopelessly condemned in this life! If this doctrine is not atheism, my brother, will you tell me then what is atheism. Yours for the truth,

J. H. Alderman."

To the above I will add some extracts, so that none may be mistaken as to the views of those who reject the Spirit's influence.

"As the spirit of man puts forth all its moral power in the words which it fills with its ideas, so the Spirit of God puts forth all its converting and sanctifying power in the words which it fills with its ideas. . . . If the Old and New Testaments contain all the arguments which can be offered to reconcile man to God, and to purify them who are reconciled, then all the power of the Holy Spirit which can operate upon the human mind is spent."—A. Campbell, Editor of the Harbinger, 1831, pp. 294, 295.

"All converting power is in the facts and arguments and motives of the written word, . . . so the Holy Spirit can exert no influence over the human mind, except by words and arguments."—A. Campbell.

These sentiments may be seen in a work entitled, "Christianity Restored," by A. Campbell. But I would not be understood as saying that all his followers go to the same extent, or endorse all his views. I know, however, that some of the leaders in Western New York do adopt them.

From the language used above, we see it is not only asserted that God does not work on the mind only through the word, but also that he cannot operate in any other way. Let us see how this idea appears by an illustration: God formed the instinct of the water-fowl; and if we should say he cannot change that instinct, or can change it only by external manifestations, would we not plainly deny his infinite power and wisdom? So to say he cannot change the moral quality or feelings of the human mind only by external means, as words, etc., appears to me to deny his infinite power and wisdom. And to say he has not promised to use any power in redeeming men from sin only the written word, is to deny one of the plainest truths of the precious Bible. See one decisive promise in John 14: 16–23,—"How is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" Is not the written word manifested to the world? It was thoughts like these which led the above writer, in the warmth of his feeling, to "ask if it was not atheism and infidelity?" These sentiments also show that prayer for spiritual blessings is useless; and brethren who have travelled much west have seen the sad effects in this respect in some places.

But I must close, lest this be too lengthy; and will do so by giving part of a letter from a beloved brother, to whom I lately wrote for counsel and help in relation to our reform:—

"I as deeply deplore as you can, the state of things among those holding our views of life through Christ. The rejection of the work of the Holy Spirit will kill any sect or party. When I give up the religion of the Spirit of God, then I shall be what my enemies so often called me, 'an infidel.' But, alas! the work so long fostered in the west, and hurried on by Thomasism, has, I fear, swept the life of religion away as with a flood; and I acknowledge I feel very despairing of any material recovery from it in that region. Yet it is doubtless duty to do all we can to stay the plague. While the enemy comes in like a flood, may God's Spirit lift up a standard against it. I feel wearied in body and mind at what I see and hear. But God can and will provide, and do all things well. In him is all my hope. I pray you may be sustained in your conflict against this, 'another gospel,' and be able to check it in its horrid work of destruction."

Reimer's German Tract.

Brother Wendell:—I have perused and read with much care Bro. L. Reimer's German tract, which he says is a part of his book, "Life only through Christ," which he intends to publish for the good of the German population. It is ably and well written; and compiled from extracts out of Scripture, and from the writings of that great Reformer, Martin Luther. Great fundamental truths are compressed into a small compass, so that the German mind can easily comprehend its logical reasonings. I believe it is the pioneer of other great movements among our German countrymen and population; and, though small in its beginning, it is like the spit of Jesus, and the laying of hands on the eyes of the blind, so that, in the first time, they will "see men as trees walking."—Mark 8: 22–26. Yet a second application may bring them fully to sight, to see clearly for themselves.

I honor the modesty of our brother, in not mentioning his name as the author of the tract, though I regret that he does not name a place, on the title page or end page of his tract, as a depot where his publications can be had. I hope wisdom will move him to do so in the next edition.

Now I would say to the readers of the "World's Crisis," and to the readers of any other publication which will copy this, (of course they are very respectfully requested to do so,) English or German, to send in their orders to Bro. L. Reimer, from ten cents up to one dollar, as they feel disposed to send; to have as many tracts forwarded them as Bro. Reimer sees fit, for distributing them among their German neighbors. The poor, he says, will have them free, if they send the stamps, which are a cent apiece, I believe, to pay the postage. Current money is desired. Brethren, think quick, and act quick. Time is very short. Bro. L. Reimer's address is 537 North 10th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Springfield.

Bro. Wendell:—I embrace this opportunity of addressing a few lines to you, hoping, if thought worthy, they may find a place in your valuable paper. I am glad that such a channel is open in which can flow in rich variety God's gracious dealings with his tried, tempted, and tempest-tossed children. Hereby we may, to some degree, compare notes and ascertain whether we are on the right track. It is true that this world, which looked so beautiful and promised so fair while we were in nature's darkness, when our eyes are opened by the Spirit of the Lord to see things as they really are, we find to be a waste wilderness, beset with foes on every hand,—some indeed are open and avowed; others, and by far the greater part, are more subtle and deceptive. Amongst this class are the false guides who cry, "Lo here—lo there," "on this—on that side keep"; till the poor, erring, timid sheep become bewildered; then they cry unto the Lord in their troubles, and he saveth them out of their distresses, by leading them forth in the right way, that they might go to a city of habitations.

It is true I cannot boast of learning or education, but my soul may make her boast in the Lord, and glory in those things he hath wrought on the behalf of a poor unworthy sinner;—and after all, the greatest knowledge we can attain unto in this world is summed up in the words, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." O, what volumes are wrapped up in those few words! and how many are there, even in this land of light, who profess that they know God, yet in works deny him! To know him is to love him; is to hunger and thirst and strive for more conformity to his mind and will; seeks to be governed, guided, and directed by the principles, precepts and motives laid down in the word of the Lord.

The present order of things is, so to speak, the scaffolding by which the great Master Builder is erecting a temple comprised of living stones, which shall be an everlasting monument of his wisdom, power and grace, and capped with an eternal weight of glory. These are called out from the world, are possessed of another spirit, are held amenable to far higher laws than those by which the men of this world are governed. They are expected to be loyal to their Captain all through the conflict, and to wage an uncompromising warfare against all evil, both external and internal, and that not with carnal weapons, but with mightier far—even the two-edged sword of the Spirit. I say, this is a people that, by the very nature of things, must be a peculiar people. They are influenced by motives the world can neither approve nor comprehend. They are the children of faith, and have respect to the recompense of the reward. The promises of God to them are good as cash in hand; therefore being fully persuaded of them, they embrace them, and thereby declare plainly that they seek a country. Yes; thank God! a country. And O, how glad I am the Lord ever condescended to make it known to me. I look over this world as it now is, and wherever the eye rests it seems to rest on a suppressed volcano. Men's hearts already fail them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth. Peace seems to be flapping its wings, ready to take its upward flight; and tremor and consternation rule the hour.

Ah! what is the matter? Why, the building is about completed, and the scaffolding has already commenced going to pieces; and go to pieces it will, and all the wisdom of all the wisest statesmen in the world will not save it, for the Gentile times are fulfilled, and Gentile rule, Gentile authority and Gentile power will be put down, and God's peaceful, everlasting kingdom be established upon the ruins of the whole. Yes, yes; while the heart sickens at the present and just pending scenes, we who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us, can look forward to one bright spot when the last of earth's travailing pains shall have been accomplished, to that hour of peaceful rest, when He who is the rightful heir of earth's fair diadem shall come forth in majesty and glory, take the reins of governmental power into his own hands, and, by wisdom, righteousness and truth yet untold, shew to every wandering eye that He indeed is worthy the great and ponderous trust.

Now you want to know a little about the church in Springfield, and how it is prospering. Thank the Lord, I have no evil report to bring, but a very good one; for we have had of late such rich clusters dealt out to us, that the new wine pressed from them has gone down so sweetly as to cause even the lips of those that were asleep to speak. We have been through fire and water, but have been brought out into a wealthy place,—and we can now sing with the poet:—

Since all that I meet shall work for my good,
The bitter is sweet, the medicine's food;
Though painful at present, 'twill cease before long,
And then O how pleasant the conqueror's song!

And we, poor sinful creatures, cannot help praising God for the round about way he is leading us; for we do see and realize so much more of his goodness than those possibly can who are so smart as to manage to guide and keep themselves always right. I am not alone in this humble testimony, but many hearts in this place, when they read this report, will respond, Amen.

Your brother, in love that waters cannot quench nor time wear away.

For the Crisis.

To Our Preachers.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—I would like to ask if preachers of the gospel are under any special obligations whatever? It seems as though the negligence of some of our Brn. in certain directions is equivalent to a positive disavowal of the legal claims of certain contingencies. I do not believe God exonerates any man from duties that in themselves involve the salvation of lost men.

From time to time there have been questions propounded through the Crisis, by the more benighted class of God's people, to which no answering response has been given. Now, if I comprehend the mission of the "World's Crisis," it is devoted to the exposition of "all Bible truth." But from whom shall we expect this? I confess, for my own part, I have long deemed myself one of the least of those who struggle to obtain an imperishable crown. Have I not a right to inquire, through the medium of our paper, how I may best succeed in my project?

There have been published in the Crisis many questions from my pen, involving great central truths, of which not the smallest notice has been taken. I am young in the cause of Christ, therefore I am not ashamed to confess that I am ignorant of some of those inherent elements of classic truth. I have frequently called on my brethren to expound them, but in vain. If God's ministers refuse to answer, to whom shall we appeal? If their lives are consecrated to God, I claim a right, as one of His children, to make demands on their time and patience in expounding to the wandering disciple the things of God. But I am not the only complaining one. Many more ignorant (if possible) than I am have solicited the sympathies of the sages of the gospel, by way of instruction, and have received no satisfaction whatever. May I ask, if this is rightly dividing the word of truth?

Is this disclaimer applied in the right direction? If it is, let preachers of the gospel of Christ seek to shelter themselves from political controversy, and immolate their lives upon the altar of more pressing obligations, namely, saving men. I have given up the idea of expecting a direct disquisition of any proposition that I have thus far offered; but I hope some of our Brn. that comprehend their mission will feel that God regards the feeding as of his lambs of the most requisite importance; and that an absolution of this duty, is to make the links that bind His Israel together more brightly burnished by the breath of prayer.

Note from Eld. J. V. Himes.

Bro. Wendell:—I have just returned home, after an absence of some months at "Our Home" in Dansville, N. Y., in the pursuit of health. I am, by the blessing of God, better, and shall for the present labor with my people in this city.

I intend to meet with the brethren at the Wilbraham Camp Meeting. I trust to meet and greet many old friends and make new ones. It is my earnest prayer, that God will crown the meeting with unity, the outpouring of his Spirit, and the salvation of souls.

By your permission I would like to say to my old friends, that after a long scene of sickness, both of myself and some of my household, I find myself in needy circumstances. And this may meet the eye of some old friend and fellow soldier, with whom I have fought in the battles of the Lord, who has been more fortunate than myself—if so, he may remember one, who from first to last in our great cause has tried to be true and faithful, in the thickest of the fight. Address, Joshua V. Himes, Boston, Mass.

"Every Body's Book."

I have re-published that part of "Every Body's Book" under the head of the "Bible View of the Personality of God;" and, "the Devil, his origin, personality, power and doom," with an addition of eight and a half pages, showing his form and appearance and powers of locomotion. Price, $4 per 100; 50 cents per dozen, or 6 cents single. The money must accompany the order, with enough to pay the postage, which will be 1 cent a book, or 10 cts. on a dozen.

Correspondence.

From Bro. C. B. Turner.

Bro. Wendell:—There is a drawing together among the few in this place, and I hope to see the cause arise again in Syracuse. There are some good tried christians here, and, thank the Lord, they are making an effort for the cause of truth. We have secured a good Hall, in a good location, and last Sunday we met in the forenoon and organized our little society. After remarks from the brethren, we adopted the Christian covenant, after which Bro. John Shoods was elected Secretary and Treasurer, and then we appointed our Trustees for the Hall. We invite our ministering brethren going through here to give us a call and preach the word of life. We are poor, but we will do the best we can by you. Our hall is located on the corner of Clinton and Genesee Sts., in the Clinton Block, third story.

It was the desire of all present last Sunday, that we surround the table of the Lord in four weeks from that time, (Aug. 25). There will be preaching regularly every four weeks from that time—conference meetings every Sunday at 2 o'clock. We would like to have the brethren in the surrounding country meet with us. I have a circuit that takes me from home three weeks out of every four. The truth is like a two-edged sword. Thank the Lord. Will our preaching brethren call on us. You will find a home at my house, No. 21 North West Street. For further particulars write to John Shoods, Secretary.

Obituary Notices.

In Hartford, Ct., July 31st, my beloved mother, Mrs. E. Tiffany, wife of Jonathan Tiffany, fell asleep in Jesus, aged 72 years.

In her early youth she became a follower of Jesus, and her life has ever been that of a faithful, consistent christian. Of an even temperament, mild and pleasant disposition, retiring and unassuming in manner, her religion was not so much marked by loud profession, as by a close and humble walk with God. Those prized her most who knew her best, and by them her many virtues and endearing traits will be ever held in fond remembrance; "and being dead, she yet speaketh." Truly,

"None knew her but to love,
None spoke but in her praise."

For many years my mother has been deeply interested in the great truths connected with the coming and kingdom of Jesus, and it can be truly said, "she loved his appearing." To the resurrection of the dead she looked for her reward and crown. For some time she had been in failing health, and has been perfectly conscious that her work was nearly finished. It has been well done, and, like a shock of corn in its maturity—"fully ripe," she has gone down to the grave.

Her last illness was sudden and severe. July 28th, she was in her accustomed place in church, (the South Baptist, of which she was a member,) and there felt the premonitory symptoms (pleurisy) of her approaching illness. She lived until Wednesday afternoon, and then without a struggle sweetly fell asleep, leaving an aged companion and six children to mourn her loss. It was the privilege of the writer to be with her, to minister to her wants, and to receive from her lips those assurances of love, of faith and hope in Jesus, which are so comforting to the hearts of the bereaved. A few hours before she slept, she recognized all her family, expressed a perfect willingness to die, and the hope of meeting them all in a little while, where parting words will never be spoken, and left a message for the absent ones. The grace of God has been wonderfully manifested to all the afflicted ones during this bereavement, —the terror and gloom of death and the grave being dispelled by the presence of the heavenly Comforter.

The hour at my mother's grave will never be forgotten by those present. As they laid her down in her resting place, and Eld. Cushman spoke of the blessed hope of the resurrection, a bright sunbeam fell upon and into the tomb, reflecting back into all our hearts such a sweet influence of heavenly peace, that we were enabled without a tear to leave her there, to rest quietly with some she loved, till the morning dawns.

Dear mother! we miss thy pleasant voice, thy chair is vacant; thy calm, sweet face we see no more; our father's heart is lonely. Thy many prayers, so long and fervently offered for thy loved ones, are ended—not lost—they are lodged before the throne. Sweet be thy rest from all the strife and ills of earth. Sleep peacefully 'mid the flowers, with that pleasant smile upon thy lips. The morning hasteth,—thou wilt waken soon.

Louisa J. Beach.

August 10th, Elmer Ellsworth, aged eight weeks, son of Andrew and Ellen Johnson.

"Thus saith the Lord, a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping, Rachel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord; refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Died, in East Boston, Aug. 3d, Carrie B. Francis, daughter of William J. and Mary C. Francis, aged one month and 12 days.

Died in Westboro, July 17th, Bro. John Sanderson, aged 58 years.

Bro. S. was for many years a consistent believer in the second personal appearing of our Savior unto salvation to all that look for him. He continued firm in the faith of the gospel to the last. He now sleeps to receive a crown of life when He who is his life shall appear.

J. S. W.

Died, at Warwick, Aug. 2d, at the residence of her father, Sister Susan Kinnecum, aged 18 years.

Our sister never made a public profession, but she found peace in her Savior, and died in a very calm and happy state of mind. She has left parents, brothers and sisters, and a young man to whom she was engaged to be married. They mourn not as those who have no hope. Funeral at the Apponaug Church. Services by the writer.

A Fast.

In accordance with our usual custom, we would propose to those interested in our great annual campmeeting at Wilbraham, that Friday, Aug. 23d, be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, when earnest petitions shall be made to the Lord, that great good may result from our contemplated feast of tabernacles. Never have we, as a people, needed special help from the Lord more than at the present hour. In these perilous times, let us remember that all our help must come from Him.

Notices, &c.

GENERAL CAMPMEETING at Wilbraham, Mass.

Providence permitting, a general camp meeting will commence at Wilbraham, on the old ground upon the hill, Monday, Aug. 26th, and continue one week.

Ample accommodations will be provided for board and horse keeping. Board at 50 cents per day; or one shilling per meal for breakfast and supper, and 25 cents for dinner. The boarding department this year is under the charge of the Committee, and any profits accruing from the same, will go to the support of the meeting. The fare is reduced to half price on the Western R. R., which will be $2 50 from Boston, for both ways. Fare is also reduced one half on the Vermont and Mass., and Conn. River R. R., from Brattleboro, South Vernon, and intermediate stations. Camp meeting tickets should be called for at the above stations, which will be good for both ways.

Arrangements have been made with the Eastern R. R. Co., by which those taking the cars from Portsmouth and intermediate places for Boston, paying full fares at the ticket offices, can have free return passes by application to Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover street, Boston, Mass., when they purchase their Western tickets for the camp ground. Those coming from Albany will pay full fare to the camp ground, and receive free return passes from the Camp meeting Committee. Those coming from North Adams, Pittsfield, and intermediate places, also from Worcester, and intermediate stations, will call for camp meeting tickets at the ticket office.

N. B. All who wish to take the cars from Boston for the camp meeting, should remember that they can obtain their tickets only at Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover street, where they may be obtained any day during the meeting. Cars, which stop at the camp ground, leave the Boston and Worcester depot, in Boston, at 7 o'clock, A. M., and 1 30 P. M.

The cars leave Springfield for the camp ground at 7.15 and 10 1-2 A. M., and 5 P. M.

Geo. T. Adams, }

The camp ground at Wilbraham is pleasantly located in a neighborhood noted for sustaining good order, and for acts of kindness towards those who assemble there from year to year to worship the God of our fathers. We hope to see a goodly number of the Lord's dear children, and that much good will be accomplished. Those who were present last year will remember that the great object of the meeting was for the salvation of sinners, and the comfort of saints, and that the effort was greatly blessed. We hope that our brethren and sisters will come again this year, strong in the Lord, and bring their unconverted children and neighbors for the purpose of persuading them to be christians.

All who believe in Christ as our Savior, and are willing to labor for the salvation of sinners, are invited to take part in the meetings. We would earnestly request all to make this meeting a subject of special prayer, that many wanderers may be reclaimed, the saints greatly strengthened, and the name of the Lord magnified among the people.

Camp Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Camp Meeting in the town of Dover, N. Y., about three miles from South Dover Station, Harlem R. R., three and one half miles from South Kent Station, Housatonic R. R., Conn., and one and a half miles west of Bull's Bridge, Housatonic River, to commence Sept. 10th, 1861, and held over the following Sunday. As this is a new field, and many have become interested, and are anxious to have a Camp Meeting, and want to hear more concerning the gospel hope, we hope that the preaching brethren will come filled with the Spirit of the gospel, and labor for the good of those that may come to this meeting. Brethren and sisters, also, come to labor; come with tents, and bedding and provisions as far as convenient. Arrangements will be made to keep horses, and also provide for those that cannot bring their own provisions.

All preaching brethren who may feel sent by the Lord to this meeting, we heartily invite to come.

Tent Meeting.

If the Lord will, there will be a Grove Meeting on the old ground, at the south side of Peach Pond, in North Salem, N. Y., four miles south west of Brewster's Station, on the Harlem R. R., commencing Wednesday, 2 o'clock, P. M., on the 4th day of September, and continuing over Sunday. Friends are invited to come, with tents and provisions. H. L. Hastings and others are expected to be present and preach the gospel of the kingdom of God.

Michigan Grove and Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Grove and Campmeeting in the town of Holly, Oakland County, Michigan, to commence Sept. 4th, 1861, and continue over Lord's day, and longer if thought proper. The meeting is to be held on the farm of Bro. Hiram Austin, five miles north and east of Holly Depot, situated on the Detroit and Milwaukie, R. R., and about one and a half miles east of the plank road leading from Holly to the city of Flint. And now, my dear brethren and sisters throughout the State of Michigan, I wish to give you all a short, but warm and earnest invitation to come to this gathering of the saints. As this is the first meeting of the kind ever held in the State, we do hope and pray most fervently that all brethren and sisters who can possibly arrange their domestic affairs, will come with tents and provisions to the encampment, and spend a week with each other in a warm-hearted love feast. The times call for such an assemblage. The signs in the natural, moral and political world are agitating multitudes, and they are inquiring, "What things are coming on the earth?" The times are most eventful. Our blessed Savior is soon coming on the earth, and now is a good time, my brethren, to work for God, for one another and for perishing humanity around us. Come, then, to this meeting; come with warm hearts; come filled with and praying in the Holy Ghost; come with a zeal worthy of the hope you cherish; come with Jesus stamped upon your affections; come abundantly prepared to take care of yourselves and others. Come from Grand Blanc, Flint, Saginaw, Flushing, Davison, Richfield, Tyrone, Pleasant Valley, Ypsilanti, Nankin, Grand Rapids, Detroit. Come from all over the State. This is not a sectional meeting because of peculiar views, but it embraces all that love the Lord's appearing and want to be saved when Jesus appears. Come, one and all, to glorify God, and come so as to be on the ground at the commencement of the meeting; do not fail in this. Let our noble and enterprising Sisters take hold of this cause and we are sure of success, by the blessing of God. Brethren Wolverton, Anable, Jerome, Roberts, Skinner, Doty, Richards, Adams, Austin, Servis, and the church generally through that section, are alive for such a gathering.

We hope to see as many of our preaching brethren from the different parts of the State as can come, and this invitation does not exclude any out of the State. We hope that if any of the servants of Christ in other States, or coming from the east about that time, will arrange to attend this meeting.

In behalf of the church,
A. H. S[illegible].

Camp Meeting.

A Camp Meeting will be held in the town of Sandisfield, eleven miles from Winsted depot, on the daily stage route from Winsted to Barrington, commencing Sept. 9th and continuing over the following Lord's day. Railroad fare from Hartford to Winsted $1.25; stage fare from Winsted to the camp ground 40 cents. Bro. H. L. Hastings is expected at this meeting, and others who are competent to meet the expectations of the people at such a meeting. We should be glad to extend a general invitation to the preaching brethren, with the assurance that they would be remunerated. We will say that the preachers who make the sacrifice to come, shall be provided for while here. Board for man and beast will be provided on reasonable terms. We hope to see all the brethren from the Farmington and Naugatuck valleys here, with their tents, to enjoy a feast in a dry and beautiful grove.

Wm. A. Fenn.

The Maine Annual Advent Conference.

The next session of this Conference will be held in Yarmouth, (in the Institute occupied by the Advent Church) Wednesday, Sept. 11th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. The brethren there intend to make ample provision for all the friends who attend. Those who come by cars, if on the Kennebec and Portland R. R., will leave the cars at Yarmouth Junction, about half a mile from the meeting. Those coming on the Waterville, Farmington, or Grand Trunk R. R., will leave at Yarmouth Station, a few rods from the meeting. Those coming from the Penobscot can take the boat to Portland, then the Grand R. R., eleven miles to Yarmouth. Call on George W. Harvey, George Humphrey, and R. R. York. It will be a good place for another friendly greeting of the pilgrims in this time of trouble. It may be the last. We hope to see all the Advent ministers of Maine who can work and worship in harmony and union, and as many other such brethren and sisters as can will attend.

Conference.

The Northern Illinois Conference of Adventists will be held in Shabbona, at Shabbona Grove, west side, near Bro. Norton's, commencing Sept. 4th, at 7 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. Bro. Chandler is expected with the New England mission tent. Provision will be made for those who cannot carry their provisions. All other preachers are invited to come. Come, dear brethren, in the name of the Lord, to labor for the salvation of men, for Jesus soon is coming.

H. G. McCulloch,
Secretary of Conference.

Campmeeting in Maine.

There will be a Campmeeting in Exeter, Me., near the old spot, by the Chamberlin meeting-house, commencing the first Monday in September next and continuing over the Sabbath. Brethren coming from the West by cars will stop at Newport, where there will be teams provided to convey them to the meeting. Those coming by water will come to Bangor, where they also will find teams in waiting. There will be a Boarding Tent on the ground to accommodate all who wish for board. We hope all who purpose to attend this meeting will be on the ground as early in the week as possible, and all who can will bring their tents and bedding as they will be very convenient for ourselves and for those who will not be able to bring them.

P. S. We shall meet the brethren on the steamboat wharf on the arrival of the first boat in the week, and if there are any who cannot come on that day, if they will inform us through the Crisis, or by private letter to D. E. Ireland, North Hermon, on what day they will be at Bangor, we will send a team for them. In behalf of the brethren,

Camp Meeting Notice.

The Annual Camp Meeting at Wilbraham will commence Monday, August 26th, and continue over the following Lord's day. It is expected that arrangements will be made with the various Rail Road companies, so that the fare will be reduced one half to those attending the meeting. Those of the friends who last year subscribed to help purchase the articles connected with the Boarding Department and to put the ground in order, who have not yet paid, are requested to forward the amount of their subscriptions, as soon as they can, to George T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., the receipt of which will be acknowledged in the Crisis. Full particulars hereafter.

For the Crisis.

This World is Growing Old!

This world is growing old! and passing swift away,
Like summer in its season, and each succeeding day.
This world is growing old, where sin and death is rife,
And naught can we behold but carnage, blood and strife.

This world is growing old! all nature seems to say;
Its hist'ry must yet be told at the judgment day!
This world is growing old, its beauty must decline—
Yet oh! it will soon be changed by a hand divine.

This world is growing old! ere long 't will pass from sight,
Like kings from earthly thrones, when God maintains his right.
This world is growing old, and soon must flee away,
Like chaff before the wind, in that eventful day!

This world is growing old! tempest-tossed and driv'n—
That world which "is to come" will be the promised heav'n.
This world is growing old, but should not cost a tear,
Since toward "that world" we're borne by every rolling year.

This world is growing old! soon, alas! it will shake,
When Christ from heav'n descends, and dust from dust shall wake;
Then new forms, unnumbered, shall in triumph proclaim,
Jesus, our King! thou hast to earth returned to reign!

This world is growing old! and sad are parting hours,
But we will meet again in Eden's lovely bowers.
"That world" will ne'er grow old, nor fade through ages giv'n,
When saints shall be one fold, and reign with Christ in heav'n.

For the Crisis.

The Hope of the Church.—No. 7.

We have given more attention to the "house of Jacob" over which Christ is to reign "forever," than we have or shall to other portions of the prophecies respecting the kingdom, for two reasons. 1. Other writers on this subject have passed over this point altogether, or else touched lightly upon it, without examining it closely in connection with other scriptures, to show who are meant by the "house of Jacob," and the circumstances attendant upon this reign. There has been too much amalgamation of the Israelite and the Gentile, as though because the middle wall of separation has been thrown down, admitting the believing Gentile to the same blessings, therefore they were now the chosen people above all others, and there was no more to be any identity recognized of the Jew as a nation—all distinction was removed forever at Christ's advent; all were on a level, and there were no specific promises made to a descendant of Jacob, more than to Gentiles. All were restored alike in the gospel dispensation, and whoever of Jew or Gentile embraced Christ by faith, were counted for the seed, to whom the promises of an eternal inheritance belong. Now this last is true; all who are of faith, in every nation, shall be blessed with faithful Abraham, but that the Jewish nation has ceased to be a nation—that they are not recognized in a different light from other nations—that there are not promises made to them as descendants of Jacob, and that this nationality will not exist during the reign of Christ, we do not believe. Both the Old and the New Testament recognize a distinction. Let any one take the Concordance and examine the passages respecting the "house of Jacob" or "Israel, (for they are the same, as Jacob and Israel were one person,) and see if, in every instance, they do not have reference to the descendants of Israel who came forth from Egypt, and possessed Canaan. And see also if it is not the "scattered" who are "gathered"—if it is not those who have been driven out of their own land who are to "return"—if it is not those who "rebelled" and polluted themselves with idols among the Gentiles who are to be cleansed, not on the condition of their repentance, and faith, "for the gifts and calling of God" touching this people "are without repentance." They are beloved for the fathers' sake, not their own.

Do you doubt this application? Turn to the 11th of Romans, and read it carefully. The apostle argues that a partial blindness hath happened to Israel—how long? "Till the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." What then? "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Has he made a promise to that effect? Yes; and the apostle cites you to it by quoting a part of it. Turn to Jer. 31: 31, and read the covenant he has promised to make with Israel, when he takes away their sins. Read also Ezek. 36: 2–33, and you will find that God has promised after that they are gathered from among the nations, and brought into their own land, he will cleanse them from all their sins and cause them to be ashamed for their evil ways, and from thence to obey him. These gifts of God to them are without repentance as a condition. As it respects the gospel, they are enemies for what? For the sake of the Gentiles, that through their unbelief and rejection of the gospel, salvation might come to them. How is it as it respects the "election?" "They are beloved for the fathers' sake." Then comes in the passage given as a reason why they are beloved for the fathers' sake. "For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance." Some understand the repentance to refer to God. If so, it changes not the question at [illegible]. It would then mean, that the election of God, touching this people, as embraced in the covenant made with the fathers, are without repentance—his purposes remain unchanged—they are elect still, beloved still, and as through their unbelief the Gentiles have obtained mercy, so likewise will the Gentiles be instrumental in their deliverance.

Now if the fall of them be the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness! Then they did not slumber that they should fall eternally, but only that a door might be thereby opened to the heathen. When the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, their time will have been accomplished, and then comes the time again for downtrodden Jerusalem to be exalted—the cast-off Israelite to be received—the blinding vail to be removed, and Christ accepted as David's son and rightful King; and seated on David's throne at Mt. Zion, he will "reign over the house of Jacob forever."

For the Crisis.

"Eternal Life."

"All that a man hath will he give for his life" Yes, for the few short fleeting years of this life of vanity and vexation of spirit, a man is ready to give all that he hath. And to observe the eagerness with which men cling to life, it makes the scripture true, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth"; for in the day of death a man hath not power over the spirit, or breath to retain it. He holds the present life at the mercy of Him in whose hands is the breath of the spirit of all flesh—men and beast alike; and if God be pleased to "gather unto himself his (man's) spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." Man's habitation is the dust; from it he came, by it he lives, and to it is he ever tending until death, and in death a man hath no pre-eminence over a beast, for they all have one spirit or breath; one thing befalleth them; as dieth the one, so dieth the other; all go to one place; (the state of death;) all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

Thus viewing man by the light of that word the entrance of which giveth light, we can only see man as he is, and is to be. Apart from the oracles of the living God, we have no knowledge of man's nature and destiny. We may speculate and talk very philosophically about immortal soul, deathless spirit, undying worm, God like nature, etc., etc., etc., and after all find that we are as far off in arriving at a true conclusion as when we started on this sea of speculation; and the reason is, that we start wrong, and of necessity bring ourselves back to where we started, with nothing gained, but much lost. It does appear that there is no vagary so great but that man will take hold of it, and seemingly prefer it to the great question "what shall a man give in exchange for his soul"—or life. Is there anything in creation that a man will give in exchange for his present life? Tell me, does a man freely give up his life for his country? Does patriotism, that altar upon which he professedly lays his life, cause him thus to do? Here let us pause and ask—Is there not another motive impelling men thus to act? If I were assured that any man entered the field of battle thinking other than that all who with him encounter their enemy would die before him, I might grant the conclusion, that a man would give his life unreservedly for his country; but knowing the bull-dog character of man, his readiness to avenge himself of his opponent, at any time, in any place, and under any circumstances, I beg to differ with those who call that patriotism which is simply the boiling over of indignation and thirst for revenge.

I may further ask—and this brings the subject home—who of us know any for whom we would voluntarily yield our life. Peter said, "though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." What does the sequel of Peter's life show? I am of course prepared to admit that many have laid down their life, but it has been for the hope they had of having it returned them. Abstractly considered, no man, or very few, if any, ever laid down their life for their friends, let alone their enemies—Jesus excepted.

What then can a man give or receive in exchange for his present life? The offer of untold wealth can by no possible means save him in the hour of death;—by no means by mortal man devisable can he deliver himself or his brother from the cold embraces of death. Here man wholly fails. Here, if never before, he must admit of incapacity. Here, a limit is put upon his boasted and self-confident abilities, and how wisely put!

What, and where is a remedy? If the scriptures of truth did not avail us here, vain is the help of man; for we are well assured, by the contradictory notions men set forth, that they are incompetent to the task. Men, civilized and uncivilized, are equally at loss to determine the question. When compared to the wisdom of God, the wisdom of this world is foolishness. By man's wisdom we never could find out God. It's all very well to talk about "first cause causes," "primaries," and the like; they are vain and empty sounds,—no significance in them, when you come to try to find out God by them; for by such words you can as well determine, (if determine you can,) the existence of a multitude of gods as one God. Ah! the Oracles come to our aid here,—here we find wisdom, and it is justified of her children. Comparatively, God's foolishness is greater than the combined wisdom of men, and his weakness is stronger than the strongest of men. By His word he changes the course of nature; he can say "thus far, and no farther"; he can break up the channels of the mighty deep, and cause them to overflow the earth;—in the language of Job, "Behold, he taketh away; who can hinder him? who will say unto him, What doest thou?" If God is not made known through the scriptures, I fear man will fail, search as he may to find them out.

Well, if by natural wisdom we cannot find out God, what is left us? It is that wisdom which comes from above, presented to us for our acceptance, that we may become wise unto salvation, unto life eternal. This eternal life, then, is a gift—a gratuity. It is is from God, through Jesus, to MORTAL man. It is a gift worthy our acceptance. It is from God, and that makes it worthy. To him and the Lamb will, in the ages to come, be ascribed all the glory by that great multitude whom no man can number—those who are gathered out of all nations, languages and tongues—those who shall stand purified because they have been tried and made white by the blood of the Lamb. They shall sing a song of deliverance, and cry salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

To what a destiny is man invited! The invitation is to all people, and yet, comparatively, how few will stand in "that day." Eternal life! Who of us us by experience know what it is? The very thought strikes wonder to our limited conception of so vast a subject. And this eternal life is offered to us as the free gift of God, if we by patient continuance in well doing seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness; by a faithful attention to the pre-requisites as belief of the gospel—such belief as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the ancient worthies of old possessed; and by obeying the all things commanded, and walking worthily of Him who has called us with this heavenly calling. The promise of eternal life is sure, for God that cannot lie has promised it. On this I rest all assurance: if I only know in whom I have believed, I also know that that which I have committed to Him he will keep (because able) against "that day." The exhortation is: "Hold fast the form of sound words, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus."

O. W. Y.

For the Crisis.

The Love of God.

The love of God divine—what does it purpose to do for us? Eternity can alone reveal; nay, not eternity, for that has no end;—thus unfathomed all and all unfathomable it must ever remain, while ages to ages succeed, and these to ages still of unending bliss! What a thought, that the Eternal One should condescend to be our physician, and bring the healing of his love to us in our lost condition, and thus prepare us for that future of which even our faint conceptions are overwhelming! And we so weak, so low, so erring in our natures! Wonderful power of love! It finds us polluted, and cleanses; low, degraded, sensual, and purifies, elevates and refines; with clouded and unbalanced reason, and clothes us in our right mind; giveth wisdom to the foolish, and to those who have no strength, it increaseth might. From the height of his dwelling-place in heaven he extends the arm of his salvation, the Incarnate God; and we, looking up by repentance and faith, find in Him sanctification, righteousness, and everlasting redemption.

What wonder that angels sang, "Glory to God in the highest," in view! while man, blind man, so slow to recognize the unpriced blessings of immortality. When the day of final adjudication shall have at length come, and we with faculties fully equal to the great change upon which we enter, scan the unending future on the one hand, and the cutting off of all existence on the other, who then shall say that there is no punishment to the wicked! Say also, (O insult to Deity!) no reward to the righteous! for until that reward can be measured, must the dread punishment of the wicked remain all unexpressed! O for the voice, the powers of Him, who, flying through mid heavens, proclaims the fullness of glad tidings to all mankind, that they may be induced to flee from the wrath to come, and find everlasting refuge under the protecting wings of the Almighty.

A Good Report.—Heb. 11: 2.

Serving God causes reproach often times. Men suffer shame for his name. They become the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things. But as persecutions pass, and persecuted and persecutors die, time works changes in the reputation of the steadfast and the true. The man who serves God will come right at last, even in the estimation of the multitude. They will honor the prophet whom their fathers persecuted and stoned. So we read that "by faith the elders were well reported of." The elders, or ancient men, are all those of whom Paul speaks in this chapter. The "good report" they obtained was that lasting memorial of their faith and love and zeal which serves as an example to all subsequent ages. By faith they made their mark in the world, and left their names amid the noble host who have fought the good fight and overcome the world. Of them it is said, and all these, whom God had named in the eleventh of Hebrews, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise—God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. Their reproach is turned away. They bear the world's scorn no more. Their names are "as ointment poured forth." They are more widely known than Alexander, or Cæsar, or Napoleon. The millions around them who were faithless seekers after fame are perished from history and memory, but these have obtained "a good report through faith," and are honored through all ages, and all lands, and among all nations. Yet they have not received the promised inheritance; they are not yet made perfect. They await the fullness of God's grace in the glory of the ages to come.

We may share that blessedness with them. We may, in spite of scorn and reproach, "obtain a good report through faith." We may so trust God in hours of darkness and trial, that he shall put upon us the honors which the faithful share. Let others seek in vanity and sin the applause of the worldly and profane. Let warriors struggle on fields of carnage for laurels wet with tears and red with gore; be it ours to cherish that faith by which the elders, the saints of old, obtained a good report. God hath said, "Them that honor me will I honor." Let us believe him and dare to honor him in all we do and say.

For the Crisis.

From Philadelphia.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—Having been sorely tried lately by the adversary, and having not resisted as firmly as I ought, I have experienced much loss of spirituality. I humbly but earnestly ask an interest in your prayers. I feel as desirous as ever—indeed now even more so—to spread the truths of the Bible, and to preach a soon coming Messiah; but there seems to be no way open at present. If any of the brethren are acquainted with any position that I could fill to earn a livelihood, and give as much time as possible to the performance of a work which is dear to my heart, I should rejoice to know it. It may appear novel, and to some unwise, if not presumption, to thus publicly request an interest in the prayers of the people of God; but feeling as I do deeply my own weakness, and the many evil influences surrounding me, and the work of the ministry unperformed for want of means and opportunities, and secular employment failing. I am constrained to seek for sympathy amongst those who are looking for deliverance likewise. Feeling grateful to God for deliverance from the snares of the wicked one, I am encouraged to persevere, and forgetting the things that are behind, I look forward to that which is before, being anxious to obtain immortality when Jesus comes. Our Master has gone away to prepare us a home, and he declares he will come again, that where he is, we may be also. We cannot go where he is, but he will come to us when all is ready. Let us be patient unto his coming. The paeparatory work is being rapidly accomplished. Brethren, pray for us. Yours in love and humility, THOS. W. SMITH.

Selections.

Unhallowed Prayer.

"What is the hope of the hypocrite? Will God hear his cry?"—Job 27: 8, 9.

An impenitent sinner never prays. In an inquiry after the causes of joylessness in the forms of prayer, the very first which meets us, in some instances, is the absence of piety. It is useless to search behind or beneath such a cause as this for a more recondite explanation of the evil. This is, doubtless, often all the interpretation that can be honestly given to a man's experience in addressing God. Other reasons for the lifelessness of his soul in prayer are rooted in this,—that he is not a christian.
